Nor is that quite right, Mr. President. It must be a reasonable doubt entertained by the jury under all the evidence in the case and under proper instructions from the court as to what a reasonable doubt is before they can acquit.

Viewed as we now view jury trials in criminal cases under modern rules of procedure, without the extreme technicalities of the common law to govern as at the time of the report in the Smith case, persons charged with offenses are not apt to be acquitted from a mere possible doubt; hence, one important reason for the action of the Senate at that time does not now exist. It is assumed, it is presumed, that there will be a fair and impartial trial by the petit jury without unreasonable delay, and that a defendant may not be acquitted on the possibility of a doubt instead of a reasonable doubt.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 and 2, and had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate No. 3 to the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce a Senate resolution, and request its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 234) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the Senate has had under consideration the message from the President of the United States dated February 24, 1923, in which the Senate is asked to consent to the signature by the United States of the protocol of December 16, 1920, establishing the Permanent Court of International Justice, and has likewise had under consideration the message from the President of the United States dated December 6, 1923, in which this proposal is again commended to the favorable consideration of the Senate; and

Whereas the proposal thus submitted and commended contemplates the signature of the protocol by the United States upon such conditions as will enable the United States to give its adherence to the court while remaining wholly free from any legal relationship to the League of Nations; and

Whereas it is desirable to express with greater precision the safeguards suggested in general terms in the message of President Harding: Now, be it therefore

Resolved by the Senate of the United States—

First. That the Senate approves the pending proposal and advises the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice upon the terms hereinafter specified.

Second. That permission to the United States to participate in the election of future judges should, in the opinion of the Senate, take the form of an amendment to those portions of the statute of the court which prescribe that the election shall be by the assembly and Council of the League of Nations.

Third. That the Senate advises the President to communicate with the States which have adhered to the court for the purpose of securing assent to such amendments to the protocol and the statute as will accomplish the disassociation of the court from the League of Nations.

Fourth. That the Senate advises and consents to the signature by the United States of the protocol of December 16, 1920, when the same shall have been amended as specified in the first annex to this resolution and when amendments shall have been made to the adjoined statute as specified in the second annex hereto.

Fifth. That the signature of the United States of America shall be understood to be affixed subject to the declaration that the United States disclaims all responsibility for the exercise by the court of the jurisdiction to render advisory opinions, and subject to the further declaration that the United States intends to adhere to the Monroe doctrine as a national policy and assumes no obligations inconsistent therewith.

Sixth. That the signature by the United States herein referred to is a signature to the protocol as set forth in this resolution but not to the so-called optional clause referred to in article 36, paragraph 2, of the statute of the court.

Seventh. That the Senate advises the President that a third international conference similar to The Hague conferences of 1899 and 1907 be called not later than the year 1926 for purposes which shall include the giving of effect to the recommendation of the committee of jurists upon the basis of whose report the court was established, regarding the clarification and further development of international law, and the codification thereof.

FIRST ANNEX TO THE RESOLUTION

PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE

The signatories of this protocol, through the undersigned, duly authorized, declare their acceptance of the adjoined statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, and hereby declare that they accept the jurisdiction of the court in accordance with the terms and subject to the conditions of the above-mentioned statute.

The present protocol shall be deposited, after ratification, with the secretary general of the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague. The said protocol shall remain open for signature by all nations generally recognized by treaty or diplomatic relations with the signatories.

The adjoined statute shall come into force as an amendment of or substitute for the existing statute as soon as all the signatories of the protocol of 16th December, 1920, shall have deposited their assent thereto with the secretary general of the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague in a single copy, the French and English texts of which shall both be authentic.

SECOND ANNEX TO THE RESOLUTION

A. Substantive amendments to the adjoined statute

(1) Strike out article 4 and substitute a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE 4

"The present judges and deputy judges constituting the Permanent Court of International Justice shall retain their offices under the statute of the court."

(2) Strike out the first paragraph of article 5 and substitute the following:

"ARTICLE 5

"Vacancies which occur either by expiration of term or otherwise shall be filled by the States which at that time are signatories to the protocol. At least three months before the date of an election to fill any such vacancy the secretary general of the Permanent Court of Arbitration shall address a written request to the members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration inviting them to undertake, within a given time, by national groups, the nomination of persons in a position to accept the duties of a member of the court."

(3) Strike out article 8 and substitute a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE 8

"Representatives of all the signatories to this protocol shall meet at such time and place as may be designated by the said secretary general and shall proceed to an election. The representatives of all signatories shall ballot as an electoral assembly. The States named in the Versailles treaty as the principal allied and associated powers, together with such five of the other signatory States as shall be selected by the signatories, shall ballot as a separate electoral council. The assembly of signatories and the council of signatories shall proceed independently of one another to elect, first, the judges, then the deputy judges. In each electoral body each signatory State shall have one vote; but not more than one vote shall be cast in either assembly or council by the British Empire and the States included therein."

(4) Strike out article 10 and substitute a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE 10

"Such nominee as shall receive a majority of votes in the electoral assembly and a majority of votes in the electoral council shall be elected a judge or deputy judge, as the case may be. In the event of more than one national of the same signatory State being elected by the votes of both the assembly and the council, the eldest of these only shall be considered as elected."

(5) Strike out article 34 and substitute a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE 34

"Only States can be parties in cases before the court."

(6) Strike out article 35 and substitute a new article, as follows:

"ARTICLE 35

"The court shall be open to all States generally recognized by treaty or diplomatic relations with the signatories.

"When a State which is not a signatory is a party to a dispute, the court will fix the amount which that party is to contribute toward the expenses of the court."

B. Formal amendments to carry the foregoing into effect

(1) In the following articles strike out "assembly (or "assembly of the League of Nations") and "council" (or "council of the League of Nations") and substitute "assembly of signatories" or "council of signatories," as the case may be:

Articles 3, 12, 32, and 41.

(2) In the following articles strike out "member of the League of Nations" and substitute "signatory State":

Articles 26 and 27.

(3) In the following articles strike out "the Secretary General of the League of Nations" and substitute "the Secretary General of the Permanent Court of Arbitration," articles 7 and 18.

(4) In article 1, after "established," substitute a period for a comma and strike out "in accordance with article 14 of the covenant of the League of Nations."

(5) In article 7 strike out the last six words and substitute "each of the signatories."

(6) Transfer the last two paragraphs of article 12 to a new article to be numbered article 13.

(7) Strike out in articles 12 and 31 "articles 4 and 5" and substitute "article 5."

(8) Strike out the first sentence of article 14 and transfer the residue of the article so that it shall become the last sentence in article 5 as amended.

(9) In article 36 strike out the first 17 words of paragraph 2 and substitute "a State," and for the words "they recognize," in the same paragraph, substitute "it recognizes."

(10) In article 40 strike out the last paragraph.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask leave also to submit a memorandum explanatory of the resolution, which I move be printed as a Senate document with the resolution and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the action of the House of Representatives relative to the amendments of the Senate to House bill 9192, being the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, agreeing to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1 and 2 to the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate No. 3.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 3.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wyoming to state the substance of the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Amendment No. 3 embodies the legislation proposing to correct the account against the Freer estate. We shall have to consider that matter at a later time, for the House of Representatives will not now agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. The result of the motion which the Senator has made, if agreed to, will be that the Senate amendment will go out of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and that will leave the matter stand for the present in the same position it now occupies.

Mr. ROBINSON. No action is taken upon it?

Mr. WARREN. No action is taken upon it, so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate recede from its amendment No. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS (S. DOC. NO. 114)

Mr. HARRELD submitted the following conference report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Provided, however, That the attorney or attorneys employed as herein provided may be assisted by the regular tribal attorney or attorneys employed under existing law under direction of the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. HARRELD,
CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HOMER P. SNYDER,
FREDK. W. DALLINGER,
W. W. HASTINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

AFFAIRS OF THE EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS OF NORTH CAROLINA (S. DOC. NO. 115)

Mr. HARRELD submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3852) providing for the final disposition of the affairs of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians of North Carolina, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate and in lieu thereof insert the following: "That in the preparation of said roll the act of the State of North Carolina of March 8, 1895, chapter 166, entitled 'An act to amend chapter 211, laws of 1889, relating to the charter of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians' shall be disregarded"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. HARRELD,
CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HOMER P. SNYDER,
FREDK. W. DALLINGER,
W. W. HASTINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The principal clerk will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fernald	Keyes	Shortridge
Ball	Ferris	King	Simmons
Bayard	Fess	Ladd	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	Lodge	Smoot
Brandegee	Frazier	McKinley	Spencer
Brookhart	George	McLean	Stanfield
Broussard	Gerry	McNary	Stanley
Bruce	Glass	Neely	Stephens
Bursum	Gooding	Norbeck	Sterling
Cameron	Hale	Norris	Swanson
Capper	Harreld	Oddie	Trammell
Caraway	Harris	Overman	Underwood
Colt	Harrison	Pepper	Wadsworth
Copeland	Heflin	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Cummins	Howell	Ralston	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Ransdell	Warren
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Reed, Pa.	Weller
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Wheeler
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Sheppard	Willis
Edwards	Kendrick	Shipstead

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I understand that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will go into executive session in about five minutes. Inasmuch as under another unanimous-consent agreement we are to meet at 8 o'clock to-night to consider unobjected bills on the calendar, I am going to ask that at the conclusion of the executive business we continue in regular session until 8 o'clock in order to give us an opportunity to go forward with the unfinished business. Likewise I have been asked by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am sympathetic with the purpose of the Senator to make progress with the bill he has in charge, but there has been a tacit arrangement for some days that the Senate would recess until 8 o'clock to-night at the conclusion of our proceedings to-day, and a number of Senators have made arrangements with that procedure in view. I do not think the Senate can remain in session continuously. I believe we ought to take a recess. I suggest that the Senator ask that his bill be temporarily laid aside and that the consideration of it be resumed to-morrow. I myself would make no objection to an earlier meeting to-morrow, if the Senator thinks it desirable.

Mr. EDGE. I was just about to conclude my statement by saying that I have been requested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to lay the unfinished business aside temporarily in order that the Agricultural appropriation bill may be considered. I had intended to do that at the conclusion of the executive session. So I am meeting the request of the Senator from Arkansas as well as the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's proposal contemplated a continuous session.

Mr. EDGE. My proposal in addition contemplated a continuous session for the dual purpose of aiding in having the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill concluded, if possible, and that I might go on with the bill I have in charge.

Mr. ROBINSON. We all want to expedite the Agricultural appropriation bill, but it will be impracticable to remain in session until 8 o'clock and then proceed with the calendar after that hour.

Mr. EDGE. I am very glad indeed to try to meet the request of the Senator from Arkansas. May I make the suggestion, that at the conclusion of business this evening, at 11 o'clock, we take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that the unfinished business then be proceeded with, with the understanding that if the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill shall not have been concluded it will, of course, take precedence. I am extremely anxious to get some action on the bill I have in charge, and in that I believe I have the sympathy of a large majority of the Members of the Senate. I appreciate thoroughly that under the rules any subject can be taken up, and I also appreciate the importance of various subjects being taken up, but at the same time legislation is important, and I sincerely hope, without asking for unanimous consent, that on the convening of the Senate to-morrow we will be enabled to proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am very anxious that we shall take up the bill in charge of the Senator from New Jersey, to which he has just referred. I think it ought to be considered speedily and passed at the earliest moment possible. I was about to suggest to him that if he finds he can not get his arrangement for this afternoon, that we proceed with the bill to-morrow, and see if we can not get a night session to-morrow night and finish its consideration.

Mr. EDGE. I suggested yesterday that we have a night session to-morrow night, and I shall certainly suggest it again to-morrow, if we are not able to complete the consideration of the bill in the meantime.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as far as possible I would like to have some agreement, or at least some understanding, for the consideration of appropriation bills. The Agricultural appropriation bill has been ready for more than a week, and if we can conclude our business in executive session in a short time, I would like to have the Senate go back into legislative session and proceed as far as we can with that appropriation bill, fulfilling the engagement for a recess from 6 to 8, after which we will consider the calendar.

Then, when we adjourn to-night, I would like to have an adjournment taken until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, when, if we have not already finished the Agricultural appropriation bill, we could complete it. The point is that there are other appropriation bills ready for consideration, and we are very anxious to have them acted on at the earliest possible time. All I have to state now is that I shall ask, in executive session, if there be any time left this afternoon, that the Senate shall return to legislative session for the purpose of considering the Agricultural appropriation bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and, on motion of Mr. CURTIS (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will report Order of Business 464, the first order of business on the calendar.

SCHOONER "ITASCA"

The bill (S. 51) for the relief of the owner of the schooner Itasca and her master and crew was announced as first in order, and was considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the schooner Itasca arising out of the collision between said schooner and the United States submarine R–8 off Brenton Reef lightship, Newport, R. I., on the 20th day of August, 1920, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said schooner Itasca and by her master and crew, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs and interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum until said judgment or decree is satisfied, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think an explanation should be made of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] reported the bill and asked me to look after it in the event it was called this evening. The bill refers the claim to the Court of Claims for adjudication. It was called on a former occasion, and I myself objected to its consideration because it authorizes the court to render judgment, but I found that it is in the usual form in such cases, and I think there is no objection to it. A number of other bills following it on the calendar are in the same situation, Nos. 466, 467, 468, and 469. Those bills all merely provide for referring cases to the Court of Claims for hearing and determination, and I think they should be passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to make any objection to them, but it has been against our rule to allow the Court of Claims to render judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON. In this class of cases I myself made that statement on a former occasion, but upon investigation found that I was in error. The bill conforms to the precedents.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not for tort?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Court of Claims has no jury to assess damages. If the Senator has examined it, however, I do not object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have examined it and find that the bill conforms to precedents.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether it is usual to allow interest in favor of any claimants after judgment?

Mr. ROBINSON. After judgment is rendered, the judgment usually bears interest, but interest is not allowed on the claim prior to the judgment.

Mr. KING. Yes; I know that, but I do not have any recollection of a case in which provision was made that interest should be allowed after judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the uniform rule.

Mr. KING. It would seem to me that ought not to be the case until after final judgment. The bill would seem to indicate that interest would begin to run from the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had a case like that before the Committee on Appropriations where interest was claimed from the time judgment was taken in the court below when there was an appeal, and we refused to allow interest until after the final adjudication.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill provides only for interest after judgment and until judgment is satisfied, and I think that is proper. If an appeal should be erroneously made and the judgment of the lower court affirmed, every reason which would justify interest in case no appeal was taken would apply to justify interest where an appeal was taken.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator, if we allow interest at all, but I do not have any recollection of a case where interest was allowable even after judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is the rule. All judgments bear interest.

Mr. KING. I shall rely upon the judgment of the Senator from Arkansas. I have no knowledge of it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRY SIMPSON

The bill (S. 773) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Harry Simpson was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

EASTERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

The bill (S. 785) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Eastern Transportation Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owner of the barge Sweetser Linthicum, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said barge and the United States barge Old Dominion in tow of the United States tug Sagamore in Chesapeake Bay on the 25th day of August, 1918, may be sued for by the said Eastern Transportation Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and enter judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Eastern Transportation Co. or against the Eastern Transportation Co. in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BROOKLYN EASTERN DISTRICT TERMINAL

The bill (S. 1038) for the relief of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business in the city of New York, in said State, owner of the tugboat Integrity, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said tugboat and the United States hopper dredge Raritan, in New York Harbor, New York, on or about the 30th day of September, 1920, may be sued for by the said Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due against the United States in favor of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, or against the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same right of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by the order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCOW "W. T. C. NO. 35

The bill (S. 1039) for the relief of the owner of the scow W. T. C. No. 35 was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of William T. Charlesworth, a citizen of the State of New York, and owner of the scow W. T. C. Numbered 35, alleged to have been injured in Hell Gate, New York Harbor, N. Y., by reason of damages sustained in the collision with the United States ship Lake Tahoe on the 23d day of July, 1918, for and on account of the alleged damage to said W. T. C. No. 35 by reason of said collision with the United States ship Lake Tahoe, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court in admiralty, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, and damage, if any, shall be found to be due said owner, on the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That the libel in the suit herein authorized shall be filed not later than six months after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW YORK SANITARY UTILIZATION CO., SCOW "NO. 14"

The bill (S. 1040) for the relief of the owners of the New York Sanitary Utilization Co., scow No. 14, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and we read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the New York Sanitary Utilization Co., owner of the scow No. 14, alleged to have been injured in a collision with the United States dredge Raritan in the upper bay of New York, on the 9th day of March, 1916, for and on account of the alleged damage to said scow No. 14, by reason of said collision, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court, sitting as a court of admiralty; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any, shall be found to be due said owner, on the same principles and measure of liability with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That the libel in the suit herein authorized shall be filed not later than six months after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAINTENANCE OF RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The bill (S. 2836) relating to the deposit of funds available for maintenance of reclamation projects was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter funds available for the operation and maintenance of Federal irrigation projects may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be kept on deposit in banks within or near such projects, and the Secretary of the Interior shall require surety bonds in suitable amounts executed by acceptable surety companies to protect the United States against loss.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920

The bill (H. R. 6202) to amend sections 11 and 12 of the merchant marine act, 1920, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to state just briefly that this is a House bill, and the purpose of it is simply to amend sections 11 and 12 of the merchant marine act of 1920 so that part of the funds set aside for construction purposes may be used for Dieselizing some of the ships, up to the amount of $25,000,000, but those ships are not to be Dieselized until some one is ready to purchase the ships or they can be leased for a period of five years. It is a House measure and the Dieselizing development is considered of very great importance. It is being put into effect in ships of foreign countries, and it is hoped that we can follow the same policy.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I understand that the bill calls for an authorization to expend $25,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it does this. Under the shipping act a ship construction loan fund was created out of the funds received from the sale of ships, and so forth, up to $125,000,000 that may be loaned under certain restrictions for the construction of new ships. I understand there is about $66,000,000 in that fund. The bill simply permits the use of a part of that fund up to $25,000,000, if it should be required, in Dieselizing the ships. That can not be done with the funds under the law as it is now. Under the law as it is now the fund can be used only for the construction of new ships. This would permit the use of a part of the fund for Dieselizing ships that we already have.

Mr. FLETCHER. It would help very greatly in the disposition of some of the ships which we can not otherwise sell.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We think so.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government is entirely protected because under the terms of the bill we are bound to get back more than the amount we loan, and in addition to that we will get back the fair valuation of the ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under the law as it is they can loan up to two-thirds of the value of the ships, but under the amendment proposed in the bill they can only loan up to 50 per cent unless additional security of a satisfactory character to the board is furnished.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the report of the Senate committee unanimous?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that I do not like to object to a measure which two such distinguished Senators indorse, but I can not bring myself to support a bill until I know more about it. We know that the expenditures of the Shipping Board have been so unsatisfactory as to bring criticism if not condemnation from every quarter. Any recommendation by the Shipping Board I confess that I should look upon with—I will not say suspicion, but I should like to scrutinize it before I approve it. We have appropriated more than $3,000,000,000 to the Shipping Board, and all of its assets would not sell for $200,000,000. This is an authorization for an expenditure of $25,000,000 more, and will perhaps more quickly effectuate the complete liquidation of the entire concern. It will go into the hands of receivers, of course, and the sooner it is wiped off the map and charged to profit and loss the better for the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me read one clause from the bill:

Provided further, That no part of such fund shall be expended upon the reconditioning of any vessel unless the board shall have first made a binding contract for a satisfactory sale of such vessel in accordance with the provisions of this act, or for the charter or lease of such vessel for a period of not less than five years.

This is not specially a recommendation of the Shipping Board. The Merchant Marine Committee of the House spent, I think, a couple of months working over the problem and considering the question and preparing the bill. I believe it is really for the very great interest of the merchant marine. It will help us out. We have our troubles, and there is no question about it. We are trying to work to get out of the matter as best we can and build up our merchant marine. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The cost of operating a Dieselized ship would be much less than the operating cost of a coal burner.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the investigations, which I have made quite fully, if we are going to keep up at all with the other shipping countries, we have to have many of our ships Dieselized to meet the situation.

Mr. KING. Let me ask just another question, and I shall not object. Does not the Senator think it is unwise to permit this organization to sell its resources, its assets, its ships, and make no accounting to Congress, but utilize the funds which it receives in further expenditures? It seems to me that the organization, as well as every other public agency, when it sells property ought to cover the proceeds derived therefrom into the Treasury, and then the Congress may make an appropriation, if it desires to do so, for purposes of this character or any other purpose; but to turn the funds back into the Treasury and permit their expenditure by these agencies without authorization of Congress, it seems to me to be a very unwise and a very fatuous policy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We require that now, except as to this particular fund which they have to spend in a certain prescribed way. The Senator will remember that we appropriated $30,000,000, I think, in the last bill to help defray the expenses of the board, although we do allow them to use some of the proceeds in this way. It seems to me that it is absolutely essential in carrying on the business, which is really a commercial business. If we should require them to get out of the Treasury every dollar that they spend and to put every dollar of income they get from voyages, and so forth, into the Treasury, there would be a further handicap.

Mr. KING. I had reference more particularly to proceeds derived from the sale of property, from the sale of ships and accumulated stores and assets to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars. They have not accounted to the Treasury for the proceeds derived from the sale of those properties.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the proceeds from the sale of their ships must go into the Treasury, except as they go into this fund, which must be accounted for.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "economical," to insert the word "engines," and in line 10, after the word "with," to insert the word "engines," so as to make the clause read:

That section 11 of the merchant marine act, 1920, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 11. (a) That during a period of five years from the enactment of this act (merchant marine act of 1920) the board may annually set aside out of the revenues from sales and operations a sum not exceeding $25,000,000, to be known as its construction loan fund. The board may use such fund to the extent it thinks proper, upon such terms as the board may prescribe, in making loans to aid persons citizens of the United States in the construction by them in private shipyards or navy yards of the United States of vessels of the best and most efficient type for the establishment or maintenance of service on lines deemed desirable or necessary by the board, provided such vessels shall be equipped with the most modern, the most efficient, and the most economical engines, machinery, and commercial appliances or, in the equipment by them in private shipyards or navy yards of the United States of vessels already built, with engines, machinery, and commercial appliances of the type and kind mentioned."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 21, after the word "If," to insert the words "sufficient and satisfactory," and in line 24, after the word "but," to strike out the words "such additional amount shall not exceed one-half the market value of the additional security furnished, and," so as to make the clause read:

(e) No loan shall be for a greater sum than one-half the cost of the vessel or vessels to be constructed, or than one-half the cost of the equipment hereinbefore authorized for a vessel already built:

Provided, however, If sufficient and satisfactory security is furnished in addition to the mortgage on the vessel or vessels the board may increase the amount loaned, but in no case shall the total loan be for a greater sum than two-thirds of the cost of the vessel or vessels to be constructed, or than two-thirds of the cost of the equipment and its installation for vessels already built.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 2, line 6, after the words "shall be," I move to insert the words "fitted and," so that it will read "shall be fitted and equipped."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 2, line 8, after the words "or in the," I move to insert the words "outfitting and," so that it will read "in the outfitting and equipment."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF ALASKAN FISHERIES

The bill (H. R. 8143) for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to speak probably 15 or 20 minutes on this bill, so that I will ask that it go over to-night in the hope that in the very near future we shall be able to take up the bill when he may have the time he desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TUG FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, W. VA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5218) granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh Coal, Land & Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Nolan, in Mingo County, W. Va., to the Kentucky side, in Pike County, Ky.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1638) authorizing the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claim of Capt. David McD. Shearer for compensation for the adoption and use and acquisition by the United States Government of his patented inventions was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. This bill has passed the Senate on two or three former occasions. It proposes to authorize the Court of Claims to pass upon the claim of Captain Shearer.

Mr. OVERMAN. If Captain Shearer patented his inventions while he was an officer, the patents belong to the Government.

Mr. CURTIS. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] asked me to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the consideration of the bill. We can never get the bill passed. If Captain Shearer was an Army officer when his patent was granted, I repeat, it belongs to the Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, allow me to say that Captain Shearer claims that he developed his patents not as a result of any direction or employment by the Government, and that the Government, under the decision of the Supreme Court, is not entitled to take these patents without compensation. He wants the court to pass upon the claim.

Mr. OVERMAN. Congress has always turned such bills down. It has done so time and again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1740) to provide relief for the victims of the airplane accident at Langin Field was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3011) to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires that this bill be passed over, and the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1574) for the relief of John O'Neil was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, may I ask that the bill be temporarily passed over? The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] who introduced the bill will be here shortly, and he is very much interested in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BLACKFEET INDIAN ALLOTTEES, MONTANA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2879) to provide for the disposal of homestead allotments of deceased allottees within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont. It provides that the allotments of Blackfeet Indians designated as homesteads under section 10 of the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. p. 16), imposing restrictions on alienation, shall after the death of the original allottee be subject to partition, sale, issuance of patents in fee, or any other disposition authorized by existing law relating to Indian allotments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 626) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 147) for the relief of Albert Wood was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1230) to amend section 11 of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia," approved January 15, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1642) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose that bill will have to go over, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who reported it, is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF LANDS AT ADGER, IDAHO

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7500) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Adger, Ada County, Idaho, for railroad purposes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to sell and convey to the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, and authorized to do business in the State of Idaho, its successors and assigns, for a sand and gravel pit for railroad purposes, and at a price to be fixed by appraisement at not less than $25 per acre, and under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the following-described lands, situated in Ada County, Idaho:

All that part of the south half of the northeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 25, township 1 north, range 2 east, Boise meridian, and lot 3 and lot 4 of section 30, township 1 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, within the following-described area:

Beginning at the intersection of the present southwesterly right-of-way boundary of the main line of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., with the range line common to township 1 north, range 2 east, and township 1 north, range 3 east of the Boise meridian, 100 feet southwesterly, measured at right angles, from the center line of main track of said railroad, said intersection also bearing north, 1,619.63 feet from the section corner common to sections 25 and 36 of said township 1 north, range 2 east, and sections 30 and 31 of said township 1 north, range 3 east; thence north 51° 7' west, along said southwesterly right-of-way boundary, being 100 feet southwesterly from and parallel to said center line of main track for a distance of 2,660.22 feet; thence south 642.32 feet to a point in the east and west center line of said section 25, which is 600 feet southwesterly, measured at right angles, from the said center line of main track; thence south 51° 7' east along a line which is 600 feet southwesterly from and parallel to said center line of main track for a distance of 2,660.22 feet to a point in the said range line common to township 1 north, range 2 east, and township 1 north, range 3 east; thence north 89° 56' east, 795.36 feet, to a point in the said southwesterly right-of-way boundary; thence north 51° 7' west, along said southwesterly right-of-way boundary, being 100 feet southwesterly from and parallel to said center line of main track, for a distance of 1,021.76 feet, to the point of beginning, and containing, in all, 36.39 acres, more or less: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all gas, oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found at any time in the said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 2647) for the relief of Lena Garagnon Owens was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4012) to reimburse William H. Flagg and others for property destroyed by mail airplane No. 73, operated by the Post Office Department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EVA B. SHARON

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5136) for the relief of Eva B. Sharon. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eva B. Sharon, for repairing damages to her dwelling caused by blasting of rock in connection with construction of Le Claire Lock in the Mississippi River at Le Claire, Iowa, in September, 1916, the sum of $267.25, in full settlement of all damages against the Government.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire whether the work referred to in this bill was being done by contract or by the Government?

Mr. CUMMINS. As I understand, the work was done by the Government, and as the result of blasting, a poor woman's house which stood on the banks of the Mississippi River was damaged. The amount involved is only $267.25, and the claim is approved by the War Department and the engineers in charge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2518) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF LANDS TO COLORADO NATIONAL FOREST

The bill (H. R. 2713) to transfer certain lands of the United States from the Rocky Mountain National Park to the Colorado National Forest, Colo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to transfer those portions of the following-described tracts now within the Rocky Mountain National Park to the Colorado National Forest, and that they shall hereafter be subject to all laws relating to the use and administration of the national forests: Section 10; northwest quarter of southeast quarter, southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and the southwest quarter of section 11; northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, north half of the northwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 15; and the northeast quarter of section 16; township 6 north, range 75 west, sixth principal meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND IN FLOMATON, ALA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4437) to quiet titles to land in the municipality of Flomaton, State of Alabama.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to the lands situated in the municipality of Flomaton, State of Alabama, being 40 acres of land described as southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 34, township 1 north, range 8 east, of St. Stephens meridian, be, and the same are hereby, granted, released, and relinquished by the United States to the equitable owners of the equitable titles thereto and to their respective heirs and assigns forever, as fully and completely in every respect whatever as could be done by patents issued according to law: Provided, That the confirmations granted hereby shall amount only to a relinquishment of any title that the United States has or is supposed to have in and to any of said lands, and shall not be construed to abridge, impair, injure, prejudice, or divest in any manner any valid right, title, and interest of any person or body corporate whatever, the true intent of this act being to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of Alabama including the laws of prescriptions, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDGAR WILLIAM MILLER

The bill (S. 3170) for the relief of Edgar William Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the bill unless I have an explanation of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this is a case which appealed very strongly to the members of the Committee on Military Affairs. This officer was court-martialed in 1914 for what I might describe as bad habits. He was reduced a large number of files eventually, but the first sentence of the court-martial was dismissal from the Army.

Mr. KING. Was he a West Pointer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. He is a medical officer; he is a Regular Army officer, however. As I have said, he was at first sentenced to dismissal from the Army. General Crowder, who was Judge Advocate General of the Army at that time, in consultation with the then Secretary of War persuaded the Secretary to lighten the sentence into a heavy reduction of files. A letter from General Crowder in the case indicates that he assured Secretary Baker that he would be personally responsible, if such a thing were possible, for this officer's future good behavior. The Secretary of War modified the sentence in that way. Two years later he went into the World War.

This officer became the commander of the ambulance companies of the Second Division and finally chief surgeon of the Second Division and was with that division through its entire active service in France. He received, as I recollect, three citations for bravery and excellent administrative ability and came out of the war with splendid credit to himself.

We are now in the year 1924. His dereliction took place 10 years ago. His habits have been perfect since then, and in the meantime he has distinguished himself. The present Judge Advocate General of the Army and the Secretary of War join in a recommendation to Congress to the effect that this officer has been punished enough. He has lost six years of promotion, being now six years in the matter of promotion behind the place which he would have occupied on the promotion list of the Medical Corps had he not been court-martialed back in 1914.

This bill is to restore to that splendid officer the place that he would have occupied to-day in the Medical Corps list were it not for that old court-martial. The officer has earned it, and the Military Affairs Committee begs the Senate to do justice to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President of the United States, in his discretion, to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Edgar William Miller, now a major in the Medical Corps, Regular Army, a lieutenant colonel of the Medical Corps, Regular Army, to take rank at the foot of the list of lieutenant colonels, Medical Corps; but no back pay or allowance shall accure as a result of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF WATER AND SEWER MAINS, CORINTH, MISS.

The bill (S. 3026) authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the city of Corinth, Miss., to construct, operate, and maintain water and sewer mains under and along the Government approach roadway to the Corinth National Cemetery, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to permit the city of Corinth, Miss., to construct, operate, and maintain water and sewer mains under and along the Government approach roadway to the Corinth National Cemetery, on such terms and conditions as he deems advisable, and without expense to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN ACADEMY IN ROME

The bill (S. 2834) relating to the American Academy in Rome was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to permit the American Academy in Rome to enlarge its purposes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1912, is amended by striking out "$3,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$10,000,000."

SEC. 2. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American Academy in Rome," approved March 2, 1905, as amended, is hereby repealed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain what this bill means? Does it involve simply an increase in the capital stock of this corporation?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the American Academy in Rome was organized by artists, sculptors, and painters at the time of the Chicago World Fair in order to establish and maintain in Rome a center for the artistic education of American students studying abroad. At that time the Congress granted a charter to the academy, but, because it was supposed the academy might become a suppliant for appropriations of public money, a very low limitation was placed upon the value of the property which it was to be permitted to acquire and a provision was inserted in the charter to the effect that nobody who was an officeholder of the Federal Government should be a trustee in the institution.

Time has passed on, and the academy has always been self-sustaining; it has never made and never will make an application for appropriations, but it has acquired valuable real estate, and endowments have been given to it by will and deed. It is one of the greatest institutions now maintained by Americans in the Old World.

The two amendments which if this bill passes will be perfected are, first, to raise the limit of the total value of property which the institution may acquire, and, in the second place, to remove the provision to the effect that the office of trustee is incompatible with the holding of office under the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the bill impose any liability or obligation on the Government of the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. None whatever.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will any appropriation or expenditure of public funds be necessary to effectuate its purposes?

Mr. PEPPER. None at all, sir. The institution is abundantly self-supporting, and it is because it is so prosperous that it has become necessary to ask for an amendment raising the limit of the value of the property which the institution is permitted to hold. The bill has been reported by unanimous vote of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAINES STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4981) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permission to the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to widen Haines Street in front of the national cemetery, Philadelphia, Pa. It authorizes the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to permit the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to use and occupy for street purposes all or any part of a strip of land, 8 feet 6 inches in width, off the south side of the Philadelphia National Cemetery, in that city, and along the Haines Street frontage of the cemetery, but the city shall remove the present stone wall marking the boundary line between the cemetery and the street, and grade, build, and maintain a sidewalk and curb along the frontage of the cemetery and care for and maintain the street the same as other public streets of the city.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2570) to provide for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign trade zones in ports of entry of the United States, to expedite and encourage foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we can consider that bill under the unanimous-consent rule. The bill was incorporated as an amendment in the tariff law that was passed in the preceding Congress, but went out in conference. Under the circumstances I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF ANTELOPE AND OTHER GAME ANIMALS AND BIRDS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2761) to authorize the withdrawal of lands for the protection of antelope and other game animals and birds.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to valid existing rights and entries heretofore initiated under the public land laws, any or all of the following-described lands in Government ownership may be withdrawn from entry and disposition by proclamation of the President for the purpose of protecting and propagating antelope and other game animals and birds: National forest lands—Township 18 north, range 7 east, Black Hills meridian, section 24, south half, and south half north half; section 25, all; township 18 north, range 8 east, sections 17 to 20, inclusive; section 21, west half; sections 29 to 32, inclusive. Public lands—Township 18 north, range 7 east, section 5 to 9 inclusive; sections 13 to 23, inclusive; section 24, north half north half; sections 26 to 36, inclusive; and those parts of sections 3, 4, 10, and 11 lying south and west of the Riva Road: Provided, That the withdrawal of the lands herein authorized shall not affect existing withdrawals for national forest purposes.

SEC. 2. That the State of South Dakota is hereby authorized and permitted to erect and maintain a good, substantial fence inclosing in whole or in part such areas as may be designated and set aside by the President under the authority of section 1 hereof. The State shall erect and maintain such gates in this fence as may be required by the authorized agents of the Federal Government in the administration of the national forest lands embraced therein, or to provide ingress and egress to persons occupying lands within said inclosure. The right of the State to maintain said fence shall continue so long as the area designated by the President shall be given protection by the laws of the State of South Dakota as a game refuge.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be glad to have an explanation of the bill, particularly the second section which grants to the State of South Dakota permission to fence certain lands. I am not quite clear as to what is involved.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, complying with the request of the Senator from Utah, I wish to state that the purpose of this bill is to give the State permission to include some Government lands in a game preserve that we are about to provide for the protection of a remaining band of antelope, that species being nearly extinct. The State owns a great deal of land right next to the forest reserve, and this bill will permit them to include 6,000 acres in the United States forest reserve. There is no obligation on the part of the Government and there will be no appropriation asked for. The State will maintain it. It is merely a question of providing grazing grounds for the animals.

Mr. KING. I was about to inquire of the Senator whether there was any possibility of the State applying to the Federal Government for a part of the maintenance charge or the cost of upkeep?

Mr. NORBECK. No; I can assure the Senator they will not even ask for any.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the language of the bill would exculpate the Government from any liability?

Mr. NORBECK. Absolutely. The State government has no such thought. They have all the funds ready with which to do the work. It will be maintained by the game department of the State, which has a good annual revenue.

Mr. KING. It may not always be so prosperous.

Mr. NORBECK. Of course, that is a possibility.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 47) establishing a congressional committee to consider ways and means through legislation to lighten the responsibilities of the President was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CUSTER STATE PARK GAME SANCTUARY

The bill (S. 2699) to amend an act creating the Custer State Park Game Sanctuary in the State of South Dakota was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture the area designated as the Custer State Park Game Sanctuary under the provisions of the act of June 5, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 986), may by proclamation of the President be enlarged to embrace a total of not to exceed 46,000 acres, and the act of June 5, 1920, shall otherwise apply with equal force to the additional area authorized by this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does this bill purpose to create another national park?

Mr. NORBECK. No; it does not. The State now has a game sanctuary in South Dakota adjoining the State park. The State has a State park 8 miles by 12 in the forest. It already has 40 miles of game-tight fence inclosing herds of elk, deer, buffalo, and so forth; and in the State sanctuary itself the State has spent several thousand dollars for highways. The purpose of this bill is to enlarge the boundary so as to get the fence out of the rocky ridges and down on more level ground. It proposes no transfer of any property to the State. No money will be asked for. The Government retains the timber. The State has the right to fence the area for the protection of the animals, but is not allowed to kill them.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what reservations or restrictions there are by which the control of the property may be assumed by the Government later on if it should desire to do so?

Mr. NORBECK. This is not a new bill. This is an amendment to an act passed about four years ago increasing the acreage. That is the only change that is made. They will have the same powers that they have under the present law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this may be all right, but it does seem to me that where the Government transfers land to the State by proclamation or otherwise, giving the State control over it, there ought to be some restrictive provisions in the bill, some conditions under which the Government may reassert its title and resume control over the territory.

Mr. NORBECK. May I explain? I am afraid the Senator misunderstood me. There is no transfer of title. The title remains in the Government of the United States. The State of South Dakota will be permitted to fence this land and have the control of the grazing as long as it is used for that purpose. The Government retains all other control of it.

Mr. KING. Is there a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes, sir; there is a unanimous report. A similar bill has also been reported from the House committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA GAME COMMISSION

The bill (S. 2559) to establish an Alaska game commission, to protect game animals, land fur-bearing animals, and birds in Alaska, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. KING. Let the bill be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator reporting the bill what expense is contemplated to the Government or to Alaska?

Mr. NORBECK. None whatever. This is a measure in the interest of efficiency and economy. There are two or three reasons for passing it, but the main one is that at the present time there are two departments enforcing the game laws of Alaska. The Agricultural Department has game wardens looking after the fur-bearing animals and certain other things; the Interior Department has game wardens looking after the elk and moose, and so forth; and frequently two game wardens will be in the same territory, one under the Interior Department and the other under the Agricultural Department.

Mr. ROBINSON. This bill concentrates them in which department?

Mr. NORBECK. It makes the money that has been appropriated for the two departments available to be used under one of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Which department?

Mr. NORBECK. Under the Agricultural Department.

Mr. ROBINSON. The members of the commission receive no compensation?

Mr. NORBECK. The members of the commission will receive compensation. I said there were two or three reasons for the passage of the bill. One reason is that the people of Alaska complain bitterly about the rigidity of the present law and the lack of any chance to express themselves on it; so the purpose of the bill is to provide for a commission of five members, four of whom will be residents of Alaska, one from each of the judicial districts. Only one of them will be salaried. The others will have per diem and expenses, but the intention is to have a commission of five.

We must keep in mind the fact that Alaska is about half the size of the United States proper, that some of these wardens may be 2,000 miles apart and at places more, and this bill places more responsibility and authority on the people up there, hoping to get their cooperation. This is the one bill that has met with the approval of the people of Alaska and the two departments affected and all the animal lovers and the outdoor people, men like Hornaday, of New York City, and the Boone and Crockett Club, and other people who are trying to preserve our native game animals from extinction.

One of the troubles with the present law is that hunters may exterminate some species, whereas if we can get a regulation that is elastic they can set aside certain areas and protect them, and make the hunters go perhaps a little farther, in order to save certain species that are threatened with extinction.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, I think the object of conserving the game in Alaska is a meritorious one. I have had no opportunity of studying the provisions of this bill. I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota if the committee is unanimous?

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; it is. We had hearings.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator whether it meets with the approval of the Delegate from Alaska?

Mr. NORBECK. It does. Mr. SUTHERLAND is here, and interested in the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to say that a number of my constituents seem to be very much interested in this bill. They seem to be urging strongly that the bill be put through in the interest of conservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 13, line 1, after the word "sold," to strike out "for use within the Territory but not for export" and to insert "under such restrictions as the Secretary may deem to be appropriate"; in line 9, after the word "serving," to strike out "and" and to insert "or"; and in line 11, after the word "cannery," to insert "or other commercial," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. Regulations: That the Secretary of Agriculture, upon consultation with or recommendation from the commission, is hereby authorized and directed from time to time to determine when, to what extent, if at all, and by what means game animals, land fur-bearing animals, game birds, nongame birds, and nests or eggs of birds may be taken, possessed, transported, bought, or sold, and to adopt suitable regulations permitting and governing the same in accordance with such determinations, which regulations shall become effective 90 days after the date of publication thereof by the Secretary of Agriculture; but no such regulation shall permit any person to take any female yearling or calf moose, any doe yearling or fawn deer, or any female or lamb mountain sheep except under permit for scientific, propagation, or educational purposes; or to use any dog in taking game animals; or to sell the heads, hides, or horns of any game animals, except the hides of moose, caribou, deer, and mountain goat which the regulations may permit to be sold under such restrictions as the Secretary may deem to be appropriate; or to use any shotgun larger than a No. 10 gauge; or to use any airplane, steam or power launch, or any boat other than one propelled by paddle, oars, or pole in taking game animals or game birds; or to sell any game animals, game birds, or parts thereof, to the owner, master, or employee of any coastal or river steamer or commercial power or sail boat, or to procure for serving or to serve any such game animals, game birds, or parts thereof, in any cannery or other commercial mess house, or to the employees on any such steamer or boat; nor, except as herein provided, shall prohibit any Indian or Eskimo, prospector, or traveler to take animals or birds during the close season when he is in absolute need of food and other food is not available; but the shipment or sale of any animals or birds or parts thereof so taken shall not be permitted, except that the hides of animals so taken may be sold within the Territory; but the Secretary, by regulation, may prohibit such native Indians or Eskimos, prospectors, or travelers from taking any species of animals or birds for food during the close season in any section of the Territory within which he shall determine that the supply of such species of animals or birds is in danger of extermination; nor shall any such regulation contravene any of the provisions of the migratory bird treaty act and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 6, before the word "license," to insert "and trapping," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 11. License: Subdivision A. Nonresident hunting license.—That, except as otherwise permitted by this act, or by regulation made pursuant thereto, no nonresident shall take or possess any of the animals or birds protected by this act without first having procured a nonresident hunting and trapping license as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 17, after the word "legally," to strike out the word "taken" and to insert "acquired," and at the end of line 17, after the word "him," to strike out "not to exceed the number he could legally have taken during the two years immediately preceding his removal from the Territory," so as to make the paragraph read:

Subdivision B. Resident shipping license.—That no resident of the Territory shall export any game animal or part thereof, except that he may export for mounting and return to the Territory in any one year but not for sale, not to exceed two heads or trophies of each species of game animal legally killed by him, upon first procuring a resident shipping license as herein provided, but the Secretary may by regulation permit a citizen of the United States who has been a resident of the Territory for at least two years and who is removing his residence from the Territory to export trophies of game animals legally acquired by him, upon first procuring a resident shipping license as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, after the word "half-breeds," to insert "who have not severed their tribal relations by adopting a civilized mode of living or by exercising the right of franchise," so as to make the paragraph read:

Subdivision C. Resident hunting and trapping licenses: That the commission, whenever it shall deem expedient, may by regulation require residents of the Territory to procure resident hunting and trapping licenses authorizing them to take animals and birds protected by this act, and when such licenses shall have been required of residents the fee therefor shall be as follows: For each hunting license the sum of $2 and for each trapping license the sum of $2, but no such license shall be required of native-born Indians, Eskimos, or half-breeds who have not severed their tribal relations by adopting a civilized mode of living or by exercising the right of franchise. After the expiration of 60 days from the adoption of such regulation no resident shall take any animal or bird protected by this act without having first procured resident hunting and trapping licenses as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 25, after the word "half-breed," to insert "who has not severed his tribal relations by adopting a civilized mode of living or by exercising the right of franchise," so as to make the paragraph read:

Sudvision H. Fur dealers, licenses, fees: No person shall buy or sell the skins of fur-bearing animals, or engage in, carry on, or be concerned in the business of buying, selling, or trading in the skins of fur-bearing animals protected by this act without first having procured a license as herein provided, but no license shall be required of a native-born resident Indian, Eskimo, or half-breed who has not severed his tribal relations by adopting a civilized mode of living or by exercising the right of franchise, or of a hunter or trapper selling the skins of such animals which he has lawfully taken, or of a person not engaged or employed in the business of trading in such skins to purchase them for his own use but not for sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 5, after the word "the," to strike out "executive officer" and to insert "members of the commission"; in line 6, after the word "issued," to insert "by members of the commission and"; after line 17, to strike out "Nonresident big game hunting license, $50," and to insert "Nonresident big game, small game, and fur-bearing animal hunting and trapping license, $50"; after line 20, to strike out "Nonresident trapping license, $50"; after line 21, to strike out "Nonresident small game license, $10" and to insert "Nonresident small game hunting license, $10"; on page 19, line 1, before the word "for," to strike out "$20" and to insert "$5"; at the end of line 1, after the word "each," to strike out "moose"; in line 2, after the word "trophy," to strike out the comma and the words "and for each other trophy of big game, $10" and to insert "of big game"; and at the end of line 6, to strike out "$5" and to insert "$2," so as to make the subdivision read:

Subdivision I. Fees and applications for, and issuance of licenses: Licenses, with the exception of alien special licenses and resident shipping licenses, shall be issued by the commission through its members, game wardens, and other persons authorized by it in writing to sell licenses. Alien special licenses shall be issued only by the members of the commission, and resident shipping licenses shall be issued by members of the commission and by the collector of customs at the port of shipment. Application blanks for licenses shall be furnished by the commission and shall be in such form as the commission may by regulation determine; and each application shall be subscribed and sworn to by the applicant before an officer authorized to administer oaths in the Territory; and the members of the commission, and its game wardens and other persons authorized in writing by it to issue licenses are hereby authorized to administer oaths to applicants for such licenses. The applicant for a license shall accompany his application with a license fee as follows:

Nonresident big game, small game, and fur-bearing animal hunting and trapping license, $50.
Nonresident small game hunting license, $10.
Resident shipping and return license, $1 for each trophy.
Resident removing from Territory, $5 for each trophy of big game.
Registered guide license, $10.
Alien special license, $100.
Fur farm license, $2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 6, to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 17. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed as repealing or modifying in any manner section 6 of the act of Congress approved February 26, 1917 (39 Stat. L. p. 938), entitled "An act to establish the Mount McKinley National Park in the Territory of Alaska."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 13, to change the section number from "17" to "18."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE

The bill (H. R. 714) to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2155) to amend and modify the war risk insurance act was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION

The bill (S. 3016) to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to improve the parkway entrance was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the authority of the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission, as created in section 22 of the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. p. 885), is hereby extended so as to enable them to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, under the same procedure as authorized in the abovementioned act, that portion of the piece or parcel of land now described on the records of the assessor of the District of Columbia as parcel 66/2, which lies between Waterside Drive and Adams Mill Road and the southern boundary of the National Zoological Park and the street laid down to the north and west of square No. 2547 on the present plan of the permanent system of highways for the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 3077) to amend the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, creating the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see the Senator from Delaware here. I should like him to explain this bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, this bill increases the Public Utilities Commission from three to five. At present the Commissioners of the District are the Public Utilities Commission for Washington. Their time is so thoroughly taken up with other matters concerning the District that they do not have time to go thoroughly into the public utility valuations so that they can properly fix rates. This bill provides that one attorney shall be president of the board and shall devote his entire time to the work, and that one Army officer above the grade of captain shall be added.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] would not be very much interested in this bill?

Mr. BALL. Very much.

Mr. COPELAND. Is he in favor of it?

Mr. BALL. The hearings that have been conducted on the street railway fare question gave rise to the necessity for this amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Tennessee favor this amendment?

Mr. BALL. I am very sure he would. He discussed it with me one day, and I explained to him that we were so amending the law.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to be very sure that the Senator from Tennessee is satisfied, because he has given a great deal of study to this problem. I hate to interfere in the matter, but I think the bill ought to go over unless the Senator from Delaware is very certain that the Senator from Tennessee is satisfied with it.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New York will not object, because unless this bill passes to-night there will be no chance for it to become a law at this session, as it has to go over to the House; and in my judgment it is very important, in settling the controversy in which the Senator from Tennessee is interested, that this bill be passed.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator state what salaries are paid the members of this commission?

Mr. BALL. The Army officer, of course, receives no additional salary except an amount sufficient to bring his compensation up to that of the other commissioners. The attorney is paid the same salary as the present commissioners, which now, I think, is fixed at $6,000. Formerly it was $5,000.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What salary is to be paid the permanent commissioner?

Mr. BALL. The same salary, I think, as the other commissioners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913, section 8 of which creates the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out paragraph 97 of said section 8 and inserting in lieu thereof the following paragraph:

"PAR. 97. That all the powers created by this section and the duty of carrying this section into effect and enforcing the provisions thereof are hereby vested in a public utilities commission of the District of Columbia, to be composed of a citizen of the District of Columbia learned in the law, who shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be chairman of said commission, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and an officer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, whose lineal rank shall be above that of captain. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall be members of said public utilities commission by virtue of their office and shall exercise the duties of public utilities commissioners as additional and superadded powers to their powers and duties as Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The member of the commission to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and the officer of the Corps of Engineers who shall be detailed by the President of the United States as a member of said commission shall hold said office for the term of four years. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not receive any additional compensation for their added duties as members of said public utilities commission. The chairman of said commission shall receive a compensation equivalent to that of a Commissioner of the District of Columbia. The officer of the Corps of Engineers detailed as a member of said commission shall be paid such amount in addition to his Army pay and allowances as is necessary to make his salary equivalent to that of a Commissioner of the District of Columbia. The powers, authority, and duties heretofore imposed upon and granted the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as members of the public utilities commission shall be permanent and are hereby imposed on and granted to the present Commissioners of the District of Columbia and their successors in office. The chairman of said commission shall, in addition to his duties as chairman, act as the legal officer of said commission in any action pending before said commission or before any of the courts in which under the provisions of said section the commission is authorized to be represented by counsel, and shall be assisted in said duties by the general counsel of said commission now authorized by law. A majority of said commissioners shall constitute a quorum to do business, and any vacancy shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. Any investigation, inquiry, or hearing within the powers of the commission may be made or held by any commission, whose acts and orders when approved by the commission shall be deemed to be the order of the commission. The commission shall have power to adopt and publish rules to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all investigations and hearings pertaining to public utilities.

"No commissioner shall be interested directly or indirectly in any public utility or in any stock, bond, mortgage, or contract of any such public utility; and if any such commissioner shall voluntarily become so interested, his office shall ipso facto become vacant; and if any such commissioner shall become so interested otherwise than voluntarily, he shall within a reasonable time divest himself of such interest, and if he fails so to do his office shall become vacant. Before entering upon the duties of his office each commissioner, the secretary of the commission, the counsel of the commission, and every employee of said commission shall take and subscribe the constitutional oath of office and shall in addition thereto make oath or affirmation before and file with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia that he is not pecuniarily interested, voluntarily or involuntarily, in any public utility in the District of Columbia or elsewhere."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF JEWETT STREET

The bill (H. R. 6028) to change the name of Jewett Street west of Wisconsin Avenue to Cathedral Avenue was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 893) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MEMORIAL TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SERVICE MEN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 73) providing for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of erecting in Potomac Park, in the District of Columbia, a memorial to those members of the armed forces of the United States from the District of Columbia who served in the Great War was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on the Library, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "Stephan," to insert "J. R. McDonald, Gist Blair," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That a commission to be composed of Charles A. Baker, Edward F. Colladay, John Joy Edson, Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, Isaac Gans, E. Lester Jones, Arthur D. Marks, Frank B. Noyes, Anton Stephen, J. R. McDonald, Gist Blair, and any other person who with the approval of a majority of the commission is added thereto or substituted for any member thereof, is hereby created to be known as the District of Columbia Memorial Commission for the purpose of erecting in Potomac Park in the District of Columbia a memorial to those members of the military and naval forces of the United States from the District of Columbia who served their country in the Great War. Such memorial shall be of artistic design suitable for military music and shall take the place of the present wooden band stand in Potomac Park.

SEC. 2. That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army is hereby authorized and directed to select the site for the memorial and to grant permission for the erection of said memorial thereon: Provided, That the site, design, and plans for the memorial shall have been approved by the Joint Committee on the Library acting with the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts: Provided further, That the memorial shall be erected under the supervision of the said Chief of Engineers and that no part of the cost of erection shall be borne by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 87) authorizing the erection of a flagstaff at Fort Sumter, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ALMEDA LUCAS

The bill (S. 149) for the relief of Almeda Lucas was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator make an explanation of that bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I report the bill out from the committee.

Lucas obtained a grant of land in Tillamook County, Oreg., which was surveyed by the Government surveyors, and he located upon it and cleared about 10 or 14 acres and built some buildings on it. The testimony shows, under oath, that the buildings cost him upward of nine or ten thousand dollars. A neighbor located another survey, and when the neighbor's survey was put on the ground plan of the county by the Government surveyor it was found that there had been a mistake in Lucas's survey, and that this particular portion of land which he had cleared and built upon did not belong to him. Therefore it was taken away from him, so that he lost his labor and time of clearing 12 or 14 acres and the expense to which he had been put in erecting these buildings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we allow this it will be a very dangerous precedent. Frequently in the West, where we have public surveys and where we know that most of the original surveys were erroneous, we know of very great hardships which resulted from them, and I want to state now that if we adopt this precedent we will be opening the door to subject the Government to claims for very large sums.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill go over, then, Mr. President.

Mr. BAYARD. May I not finish?

Mr. McNARY. I feel that I should say in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Utah that frequently since I have been in the Senate, during my short service, we have had similar legislation passed. Here is the case of a widow with nine children, whose husband died on the land. The land was surveyed by the Government, and this man went on it and put up improvements costing $10,000. The Government subsequently found that the survey was erroneous, and this bill will award the widow one-half of the money her husband expended there during a period of 20 years. The Government's error was so apparent and so obvious to all those who looked into it, from the department and the committee, that the committee reported unanimously in favor of the relief for this widow and her children.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator if he does not know that many of the surveys, both upon agricultural as well as mining land, because of errors, errors oftentimes of the surveyors, and sometimes without their fault, sometimes because the datum line which had been established by the Government had been destroyed, resulted in duplicate entries, and in duplicate patents, in many instances, and that if we adopted this precedent, we would subject the Government to claims for compensation for all who have suffered by reason of any erroneous survey which was made. I ask the Senator if he does not regard it as a dangerous precedent?

Mr. BAYARD. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment? I will state to the Senator from Utah that this claim passed the Senate last year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that would not influence me at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I would further state to the Senator that he was present when it was passed. I sat beside him.

Mr. KING. There is no sanctity in our decisions, no certainty that they are right.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it does not establish a precedent at all. There have been literally thousands of claims less meritorious, involving the same principle, that have passed Congress. Here is an instance where the Government told a pioneer he could go on certain land and establish certain improvements; and taking upon that land a large family, he cleared of stumps 13 acres and constructed a home and substantial outbuildings to the extent of $10,000. He died, and his widow, after a resurvey was made, found that the Government had placed him on land on which the Government was not entitled to place him. The Government gets the land back, and all she is asking is to return her 50 per cent of the construction charges put upon the land by her husband.

Mr. KING. If the Government owns the land, and if, as the Senator says, the Government would get it back——

Mr. McNARY. The Government has it back.

Mr. KING. Then why does not the Government convey it to her?

Mr. McNARY. The Government has no opportunity so to do. If the Senator from Utah knew the history of public lands in the West, he would not propound such an inquiry.

Mr. KING. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will go over.

ALICE E. O'NEIL

Mr. EDGE. I ask unanimous consent that we return to order of business 480, Senate bill 1574, for the relief of John O'Neil, which was reached before I arrived in the Chamber and was passed over until I could be present. I would like to have the bill brought before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500"; in the same line to strike out "John O'Neil" and insert "Alice E. O'Neil"; and in line 7 to strike out "his" and insert "her," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Alice E. O'Neil, of Newark, N. J., as compensation for the death of her son, Edward L. O'Neil, seaman, first class, U. S. S. Wyoming, who was drowned in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, when obeying an order of a superior officer.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill for the relief of Alice E. O'Neil."

JAMES W. LAXSON

The bill (S. 367) for the relief of James W. Laxson, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator withhold his objection a moment until I explain the bill?

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. BAYARD. This bill is to pay the sum of $182 to the claimant, James W. Laxson. Laxson made an entry on a homestead and started to cut the timber off the land before the entry was completed. That was forbidden under the Government rules, unless he would use the timber himself; so the Government took the timber which was cut and sold it for $182, and paid the money by mistake into the Public Treasury instead of into a fund in the Interior Department.

At the end of five years, under the act, Laxson made good his entry. After he completed his entry the land was granted to him, but when he made his demand for the sum of $182, for which the timber had been sold, it was found that the money had been improperly turned into the General Treasury and not into the special fund provided, into which the money should have been paid.

Mr. DIAL. Very well; I do not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $182 to James W. Laxson for a refund covering timber taken from his homestead entry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANGARS IN FLYING FIELDS FOR THE AIR MAIL SERVICE

The bill (S. 1051) to authorize and provide for the payment of the amounts expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to listen a moment before the objection is insisted on.

Four States are very much interested in this bill, the States of Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, and Nebraska. This question has been studied at length by the department and by the subcommittee, of which I am chairman, of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and the department has recommended that the bill be passed. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection, and that the bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. DIAL. I am on the same committee, and I would like to accommodate my friend, but I shall have to insist on the bill going over.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hardly think the Senator would want to have the bill go over if he understood the circumstances. I happen to know something of this matter personally, because at my home, and in my private office, Otto Praeger, Assistant Postmaster General some four years ago, called on me in the interest of locating the through mail service. He made a very frank statement that the appropriation they had was not large enough, that on the North Platte they were going to arrange to build the hangars, and while he was not authorized to and could not make a contract, he stated to me that in the next estimate he would certainly cover these expenses.

He besought me to go out and try to raise the money, which I did. The city and county of Cheyenne put up $5,000 apiece, and the Commercial Club put up the balance, a matter of ten or twelve thousand dollars, to build a hangar. Then the citizens clubbed with me to clean up a tract of 200 acres, perfectly level, making it clean, and the Government is using it every day and every night, and has since that time, and has not paid a nickel. The Government has the use of the land and the use of the hangar.

I presume the other locations are much the same. Certainly it was an investment made with the expectation of receiving payment, and nothing prevented payment by the Government but the failure of the department in not sending in an estimate. It has been thoroughly investigated by the Post Office Department, and the Postmaster General has asked that we secure this legislation to cover these four places.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not a fact that every one of the stations named in this bill is now being used in the air mail service?

Mr. WARREN. Every day and every night.

Mr. PHIPPS. Every one of them is covered in the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Every one of them. They are the only ones in that thousand miles or more.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there are claims for hangars at different places over the West, and some of those routes have been abandoned. They were merely put in as experimental routes; the cities were anxious for the mail service, and they offered these inducements in order to get the Post Office Department to come out there.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will allow me, I wish to say that we conferred in the committee at one time over the bill, and that it was the opinion of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads that it would not be proper to make allowance for those stations where the Government was not deriving any benefit and was not continuing to use the stations.

The bill in its modified form as it now appears is strictly limited to those stations which are in actual daily, and I will also say nightly, use by the air mail service of the Post Office Department, and I hope the Senator will not insist upon his objection. This matter has had very long and careful consideration.

Mr. DIAL. My recollection is that some of these sites were offered without any contract having been made. The people were anxious to get the mail, and there was no contract made, and perhaps no expectation of any money being paid.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is very much mistaken in that.

Mr. DIAL. Afterwards they would come in with a bill, not only for these, but for other stations in different parts of the West.

Mr. WARREN. There are none others similar to these.

Mr. DIAL. If the Government takes people's property and uses it, it ought to pay for it. If it needs it in transporting the mail, it ought to pay for it. This air mail business is an experiment, anyway. Of course, the Government ought to pay for the stations if it uses them, but I am not willing to have the Government pay for some place where the people offer some location temporarily for the Government to experiment with it, to get the mail quickly in order to advertise the town.

Mr. ODDIE and Mr. PHIPPS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DIAL. I prefer not to yield. Let the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOSPITAL FACILITIES FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS

The bill (S. 3181) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide additional hospital facilities, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to provide additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities for patients of the United States Veterans' Bureau, by purchase and remodeling or extension of existing plants, and by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise, such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities to include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads, and trackage facilities leading thereto; and also to provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel; and also to provide proper and suitable recreational centers; and the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein. Such hospital plants to be constructed shall be of fireproof construction and existing plants purchased shall be remodeled to be fireproof, and the location and nature thereof, whether for the treatment of tuberculous, neuropsychiatric, or general medical and surgical cases, shall be in the discretion of the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, subject to the approval of the President: Provided, however, That the director, with the approval of the President, may utilize such suitable buildings, structures, and grounds now owned by the United States as may be available for the purposes aforesaid, and the President is hereby authorized, by Executive order, to transfer any such buildings, structures, and grounds to the United States Veterans' Bureau upon the request of the director thereof.

SEC. 2. That for carrying into effect the preceding paragraph relating to additional hospital and out-patient dispensary facilities there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. That not to exceed 3 per cent of this sum shall be available for the employment in the District of Columbia and in the field of necessary technical and clerical assistants at the customary rates of compensation, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the plans and specifications for the projects authorized herein and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses and field-office equipment and supplies in connection therewith.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I offer the following amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "Bureau," the Senator from Pennsylvania moves to insert the words "and facilities for a permanent national training school, at a cost not exceeding $350,000, for the blind who are beneficiaries of the United States Veterans' Bureau."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. FERNALD. I am very glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think a brief statement should be made explaining the amendment.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I would be very glad to have the speech dispensed with, but I really feel that perhaps I should not ask an appropriation of this size without explaining it.

The Government now maintains in the suburbs of Baltimore precisely such a training school as is intended to be erected out of this additional appropriation. The trouble is that the present school is built on leased ground; it is not at all fireproof, and the Government is housing in framed buildings, lined with beaver board, a large group of the most pathetic of all disabled veterans, men who are absolutely blind and absolutely helpless. Those buildings must be made fireproof, or fireproof buildings must be erected. I have been over them myself carefully, and I have always come away heartsick at the thought of the awful consequence of any possible fire there.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator has well justified the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 7, after the word "plant," insert the words "and training schools."

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 25, strike out "$6,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,850,000."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In justice to the amendment I ought to say that this has been submitted to the Director of the Veterans' Bureau and approved by him, to the Director of the Budget and approved by him, and to President Coolidge himself, and approved by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to add a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Add a new section to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

(a) For increase in the limit of cost of construction of those certain public buildings, heretofore authorized by Congress to be constructed and for which appropriations were made, referred to in Senate Document No. 28, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, $15,130,780, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

(b) For the construction of public buildings on those certain sites, heretofore acquired, for the construction of which buildings no appropriations were made, referred to in Senate Document No. 28, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, $23,557,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is that a general public-building proposition? If it is, I am afraid I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill and I do not like to do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. It provides for completing buildings where appropriations have already been made, but not in sufficient amount to complete the building. It is to complete buildings on sites that have already been purchased.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think that it should go on this bill, and if the Senator insists upon it I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida insist upon his amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not want to jeopardize the veterans' hospital bill. I thought the Senator would let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so.

Mr. FERNALD. I could hardly permit that myself.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator insists on objecting to the consideration of the whole bill, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws his amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if I understood aright that the bill provides for the construction of a single hospital building?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; it contemplates the erection of six buildings, a school building with rooms for instruction work in music and trades the blind can be taught, a dormitory building, including an infirmary, a recreation building, superintendent's quarters, houses for educational director and chief engineer, and eight double houses for married blinded veterans.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is it a single group of buildings?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; it is a single group of buildings.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How many patients is it expected to accommodate?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. At present there are something less than 100, but there are nearly 700 blinded veterans of the last war and it is desired to accommodate more than are now in readiness. It contemplates about 200. It will be capable of some expansion at a comparatively small cost.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It seems to me to be an enormous amount.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Three hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars is the preliminary estimate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the bill appropriates $6,500,000.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, $6,500,000 includes a great number of hospitals all over the United States. I did not catch the Senator's question. The details of the program are shown in full in the committee's report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure that the bill ought to have the unanimous indorsement not alone of Congress, but of the United States, because my mail has been filled for the last two weeks with letters from people who say, "Millions and millions for those who were injured, but nothing for those who are able-bodied." We who were in favor of the bonus have voted for the able-bodied, and certainly all of us are going to vote those who need help such as we have heard described to-night.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLDROYD COLLECTION OF LINCOLN RELICS

The bill (S. 2434) for the purchase of the Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection to the bill for a moment, until I can explain what it is.

Mr. DIAL. Very well.

Mr. WILLIS. Senators understand of course to what the bill applies. In this city is the house in which Abraham Lincoln died. In that house is the greatest collection of Lincoln mementos and Lincoln relics in the world. It has been collected by an old gentleman, Mr. Oldroyd, who commenced the collection early in the sixties, perhaps in 1861 or 1862. A public-spirited citizen of this country has already made the offer to the old gentleman that is embodied in the bill. Within a few days another offer has been made larger than the amount contemplated in the bill.

It seems to me, Mr. President, it would be a mistake to permit that great collection of relics of the greatest American to pass into private hands. Mr. Oldroyd is a gentleman with practically no income.

At his advanced age he has got to the place where some disposition must be made of the collection. It seems to me a matter of patriotic duty almost that the Government of the United States should take such action as to prevent the collection going into private hands which, if it did, in all probability would mean that it would be taken out of the city. At any rate the Lincoln relics ought to belong to the people. I trust the Senator from South Carolina will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have a very high regard for the memory of President Lincoln. It possibly might be well for these relics to belong to the Government, but this is a pretty sorry bill to my mind. It simply undertakes to appropriate $50,000 out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purchase of the entire Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics, and so forth. There is no competent official designated to pass upon the value of the relics. The Government would not know what it was getting, but would just take the word of some one about it. I submit it has been a long time since Mr. Lincoln's death for anyone to come here now and talk about buying his relics. If we are going to pass a bill at all it ought to be so framed as to put the matter in charge of some responsible person to see what we are buying and to know something as to the value.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DIAL. Not right now. I know nothing about Mr. Oldroyd and say nothing against him. I never heard of him before so far as I know. This is a loose way to legislate and I am going to object to the bill in its present shape. If it is put in the right shape and provision is made to have somebody investigate who knows something about it, that might be different, but under the bill as now worded the public would not know whether we were buying relics of Mr. Lincoln or relics of some other statesman.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit the bill to go over without prejudice?

Mr. DIAL. I shall be glad to hear from the Senator, but I will not change my mind until he changes the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be temporarily passed over.

BICENTENNIAL OF THE BIRTHDAY OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 85) authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the preparation and completion of plans for the comprehensive observance of that greatest of all historic events, the bicentennial of the birthday of George Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Whereas on February 22, 1932, will occur the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the father and founder of the American Republic; and

Whereas the significance of this event transcends in importance any other historic event of a similar kind that has ever before been commemorated by the Nation; and

Whereas past experience has taught that it takes from 5 to 10 years to complete fitting and adequate plans for the commemoration of outstanding historic events; and

Whereas heretofore the celebration of epochal events has always been marred by the incompletion of preparations, monuments, etc., necessitating delays in the inauguration of commemorations; and

Whereas if any commemoration of the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington that is commensurate with its importance and significance to the American people be held, then the time between the present day and the year 1932 is by no means too long for the completion and carrying out of plans: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission to be known as the United States commission for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington (hereinafter referred to as the commission) and to be composed of 19 commissioners, as follows:

The President of the United States; the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, ex officio; eight persons to be appointed by the President of the United States; four Senators by the President pro tempore of the Senate; and four Representatives by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The commissioners shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of ——— to be expended by the commission in accordance with the provisions of this resolution.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the commissioners, after promulgating to the American people an address relative to the reason of its creation and of its purpose, to prepare a plan or plans and a program for the signalizing of the event, to commemorate which they are brought into being; and to give due and proper consideration to any plan or plans which may be submitted to them; and to take such steps as may be necessary in the coordination and correlation of plans prepared by State commissions, or by bodies created under appointment by the governors of the respective States and by representative civic bodies; and if the participation of other nations in the commemoration be deemed advisable, to invite foreign governments to send representatives to engage in such participation.

SEC. 4. That when the commission shall have approved of a plan of celebration, then it shall submit for their consideration and approval such plan or plans, in so far as it or they may relate to the fine arts, to the Commissioner of Fine Arts, in Washington, for their approval, and in accordance with statutory requirements.

SEC. 5. That the commission, after selecting a chairman and a vice chairman from among their members, may employ a secretary and such other assistants as may be needed for clerical work connected with the duties of the commission and may also engage the services of expert advisors; and may fix their respective compensations within the amount appropriated for such purposes.

SEC. 6. The commissioners shall receive no compensation for their services, but shall be paid their actual and necessary traveling, hotel, and other expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties.

SEC. 7. The commission shall on or before the 4th of March, 1925, make a report to the Congress, in order that enabling legislation may be enacted in the carrying out of the plan or plans finally approved.

SEC. 8. That the commission hereby created shall expire within (one) (two) year after the expiration of the celebration, December 31, 1932.

SEC. 9. This joint resolution shall take effect immediately.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 3, in line 1, in the blank space, I move to insert the numerals "$10,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 3, line 1, after the words "sum of," insert "$10,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator whether this is to pay for the celebration or merely for the formulation of the program?

Mr. FESS. This is merely for the use of the commission of 19, or so much of it as may be necessary to plan the celebration.

Mr. KING. I do not see the necessity of any appropriation for merely planning the celebration. Of course, when we come to execute the plan we will require a very much larger sum than $10,000.

Mr. FESS. Very much larger; but there will have to be some clerical force to do the preliminary work. We have never yet had a celebration of this kind when time enough was given to put it into execution by the date it was to conducted. This is eight years hence, and that is not too much time, I think. This is merely to create the commission of 19, headed by the President, to make the recommendations. There will be some clerical assistance that we shall have to provide.

Mr. SPENCER. Do the members of the commission receive any compensation?

Mr. FESS. They do not.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think he is anticipating if the joint resolution provides, as I understand him, eight years in advance?

Mr. FESS. That is not too long. We have never yet had a celebration that was carried out at the time it was intended to be carried out, as the Senator knows.

Mr. KING. We celebrate the birthday of President Washington every year in a dignified way throughout the country, and very properly. I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. On page 4, in line 14, the committee desires to have it provide for two years. I therefore move to amend by striking out "one year" and inserting "two years," so as to read:

That the commission hereby created shall expire within two years after the expiration of the celebration, December 31, 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2284) to provide for the construction of certain public buildings in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. FERNALD. May I make just a brief statement to the Senator? He is a very shrewd, candid, careful, conservative business man, and he and I as a rule agree on many of these propositions. The matter involved in the bill is a cold proposition. The Government of the United States is paying rentals in this city to the amount of nearly $800,000 annually for public buildings. The rentals are increased all the time, from year to year, in a tremendous way. I shall be very brief. I realize that the bill involves apparently a large appropriation. But recalling that $700,000 to $800,000 in rental is being paid every year, and we are asking in the bill an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the erection of these buildings, Senators will readily appreciate the saving that will be made to the Government.

The rental is but a part of the expense to the Government. For instance, in the Agricultural Department there are 45 different units, and there are 28 of them in buildings rented by the Government. Every Senator knows, if he starts out for any one of those bureaus, that he has to go to a dozen or fifteen different places before he is liable to locate the man he wants to find.

The Director of the Internal Revenue Bureau has stated that there would be a saving in that particular bureau of more than $250,000 a year in his help. The same thing is true as to one or two of the other departments.

It seems to me it is time for the Government to begin erecting its own buildings. Since I have been chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds we have expended little or no money for the past six years. I believe that as a business proposition the bill ought to be passed.

Further, I desire to say that in some of the departments they are working the men and women under such conditions that if they were in the employ of a private company or corporation that company or corporation would be dragged into the courts. For instance, 125 young women working in one of the buildings last winter had to be dismissed day after day on account of the cold, it being impossible to keep the building properly heated. It is unwise to continue such conditions.

Now, we are about to add to our employees 4,000 more persons to administer the bonus law which has recently passed. I expect to bear the burdens imposed upon me with Christian fortitude, but I do believe that the Government ought to make provision for those employees now the bill has become a law. We ought to begin to provide for the administration of that act. I made the statement on the floor of the Senate in debating the bill that it would require about 2,000 additional employees, but I find that it will require more than 4,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KING. The statement was made before the Finance Committee that the number would not exceed 2,000. Of course, everybody knew that when the bill should be passed 4,000 would be required, and very soon 8,000 will be needed.

Mr. FERNALD. That doubtless will be true. The best estimate that we now have is 4,135, to be accurate. Those employees must be housed somewhere; they must have facilities for handling that business. It seems to me we ought to begin the erection of these public buildings now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The bill for which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] asks consideration authorizes the appropriation in the aggregate of the sum of $50,000,000. I inquire of the Senator whether that is the estimated amount which the buildings will cost, or whether it is expected that additional authorizations will be required in order to carry out the program which is contemplated in the bill?

Mr. FERNALD. It is expected that that sum will complete the buildings. I wish to say further that this bill has the approval of the President, and also of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. I repeat, it is simply a business proposition.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that a bill of such importance as this ought not to be discussed under the five-minute rule? If the Senator will answer that affirmatively, I think I can assure him that some of us will be glad to join with him in asking its consideration immediately at the conclusion of the bill that is now before the Senate. I have some amendments that I should like to offer to the bill, but we can not consider them under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FERNALD. I realize that.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the necessity of the construction of some of the buildings provided for in this bill, and we, it seems to me, ought to have embarked upon their construction several years ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think that an amendment should be added to the bill providing that these buildings shall be erected wherever it is possible to do so on Pennsylvania Avenue. We have a beautiful city here, but the main artery is the commonest street in the town. Under the present system magnificent buildings have been erected in places where they are out of sight. The Interior Department Building, for instance, is in an out-of-the-way place, some distance from other Government buildings where it is inconvenient to go to transact business. We ought to erect all these buildings on the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue, which was the original design of the architects who laid out the city of Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine has expired.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely wish to suggest that I will offer such an amendment to the pending bill if the Senator from Maine does not do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I will now propound to the Senator from Maine, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, a question. I ask the Senator from Maine to let the bill go over to-night, and some of us will join with him in having it called up at an early date.

Mr. FERNALD. I will allow the bill to go over, but will call it up at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to allow this bill to go through. I am on the committee from which it has been reported. I am accused of being a little economical, but I desire to say that this bill has had the most careful consideration. As has been stated by our able chairman, of course, we need the buildings; otherwise we are throwing money away by reason of the very high rentals which we have to pay for buildings entirely out of proportion of their worth. The only reason I dislike to advocate the passage of the bill is on account of the high cost of building, but it is a question either of the Government owning its buildings or giving away an equal amount and possibly more money in a short space of time for rent. The committee have discussed the bill most carefully, and it has been thoroughly considered. I think it ought to pass. The session is drawing to a close, and if we do not get the bill through now we shall not get the buildings for some time.

Mr. KING. The "king," the chairman of the committee, having spoken, the "premier" ought to accede to his request.

Mr. DIAL. I think the passage of the bill would be in the interest of real economy—that is the point—and I am glad to have some additional help from the "king."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE

The bill (S. 2232) to amend section 2 of the act approved February 15, 1893, entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection to the bill for a moment.

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to read a couple of sentences from a report on the bill which will explain its purpose. What I shall now read is from a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury. He says:

> In reply I beg to state that the effect of the passage of this bill will be to expedite the business of certain American steamship lines engaged in the coastwise commerce which have found it advantageous to touch at foreign ports, such as Victoria and Vancouver, British Columbia, near the northern frontiers of the United States. Under existing law and regulations, vessels engaged in this commerce are required to obtain bills of health and await quarantine inspection if their itinerary includes ports beyond those that may be classed as adjacent to the border. Inasmuch as the proposed law will not jeopardize in any way the public health of the United States, it is recommended that the same be enacted.

I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act approved February 15, 1893, entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," as amended February 27, 1921, is hereby amended by inserting at the end of the first paragraph thereof a new paragraph, as follows:
>
> "The provisions of the preceding paragraph shall not apply to vessels operating exclusively in trade between foreign ports on or near the northern frontier of the United States and ports in the United States; but the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, when, in his discretion, it is expedient for the preservation of the public health, to establish regulations governing such vessels."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERLEY MORSE & CO.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business No. 439. I was unavoidably absent in the earlier part of the session this evening.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement provided that we should begin the consideration of the calendar at Order of Business No. 464. Therefore, it will be impossible under the unanimous-consent agreement to go back to the point suggested by the Senator from New York.

LUKE RATIGAN

The bill (H. R. 1475) for the relief of Luke Ratigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to place the name of Luke Ratigan on the retired list of the Coast Guard as an oiler, first class, retired, at the rate of pay he would be entitled to receive had he held the rating of oiler, first class, when retired.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VESSEL FOR COAST GUARD DUTY IN ALASKA

The bill (H. R. 6817) to provide for the construction of a vessel for the Coast Guard was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mrs. President, I do not know whether the Senator has had an opportunity to read the report or not, but I should like to read just a sentence or two from it. The bill does not involve an actual appropriation, but it authorizes one, so that we can prepare to have a ship to take the place of the cutter Bear, that is now about 47 years old. Here is what is said in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which is printed in the report:

> The Coast Guard cutter Bear, a wooden vessel built in 1874, has for many years made an annual cruise into the Arctic Ocean for Coast Guard purposes and to extend medical and other aid to the inhabitants along the Arctic shores of Alaska. Her work in that section is too well and favorably known to need comment and too important to permit of interruption. The vessel has performed valiant service, but the duty has been strenuous and the craft has become worn out. It would not be economy to repair her further to keep her in condition for cruising in the Arctic Ocean, and there is no other Coast Guard vessel to take her place. A vessel to replace her must be specially constructed for working in the ice. There is an urgent necessity that a replacement of the Bear be provided for at the earliest practicable date.

If we should authorize this vessel, it would probably be a couple of years before it would be constructed. I merely suggest that for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that persons have stated to me that the Government now owns vessels which, with but light repairs, could be made suitable for service in this particular kind of work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, if that is true I would not ask for another vessel, but I think it will be found that there are no vessels now constructed that could be changed at any reasonable cost to perform that service. However, I am willing to let it go over for the present, and I will make inquiry concerning the matter from those who are in a position to know the facts.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF SUNDRY STREAMS

The bill (H. R. 8070) authorizing preliminary examinations and surveys of sundry streams with a view to the control of their floods was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will not object to the bill. Let me say to the Senator that after preliminary examinations have been made, before anything can be done toward the adoption of a project a survey must be made and a report made to Congress. All that this bill does is to provide for certain preliminary examinations and surveys with a view to controlling floods. The preliminary examinations that must be made entail only the expenditure of about $4,700. There are only two surveys provided for, one for the North Branch of the Susquehanna River, where a preliminary examination has been made at a cost of $8,000, and the other for the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers, where $25,000 is authorized to make the survey on the condition that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall contribute $25,000 more. I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator whether he believes that it is a wise and prudent and proper thing for the Government under the guise of furnishing navigable streams to appropriate further for the Trinity River—we know what the record of appropriation is with respect to that river—and the Brazos River and the Canadian River in New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not proposed to improve them with a view to navigation at all.

Mr. KING. But it is with a view to making surveys in order to authorize the expenditure of money upon them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is for the purpose of flood control and not for navigation at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is for the purpose of flood control, under the act of March, 1917. I join with the Senator from Washington in expressing the hope that the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any idea as to the ultimate cost that may be involved?

Mr. ROBINSON. That will depend entirely upon the result of the surveys. The flood control act requires before any existing project shall be modified or changed or a new project adopted that a survey shall be made and a report submitted to Congress and accepted by Congress. The object of a survey is to ascertain the cost, what Federal interest is involved, and the share of expense, if any, which the Federal Government should bear in making the necessary improvements.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me say that much more care is exercised than with reference to river and harbor matters. In the case of river and harbor improvements the survey, both preliminary and final, is authorized at one time, but in this instance a preliminary examination must be made and a report submitted to Congress, and then we must provide for a survey, and the report on that survey must be submitted to Congress before an appropriation is made.

Mr. FLETCHER. In addition to that the cost of each one of these undertakings is estimated for before the bill is prepared and the cost is specified in the bill. Each item is known in advance; so that we know exactly what its cost will be because it is set out in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me merely to make a short statement?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The State of Pennsylvania has already appropriated the $25,000 which is stated in the second section of the bill to be its share. It is a matter of vital importance to the people of the Allegheny and Monongahela and Ohio Valleys, and I hope very much that the Senate will pass the bill.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations to be made of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917:
>
> Trinity River, Tex.; Brazos River, Tex.; Canadian River, N. Mex., Tex., and Okla.; North Fork Canadian, Tex. and Okla.; Deep Fork, Virdigris, and Little River, Okla.; Cimarron River, N. Mex. and Okla.; Wolf and Fox Rivers, Wis.; West Fork of White River, Ind.; Guadalupe River, Tex.; Columbia River, between Martins Bluff and mouth of Lewis River, Wash.; Skagit River, Wash.; Pond River, Ky.; Colorado River, Tex.; Red River, Ark.
>
> The sum of $4,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be expended, out of any funds heretofore appropriated for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, to carry out the provisions of this section.
>
> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause surveys to be made of the following streams with a view to the control of their floods, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of "An act to provide for the control of the floods of the Mississippi River and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917:
>
> North Branch of the Susquehanna River, Pa. and N. Y., and the sum of $8,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose.
>
> Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers, and the sum of $25,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose: Provided, That no money hereby authorized to be appropriated shall be expended unless and until assurances have been given satisfactory to the Secretary of War that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will contribute a like sum of $25,000 for the purpose of making the survey hereby authorized; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania such sum of $25,000 and to expend the same as the $25,000 hereby authorized to be appropriated may be expended.

Mr. ROBINSON. I propose the following amendment: At the end of line 6 of page 2, strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words "and Arkansas River in Kansas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, since this bill passed the House a preliminary survey has been made and has come to Congress on the Puyallup River, Wash., recommending a final survey. So I propose the following amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The READING CLERK. After the word "purpose," on line 21, page 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

> Puyallup River, Wash.; and the sum of $5,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, to effectuate the amendment already agreed to, which I proposed a few minutes ago, I suggest the following amendment: In line 7, page 2, strike out "$4,700" and insert "$6,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "$4,700" and insert "$6,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CAROL E. REEVES

The bill (S. 2519) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Carol E. Reeves was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I sincerely hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of this bill, but will let it go through.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Does the Senator from Utah withdraw his objection?

Mr. KING. I will withhold my objection in order to have an explanation from the Senator.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Carol E. Reeves, on account of the death in 1919 of her husband, Harry L. Reeves, from disease incurred in the performance of his duty as a civilian employee of the War Department in Porto Rico during 1918, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Carol E. Reeves."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OLDROYD COLLECTION OF LINCOLN RELICS

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, a few moments ago Senate bill 2434 was temporarily passed over. I ask unanimous consent to return to that bill, having conferred with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from South Carolina and also with the Senator from North Carolina. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Attorney General are hereby designated as a commission with authority, in their discretion, to purchase the Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics, and that the sum of $50,000, if so much is by the commission deemed necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the commission to consummate such purchase.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the language is somewhat ambiguous. It authorizes the appropriation of $50,000 if the commission finds that amount is necessary. Why does it not use the usual language—"or so much thereof as may be necessary"?

Mr. WILLIS. I accept that amendment if the Senator will suggest where he desires it to come in. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest, too, in connection with the remarks made by the Senator from South Carolina, that this collection should be deposited in the Smithsonian Institution or in the National Museum in Washington.

Mr. WILLIS. I thought of that, and it seemed to me quite as well to let that go over until after it had been determined whether or not the purchase should be made. I accept the amendment suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, and accepted by the Senator from Ohio, will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out "if so much is by the commission deemed necessary" and insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANGARS AND FLYING FIELDS FOR AIR MAIL SERVICE

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Senate bill 1051, Order of Business 518. The Senator from South Carolina objected under a misunderstanding, and has now been assured that the amendments he desires have been incorporated in the bill by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to," to insert "investigate"; in line 5, after the word "citizens," to insert "found to be"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "Nebraska," to insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "Nebraska" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "or elsewhere"; in line 5, after the words "understanding with," to strike out "an" and insert "a duly authorized"; and in line 8, after the word "hereby," to insert "authorized to be," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate, adjust, reimburse, and pay to municipalities and citizens found to be entitled thereto the proper and just amounts heretofore expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields, including the lease and clearing of fields therefor, insurance, and other necessary expenses incurred in connection therewith, at Reno, Nev.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Cheyenne, Wyo.; North Platte, Nebr.; and Omaha, Nebr., for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department, where such hangars were constructed and such flying fields maintained under an understanding with a duly authorized officer or agent of the Post Office Department that reimbursement therefor would be made.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OGDEN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The bill (S. 660) for the relief of the Ogden Chamber of Commerce, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Let that go over.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I should like the Senate to know the facts of that bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask why no printed report or other report accompanies the bill?

Mr. SPENCER. There is a report. The Senator merely does not happen to have it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not appear in my file.

Mr. SPENCER. There is a report.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, in 1922 the Government requested the Chamber of Commerce of Ogden, Utah, to buy a tract of land which they needed for a water-supply station. The Ogden Chamber of Commerce bought it for $21,000, and held it for the Government for a number of months; and then the Government exercised their option, and bought it for the very same price for which the Chamber of Commerce had originally purchased it. During that time the Chamber of Commerce had to spend $630 in interest on the money which they had borrowed in order to buy this land, and this bill is to repay that interest money. Nobody made a cent of profit out of it. It is recommended by the Department of War as a bill in common honesty.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am very much afraid it will create a precedent, and therefore I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2586) for the relief of Robert June was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 1438) for the relief of D. H. MacAdam was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF PERSONS EMPLOYED ON RAILWAY BAGGAGE AND EXPRESS CARS

The bill (S. 863) for the protection of persons employed on railway baggage cars and railway express cars was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That when used in this act—

(a) The term "carrier" means any carrier by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water subject to the interstate commerce act, including express companies, car-ferry companies, interurban and suburban railway companies, irrespective of whether steam, electricity, or other kind of motive power is used.

(b) The term "commission" means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

(c) The term "express car" means any railway car used for the transportation of money, freight, or other substance by express; the term "baggage car" means any railway car used for the transportation of baggage; the term "express-baggage car" means any railway car used for the transportation of both express and baggage.

SEC. 2. That from and after July 1, 1927—

(a) All express cars, baggage cars, and express-baggage cars, and all parts of such cars used in interstate commerce, shall be of such construction, style, and strength and furnished in such manner as shall be required by the commission and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, lighted, and cleaned by and at the expense of the carriers in whose service used.

(b) No express car, baggage car, or express-baggage car shall be used by or in the service of any carrier which is not sound in material and construction and which is not equipped with safety-appliance devices approved by the commission, and with sanitary drinking-water containers and toilet facilities, nor unless such car is regularly and thoroughly cleaned.

(c) The commission shall not allow to be used by any carrier any express car, baggage car, or express-baggage car not constructed of steel or steel underframe or of equally indestructible material, except as hereafter provided, and all such cars accepted for service or contracted for by carriers shall, from and after July 1, 1927, be constructed of steel, and the material used in the construction of such cars or in underframing shall be of such strength, dimensions, weight, and gauge as the commission shall, by regulation and order, prescribe: Provided, however, That in the exercise of the power conferred upon the commission by this act the commission may, upon application of a common carrier, after public hearing, and upon final determination on such application, grant such common carrier relief from the provisions of this act, upon a showing, in such cases as where a common carrier operates short trains or operates trains only short distances at a low rate of speed where safety and convenience are not impaired: Provided further, That common carriers are relieved from the operation of this act in so far as applicable to cars locked or sealed, when not carrying any person or persons while such cars are in motion.

SEC. 3. The commission shall have power to enforce this act and to make reasonable rules and regulations for that purpose: Provided, That any person a citizen of the United States may file with the commission a complaint or an information, supported by affidavit and oath or affirmation, of a violation of this act, and in such case the commission shall take cognizance and proceed to investigate and act as the circumstances warrant.

SEC. 4. Any person, persons, corporation, or any agent or officer of a corporation violating or permitting the violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined in any sum not less than $250 nor more than $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like some explanation about this bill. Is it unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is unanimously reported by the committee. The committee considered the bill very carefully and amended it by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting new provisions.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, day before yesterday, near Raleigh, N. C., six people were killed. If this bill had become a law, they would have been alive to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the protection of persons employed on railway baggage cars and railway express and baggage cars, and for other purposes."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 412) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Sergt. Alvin C. York as a captain in the United States Army and then place him on the retired list was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

The bill (S. 1548) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1923, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to listen for a moment and, if he will, withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I have had some complaints about this bill. Hearings were had, as I was told, before the House committee, and they refused to assent to the provisions of the bill. It seems to me, from the information I possess, that it lacks merit, and I think we ought to have more time to discuss it than we would have under the five-minute rule. I have several amendments to the bill. I shall be glad to join with the Senator in getting it taken up at a time when they can be discussed.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to permit some 300 or more——

Mr. ROBINSON. Objection is made, Mr. President.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I want to appeal to the equitable sense of the distinguished Senator from Utah.

The purpose of the bill is to permit some 300 and more claimants to commence and maintain in one proceeding an action to set aside probably 350 contracts. The purpose of the bill, stated in somewhat different words, is, first, to permit a joinder of plaintiffs in one action, it being thought that under the present law of procedure in the Federal courts that may not be done; and, second, to provide that this action which is to be brought shall be tried upon its merits; in other words, that the prospective defendants shall not be permitted to interpose the statute of limitations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the statute already run?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think it has.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the bar already operates?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a rather remarkable suggestion, after the statute of limitations has already run against a claim, to revive it by congressional legislation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator will permit me, it is not a vested right; and it is perfectly constitutional, as decided by the Supreme Court in many cases, to provide that the statute may not be interposed.

This bill grows out of the catastrophe in San Francisco. There were a great many losses incurred. There were certain contracts entered into, and it is claimed, it will be alleged, that those contracts were entered into through such misrepresentations as amounted to fraud, and that if the fraud be established a court of equity would set aside such contracts. The property which it is sought to recover is in the custody of the Alien Property Custodian. There it is held, and the only purpose of this bill is to permit a joinder of plaintiffs, to the end that the action may be tried upon its merits. I think the case is just. I think the bill should pass. It involves no more than one action, and the truth will be ascertained, and I assume that justice will be done.

I hope the Senator will permit the matter to be considered on its merits to-night.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I listen always with delight to the able Senator from California. I have made some little examination of this matter. It came before the House committee, who gave careful consideration to all of the claims made to arguments perhaps not as able as those which may be made by the Senator from California, and the committee refused to accept the view of the Senator. I think they were right. It is a dangerous thing for the Federal Government to go into a State, set aside a statute of limitations, and by Federal statute revive actions that are already dead. We could debate the matter here, and I think I could convince the Senator himself that he is wrong; but it would take more time than we have under the 5-minute rule. Therefore, I object.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Finally, I never heard of this matter being considered by the House committee. When was it heard?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to say that the time of the Senator from California has expired. The bill will be passed over on objection.

AMENDMENT OF CLASSIFICATION ACT OF 1923

The bill (S. 3010) to amend the classification act of 1923, approved March 4, 1923, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires that this bill shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF MILK IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (S. 2803) to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and certain milk products, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I object to the bill. My attention has just been called to it to-night. I have not had time to look it over, and I would like to have it go over to-night.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not object to the passage of this bill. It is a progressive bill. It makes for the safety of this community, for the safety of the children and of everybody. It is a well worked out bill, which has been thoroughly studied not only by the author but by the committee, and it would be a calamity to have it go over with the possibility that it might not be enacted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I would like to say to the Senator that I have been told to-night by some parties from Wisconsin that they would like to look into the bill. I think a bill of that nature ought to have gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry instead of to the Committee on the District of Columbia, because there are a lot of dairy products shipped here from Minnesota. I know lots of dairy products are shipped also from the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course, if there is going to be a specific objection to the bill, it would be a waste of time to discuss it. I simply want to say, in a moment, that this bill was unanimously indorsed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; it was considered by a subcommittee of the District Committee, of which the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is a physician, familiar with all such matters, was a member; it was unanimously reported by the subcommittee and unanimously reported by the District Committee, and a similar bill has been reported by the District Committee at the other end of the Capitol, and is now on the House Calendar.

I trust that Senators who have received inspired objections from ice-cream dealers in Washington to this bill will speedily make examination into the merits of these objections, so that when we go on with the calendar again we may have objections, if there are to be objections, which may be defended.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would like to make one more appeal to the Senator from Minnesota. The objection that is raised is that under the terms of this bill milk can not be shipped in from an outside State unless it has been passed upon by the health officer of the District. That is the law of every city in the country; and by reciprocity this city will permit milk to come in from Wisconsin which has been passed upon by the health commissioner of Chicago or of Milwaukee. The objection presented to Senators is only a subterfuge on the part of persons who wish to break down the high standard of milk in the District, and I sincerely hope that the bill may be passed to-night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I would not stand in the way of any bill that was an effort to better conditions for the people in the District. I know that I have been for all the legislation in my own home State which had for its object the making of sanitary conditions better among the farmers and also among the dairymen in the cities, but I have not had time to study this bill, and, as I told the Senator from New York, I had not heard anything about the bill before. Therefore I object. Some letters have come to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] in regard to the bill, which he was about to read.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I did not desire to object. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Virginia——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

ALIEN PROPERTY TRADE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) to create a body corporate by the name of the "Alien Property Trade Investment Corporation," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution go over.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Utah object to it?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. This is about the only way we can get some farm relief, I may say to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

FOREIGN DECORATIONS FOR OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE ARMY

The bill (S. 3187) granting permission to certain officers and men of the United States Army to accept various decorations bestowed in recognition of services to the allied cause was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have talked with the Senator at some time about such bills. This thing of giving wholesale decorations does not appeal to me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It does not give any decorations. It affects decorations which have been given by foreign governments, and which have been sent to this country but have been held up by the Secretary of State.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, there have been thousands of them. What is a decoration worth if there are going to be thousands of them coming to this country?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There are not thousands. The total list is only about 25 that have come in in the last two years, and this cleans them up.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many men have been decorated?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Nobody has been decorated by the United States, and there is no proposition that any shall be.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many bills have we passed authorizing people to receive decorations? The policy of this country is not to have our men receive decorations from foreign governments.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I know, but these are all for services in the last war. We have passed a number of special bills, and it does not seem fair to the men without pull that they should not have been taken care of in the same way with people who had acquaintances here working to take care of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. How many bills have been passed authorizing people to receive decorations?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There have been three at this session that I have known of.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know there have been several.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It did not seem fair to me that people who had influence enough to get a special bill put through should profit by it while others should not have the same treatment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does this bill clean up the matter of such decorations?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It cleans it up.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not much favor it, but I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the words "of the," to insert the words "military forces of the"; on line 4, after the word "States," to strike out the word "Army"; on line 8, to strike out the words "Marine Corps"; on page 2, line 24, to strike out the word "major" and insert the words "lieutenant colonel," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following officers and men of the military forces of the United States be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept the decorations which have been conferred upon them by the countries with which the United States was associated in the World War, namely:

Willis P. Baker, major, cross of officer of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

Alfred Barton, captain, Officers' Reserve Corps, chevalier of the Order of the Star of Rumania.

J. E. Barzynski, major, cross of officer of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

Charles W. Berry, major general, Belgian croix de guerre.

James E. Chaney, major, Air Service, Italian croce di guerra.

Edward Donnelly, lieutenant colonel, Field Artillery, Italian croce di guerra.

Lee Roy Dunbar, major, cross of officer of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

John M. Eager, major, Field Artillery, Italian croce di guerra.

Henry Fritz, private, Company H, Belgian croix de guerre.

William F. H. Godson, lieutenant colonel, cross of officer of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

Bertram S. Griffith, corporal, Belgian croix de guerre.

J. G. Harbord, major general, retired, cross with star of commander of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

Nelson M. Holderman, captain, chevalier of the French Legion of Honor.

William McFarland, captain, chevalier of the French Legion of Honor.

Charles G. Mortimer, lieutenant colonel, Quartermaster Corps, officer of the French Legion of Honor.

Arthur Poillon, lieutenant colonel, commander of the Order of the Star of Rumania, grand officer of the Order of the Crown of Rumania.

T. Upham, lieutenant colonel, Officers' Reserve Corps, cross of officer of the Order of the Regeneration of Poland.

Frank C. Vincent, major, Belgian croix de guerre.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting permission to certain officers and men of the military forces of the United States to accept various decorations bestowed in recognition of service to the allied cause."

REMOVAL OF REMAINS OF GEORGE MAUGER BURKLIN AND ANTON LERCH BURKLIN

The bill (S. 3220) authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late George Mauger Burklin and the remains of the late Anton Lerch Burklin from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Fort Lincoln Cemetery, Prince Georges County, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Maryland," to insert the words "but such permit shall not be issued until there has been filed in the health department of the District of Columbia a permit from the proper State authorities at the place where said cemetery is located authorizing the interment there of said remains," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late George Mauger Burklin and the remains of the late Anton Lerch Burklin from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Fort Lincoln Cemetery, Prince Georges County, Md. But such permit shall not be issued until there has been filed in the Health Department of the District of Columbia a permit from the proper State authorities at the place where said cemetery is located authorizing the interment there of said remains.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HONORABLE DISCHARGES FROM MILITARY SERVICE

The bill (S. 3241) for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers of the United States Army, their widows and dependent children, a soldier who was discharged between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive, for fraudulent enlistment on account of misrepresentation of his age, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service on the date of his actual separation therefrom, if his service otherwise was such as would have entitled him to an honorable discharge: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS IN JAPAN

The bill (S. 3171) for the relief of sufferers from earthquake in Japan was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the action of the Executive in directing the issue, and the issuance of Army supplies out of the current and reserve stock for use of the Army, and in directing payment for supplies and for services rendered in connection with the shipment and transfer of such supplies, including all other extra expenditures, of a value not exceeding $6,017,069.03 for the relief of sufferers from the earthquake in Japan on September 1, 1923, is approved. Credit for all such supplies so issued and funds so disbursed in connection therewith and with relief tendered by the Army shall be allowed in the settlement of the accounts of the officers of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The bill (S. 3248) providing for sundry matters affecting the Military Establishment was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, this, it will be noted, is a Senate bill. There is on the calendar House bill 8886, Order of Business No. 575. That was passed by the House. It is a bill identical with this one, and I ask that we proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8886. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 87 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

"And provided further, That property issued to the National Guard, and which has become unserviceable through fair wear and tear in service, may, after inspection thereof and finding to that effect made by an officer of the Regular Army designated by the Secretary of War, be sold or otherwise disposed of, and the State, Territory, or District of Columbia, accountable, shall be relieved from further accountability therefor; such inspection and sale or other disposition to be made under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, and to constitute as to such property a discretional substitute for the examination, report, and disposition provided for elsewhere in this section."

SEC. 2. That section 92 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 92. Training of the National Guard: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, each company, troop, battery, and detachment in the National Guard shall assemble for drill and instruction, including indoor target practice, not less than 48 times each year, and shall, in addition thereto, participate in encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, including outdoor target practice, at least 15 days in training each year, including target practice, unless such company, troop, battery, or detachment shall have been excused from participation in any part thereof by the Secretary of War: Provided, That an assembly for drill and instruction may consist of a single duly ordered formation of a company, troop, battery, or detachment, or of a series of duly ordered formations of subdivisions or parts thereof, but in the latter case the series of formations of subdivisions or groups must comprehend and include the entire organization, and must be included within the time limit of seven consecutive days within a calendar month. The sum total of the attendance at all the separate consecutive formations announced as constituting that assembly shall be counted as the attendance at the actual military assembly for the required period of time; but no officer, warrant officer, or enlisted man shall be counted more than once, nor receive credit for more than one required period of actual military attendance, even though he may have attended more than one of the formations which constitute the assembly for the required period of time: Provided further, That credit for an assembly for drill or for indoor target practice shall not be given unless the number of officers and enlisted men present for duty at such assembly shall equal or exceed a minimum to be prescribed by the President, nor unless the period of actual military duty and instruction participated in by each officer and enlisted man at each such assembly at which he shall be credited as having been present shall be of at least one and one-half hours' duration and the character of training such as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

SEC. 3. That section 109 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 109. Pay for the National Guard officers: Under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, captains, lieutenants, and warrant officers belonging to organizations of the National Guard shall receive compensation at the rate of one-thirtieth of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in sections 3 and 9 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for each regular drill or other period of instruction authorized by the Secretary of War, not exceeding 8 in any one calendar month and not exceeding 60 in one year, at which they shall have been officially present for the entire required period of not less than one and one-half hours. Officers above the grade of captain shall receive not more than $500 a year, and officers below the grade of major, not belonging to organizations, shall receive not more than four-thirtieths of the monthly base pay prescribed for them in section 3 of said pay readjustment act for satisfactory performance of their appropriate duties under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. In addition to pay hereinbefore provided, officers commanding organizations less than a brigade and having administrative functions connected therewith, shall, whether or not such officers belong to such organizations, receive not more than $240 a year for the faithful performance of such administrative functions under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; and for the purpose of determining how much shall be paid to such officers so performing such functions, the Secretary of War may, from time to time, divide them into classes and fix the amount payable to the officers in each class. Pay under the provisions of this section shall not accrue to any officer during a period when he shall be entitled under any provision of law to the full rate of his base pay prescribed in section 3 or section 9, as the case may be, of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922: Provided, That section 9 of an act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, approved August 31, 1918, shall also apply to the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment for cash by officers of the National Guard and National Guard Reserve, whether in State or Federal service, on proper identification and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe."

SEC. 4. That section 6 of the act of March 4, 1923, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard injured in line of duty while at encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises, or at service schools, under the provisions of sections 94, 97, and 99 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended; members of the officers' reserve corps and of the enlisted reserve corps of the Army injured in line of duty while on active duty under proper orders; persons hereinbefore described who may now be undergoing hospital treatment for injuries so sustained shall be entitled, under such regulations as the President may prescribe, to medical and hospital treatment at Government expense, and to a continuation of the pay and allowances, whether in money or in kind, they were receiving at the time of such injuries, until they are fit for transportation to their homes, and upon termination of such medical and hospital treatment shall be entitled to transportation to their homes at Government expense. Officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard injured in line of duty when participating in aerial flights prescribed under the provisions of section 92 of said national defense act as amended shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, be entitled from the date such injury was sustained to the same medical and hospital treatment at Government expense, pay and allowances, and transportation to their homes, as if such injury had occurred while in line of duty at encampments, maneuvers, or other exercises under aforementioned section 94 of the national defense act. And members of the officers' reserve corps and enlisted reserve corps injured while voluntarily participating in aerial flights in Government-owned aircraft by proper authority as an incident to their military training, shall, under regulations prescribed as aforesaid, be entitled, from the date such injury was sustained, to the same medical and hospital treatment at Government expense, pay and allowances, and transportation to their homes, as if such injury had occurred while on active duty under proper orders. Any person hereinbefore described, injured as aforesaid, who shall remain disabled for more than six months, shall, during the period of disability in excess of six months and until fit for transportation to his home, be entitled to medical and hospital treatment and to subsistence at Government expense, and when fit for transportation shall be entitled to transportation to his home at Government expense, but shall not during such period in excess of six months be entitled to other compensation. Any expenditures heretofore made by the Government in caring for persons injured under the conditions specified herein are hereby validated. Members of the reserve officers' training corps and members of the civilian military training camps injured in line of duty while at camps of instruction under the provisions of sections 47a and 47d of said national defense act, as amended, shall be entitled to medical and hospital treatment and transportation to their homes as in the case of persons hereinbefore described, and subsistence at Government expense until furnished such transportation, under such regulations as the President may prescribe. If the death of any person mentioned herein occurs while he is undergoing the training or medical and hospital treatment contemplated in this section, the United States shall pay for burial expenses and the return of the body to his home a sum not to exceed $100, as may be fixed in regulations prescribed by the President."

SEC. 5. Under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, property and disbursing officers of the National Guard accountable for public moneys may intrust money to other officers of the National Guard for the purpose of having them make disbursement as their agents, and the officers to whom the money is intrusted, as well as the officer intrusting the same to him, shall be held pecuniarily responsible therefor to the United States, and the agent officer shall be subject for his official misconduct to all the liabilities and penalties prescribed by law in like cases for the officer for whom he acts as agent.

SEC. 6. Enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades of the National Guard holding specialists' ratings under the provisions of the national defense act, as amended, shall, in addition to the pay provided in section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, be entitled to one-thirtieth of the specialists' pay provided in section 9 of said pay readjustment act for each day of participation in exercises provided for by sections 94, 97, and 99, national defense act, as amended: Provided, That payments heretofore made to enlisted men of the sixth and seventh grades of the National Guard holding specialists' ratings of one-thirtieth of the specialists' pay provided in section 9 of said pay readjustment act for each day spent in participating in exercises or performing the duties provided for by sections 94, 97, 99, and 110 of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended, be, and the same are hereby, validated.

SEC. 7. That payments made to warrant officers of the National Guard, under the provisions of section 14 of the pay readjustment act of June 10, 1922, for the performance of their duties during the period beginning with the 1st day of July, 1922, and ending with the 29th day of October, 1923, be, and the same are hereby, validated, notwithstanding the nonexistence during said period of regulations authorized to be prescribed by said section, and warrant officers who during said period performed the duties prescribed by the Secretary of War in paragraph 928 (b) of National Guard Regulations, 1922, as amended by changes No. 9 to such regulations, dated October 30, 1923, and who have not been paid therefor, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of said regulations.

SEC. 8. That payments heretofore made to captains, lieutenants, and enlisted men belonging to organizations of the National Guard for attendance at drills regularly ordered for only a subdivision or part of an organization, under the authority of any provision of the National Guard regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War and in effect at the time said drills were held, be, and the same are hereby, validated.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from New York should explain the purpose of the provisions of the bill. It seems to be quite an important measure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is a bill which might be termed an omnibus bill, containing features unrelated one with the other. It refers almost entirely to those sections of the national defense act affecting the National Guard.

The first provision is one to simplify the method of condemning property now in the hands of the National Guard—Federal property—so that expense and time may be saved.

The second provision, found on page 2, permits what is known as split drills in National Guard units. That provision has already passed the Senate in a different bill during this session of the Congress.

The next one, on page 4, "Pay for National Guard officers," puts the officers of the National Guard on the same basis as the enlisted men as to the number of drills which they may attend per week or per month or per year, and receive pay for the same, and that provision has already passed the Senate this session in another bill.

The next one, on the bottom of page 5, section 4 of the bill, provides that when a National Guard soldier or officer is injured at a maneuver camp, he may be taken care of in a United States Government Army hospital. That has passed at this session, too, in a Senate bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from New York whether these provisions affecting the National Guard have the approval of the National Guard organizations or their representatives?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were drawn by the National Guard legislative committee, together with the War Department authorities, and have the approval of both military committees of the Congress.

This provision I have just referred to has passed the Senate at this session in another bill.

I want to offer two small amendments, perfecting in their nature. On line 23, page 2, before the word "or" and after the word "detachment," I move to insert the words "when so authorized by the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the end of the bill, after line 10, on page 10, I move to strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add the following:

And said captains, lieutenants, and enlisted men who have heretofore participated in drills held under the conditions described in this section, and who have not been paid therefor, shall be paid in accordance with the provisions of the said National Guard regulations in effect at the time such drills were held.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is proposing to amend the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The House bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the page and line correspond to the House bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate bill 3248 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1232) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

AMENDMENT OF CLASSIFICATION ACT OF 1923

The bill (H. R. 6896) to amend an act entitled "The classification act of 1923," approved March 4, 1923, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. At the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas wants to object, of course we will have to let it go over. I do not know why he should object for a Senator who is not here.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Utah could not be here, and in order to get this unanimous-consent agreement for to-night I agreed with him that we would put over the four bills he objected to. I will object in my own name if the Senator insists.

Mr. STANFIELD. I insist.

Mr. CURTIS. I am for the Senator's bill, but I ask that it go over.

Mr. STANFIELD. I wish to give notice that I shall move to take it up at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY MARTIN

The bill (S. 2525) for the relief of Henry Martin was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FREE MAIL PRIVILEGES FOR PUBLICATIONS FOR THE BLIND

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 115) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That volumes of the Holy Scriptures, or any part thereof, in raised characters for the use of the blind, whether prepared by hand or printed, which do not contain advertisements, (a) when furnished by an organization, institution, or assocation not conducted for private profit, to a blind person without charge, shall be transmitted in the United States mails free of postage; (b) when furnished by an organization, institution, or association not conducted for private profit to a blind person at a price not greater than the cost price thereof, shall be transmitted in the United States mails at the postage rate of 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST LANDS IN FLORIDA

The bill (S. 823) to authorize the acceptance of title to forest lands in the State of Florida and to create national forests therefrom, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUS OF CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS

The bill (S. 483) to correct the status of certain commissioned officers of the Navy appointed thereto pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will just withhold his objection for a moment, I would like to read the following from the report on this bill:

The purpose of this bill is to correct the status of certain officers who were examined and found qualified for appointment in the regular Navy along with a group of several other officers. All of the officers who took the examination at the time mentioned were appointed before June 30, 1922, with the exception of three officers for whom relief is sought through this bill. These three officers did not receive their commissions from the department until after June 30, 1922, through no fault of their own, either because they were traveling from one assignment to another or were officially away from their home stations, so that their commission did not reach them until after June 30, 1922.

I think the Senator should withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on line 6, after the comma following the parenthesis, to insert the words "who were examined and found qualified in all respects for such appointment prior to June 30, 1922, but whose appointments were delayed subsequent to that date through no fault of their own," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers of the regular Navy appointed subsequent to June 30, 1922, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. pp. 834 and 835), who were examined and found qualified in all respects for such appointment prior to June 30, 1922, but whose appointments were delayed subsequent to that date through no fault of their own, shall be entitled to count, in the computation of their pay, all service which would have been credited to them had they been so appointed on or before June 30, 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TEACHERS

The bill (H. R. 6721) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 7, line 15, to strike out "the superintendent of schools shall receive a salary of $7,500 per annum" and to insert in lieu thereof:

A basic salary of $8,000 per year, with an annual increase of salary of $1,000 for two years, or until a maximum salary of $10,000 per year is reached.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 21, after the word "act," to insert the words "during the first year of service," so as to make the paragraph read:

The school officers provided for in Article II of this act during the first year of service shall receive compensation at the basic salary fixed herein and not receive credit for services prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 16, to strike out lines 3 to 8, inclusive, in the following words:

And provided further, That nothing in this or any other section of this bill will authorize service rendered prior to July 1, 1924, to be credited to any employee other than teachers and all accredited service shall be confined to service rendered in and to the schools of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to call attention briefly to the fact that the bill increases the compensation of teachers more han $400,000 the first year, and the maximum increase in the bill over the existing maximum is more than $3,000,000. There are a number of provisions in the bill which are very objectionable to me. There is no doubt in my mind that the bill creates overhead expenses which are entirely too great and tends to a superfluity of employees particularly in the higher grades. The compensation of the teachers, particularly in the primary and elementary and junior high school grades, is quite fair and reasonable. The compensation in some of the higher grades in my opinion is too high, but I am making no objection.

Assurances have been given that legislation which is being formulated will make a correction of some of the evils of which I have spoken. If not, then this bill in my opinion will contain some provisions which will be unfair. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], that he ought to limit the operation of the bill to two years, so that if they do not make the reforms suggested we will have at the end of two years a chance to revise the salaries.

Mr. CAPPER. I think that would be unwise. There is no doubt in my mind now that we are going to have the legislation to which the Senator has referred. I know the bill is being prepared with very great care, and I think there will be a plan submitted for the reorganization of the schools of the city of Washington that will meet not only with the approval of the Senator from Utah but of Congress in general.

Mr. KING. If I can have the assurance of the Senator that when the bill comes before the committee—and he and I are members of it—the committee will deal with those features to which I have referred very imperfectly, I shall not press the suggestion which I made.

Mr. CAPPER. I am quite certain the legislation will include the matters spoken of.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad to join in the statement made by the Senator from Kansas, because those matters can be dealt with in the committee. I hope the bill will pass as it is now before us.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PALESTINE TROUP

The bill (S. 3090) for the relief of Palestine Troup was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McKINLEY. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment. This old gentleman is a man some 77 years old, who has no desire for a pension. He has raised a family of six sons, and stands very high in Illinois. I do not think the old gentleman is particularly disturbed as to the condition, but this matter has stood as a cloud against his record. He was a boy 16 years old at the time and was wounded and sent home and was not ordered back again. I trust the Senator will not insist on his objection.

Mr. DIAL. I have objected to similar bills, and I shall have to object to this one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. STANFIELD. Mr. President, a little while ago we passed over Order of Business No. 479, the bill (S. 3011) to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and acts in amendment thereof. I ask unanimous consent that we return to that bill for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I asked that the bill go over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], as I explained before.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does the Senator from Kansas understand that this is not the same bill?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas understands. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stated to me that there were four bills of this character which he wanted to have go over, and I told him that I would ask that they go over when they were reached on the calendar.

Mr. STANFIELD. Does the Senator from Utah object to the consideration of the civil service pension retirement bill as well as the reclassification bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; he does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Oregon.

AUSTIN G. TAINTER

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the Senate return to calendar No. 490, the bill (S. 2518) for the relief of Austin G. Tainter. That is a companion bill to a bill just passed. I understand the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] withdraws his objection, and I hope no one else will object to the bill. It is to give the man the benefit of the employees' compensation act, and that is all.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Austin G. Tainter, a former employee of the United States Railway Mail Service, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC RIVER MEMORIAL BRIDGE

The bill (S. 3173) to provide for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from a point near the Lincoln Memorial, in the city of Washington, to an appropriate point in the State of Virginia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, before any objection is made to the bill, I want to say that I am not going to press it for action to-night, because it is a matter of great importance. This particular bill, I think, has had, perhaps, as much attention from the country as any bill on the calendar. Almost every State, west and south, has been interested in the matter, and governors have written to me about it. I realize that it carries a large appropriation, and I shall hope to call it up later in the session for consideration and passage. I do not want any objection made to it to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Maine the bill will be passed over.

COURT REPORTERS IN DISTRICT COURTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. President, while the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is in a good humor, I would like to have the Senate refer back to calendar number 350, Senate bill 1639.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think we should proceed, and go through the calendar without recurring to numbers that precede those with which we began this evening.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Does the Senator from Arkansas object?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unanimous-consent agreement provided for beginning at a later point in the calendar than that to which the Senator from Minnesota refers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Very well.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS

The bill (H. R. 8050) to detach Reagan County, in the State of Texas, from the El Paso division of the western judicial district of Texas and attach said county to the San Angelo division of the northern judicial district of said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Reagan County, in the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, detached from the El Paso division of the western judicial district of Texas and attached to and made a part of the San Angelo division of the northern judicial district of said State.

SEC. 2. That all process against persons resident in said county of Reagan and cognizable before the United States district court shall be issued out of and made returnable to said court at San Angelo, and that all prosecutions against persons for offenses committed in said county of Reagan shall be tried in said court at San Angelo: Provided, That no civil or criminal cause begun and pending prior to the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOT SPRINGS NATIONAL PARK

The bill (S. 1528) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the fee-simple title to a certain tract of land adjoining the Hot Springs National Park, Ark., donated to the United States of America for use in connection with Hot Springs National Park, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept the fee-simple title to a certain tract of land adjoining the Hot Springs National Park, Ark., described as being the west half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 27, township 2 south, range 19 west, fifth principal meridian, containing sixteen acres, more or less, situated in Garland County, State of Arkansas, donated to the United States of America for use in connection with Hot Springs National Park: Provided, That such land when accepted by the Secretary of the Interior shall be and remain a part of the Hot Springs National Park.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MEDFORD, JACKSON COUNTY, OREG.

The bill (S. 1987) accepting certain tracts of land in the city of Medford, Jackson County, Oreg., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept certain tracts of land in the city of Medford, Jackson County, Oreg., described as lots Nos. 15 and 16, block 9, amended plat to Queen Ann Addition to the city of Medford; and lot 3, block 2, central subdivision to the city of Medford, which have been tendered to the United States of America in fee simple by the city of Medford, Oreg., as sites for buildings to be used in connection with the administration of Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LAND TO SHREVEPORT, LA., FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES

The bill (H. R. 5573) granting certain public lands to the city of Shreveport, La., for reservoir purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 13, after the word "same," to insert the words "upon filing its application by the city, notice thereof shall be published at least once each week for 30 days in some newspaper in general circulation in the parish in which the land is situated"; and on page 2, in line 20, after the word "recognize," to insert the words "notice being given as hereinbefore provided," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue patent or patents to the city of Shreveport, La., for use in the establishment of a reservoir for the water supply of said city, for all those tracts of land within what is known as the Cross Lake area, in townships 17 and 18 north, range 15 west, Louisiana meridian, which may be found by the Secretary of the Interior to have been islands in said Cross Lake at the date the State of Louisiana was admitted to the Union, and to which tracts no legal claims have been initiated and duly maintained under the provisions of the public land laws, and shall be timely asserted as provided herein: Provided, That the said city of Shreveport shall pay for said lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and shall tender its application for patent, accompanied by the purchase price of the land, within six months after the approval of this act, or within a similar period after the acceptance of the official plat or plats or survey if accepted after the date of this act: Provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all gas, oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found at any time in the said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same upon filing its application by the city, notice thereof shall be published at least once each week for 30 days in some newspaper in general circulation in the parish in which the land is situated.

SEC. 2. That no claim alleged to have been initiated and maintained under the public land laws adverse to the disposition of said lands as provided for by this act shall be recognized, notice being given as hereinbefore provided, unless regularly presented to the Secretary of the Interior within the period allowed the city of Shreveport to file its application for patent, and no tract to which an adverse claim is asserted shall be patented to the city unless and until such claim is finally rejected by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That the lands hereby granted shall be used by the city of Shreveport, La., only for the purpose expressed in the grant, and if said land, or any part thereof, shall be abandoned for such use it shall revert to the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to determine the facts and declare such forfeiture and restore said land to the public domain, and such order of the Secretary shall be final and conclusive.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire what disposition was made of Calendar No. 560, House bill 5573?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was just passed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed may be reconsidered by reason of the fact that the amendments as printed do not comply with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer the following amendment to the committee amendment: After the word "same," on page 2, line 13, insert a period and begin a new sentence with the words following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the vote by which the amendment on page 2, line 13, was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the clerk will state the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 13, after the word "same" insert a period; and after line 13 insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

Upon filing its application by the city, notice thereof shall be published at least once each week for 30 days in some newspaper in general circulation in the parish in which the land is situated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHANN JACOB LUTSCH

The bill (H. R. 5169) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Johann Jacob Lutsch, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to grant to Johann Jacob Lutsch, of St. Anthony, Idaho, a patent to the west half of section 15, township 11 north, range 41 east, Boise meridian, Idaho, such land having been entered by Johann Jacob Lutsch under homestead entry No. 033715, Blackfoot series.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIMAN GEOGRAPHIC CODE SYSTEM

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing a joint committee of both Houses to investigate the Harriman geographic code system, now in use by the War Department, with a view to ascertaining the adaptability and application of said system in the several executive departments and administrative branches of the Government and to rendering a just compensation to the owner thereof, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, from a casual examination of the joint resolution I do not understand it. Unless some Senator is prepared to explain it I shall ask that it go over.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is interested in the measure, and I can tell the Senator a little about it. It refers to a system of accounting which, I understand, is in use in the War Department. The Senator from New Hampshire was desirous to have the system of accounting investigated by a joint committee, with a view to its adoption. It involves no expenditure. I am making this statement for the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the joint resolution had better go over Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will go over.

NELLIE KILDEE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1607) for the relief of Nellie Kildee. The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent for the east half of the southwest quarter, and the west half of the southeast quarter of section 15, in township 44 north, and range 3 east, Boise meridian, in the State of Idaho, to Nellie Kildee, who settled and established residence thereon in 1901, when unsurveyed, upon which she put valuable improvements and fully complied with the homestead law prior to its withdrawal in 1906 for forestry purposes, and whose entry was canceled by the Department of the Interior and motion for the exercise of supervisory authority denied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENNING NATIONAL FOREST, GA.

The bill (S. 1033) to establish the Benning National Forest in the State of Georgia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be glad to be advised by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands or some member of that committee if it is to be the policy of the Government from time to time to receive these large tracts of land from the States, obviously for the purpose of having the Government take charge of them, which means considerable expense at the hands of the Federal Government. The report as to this bill shows that Mr. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, states that if this land be taken over then a number of foresters will be put to work, and, of course, that will mean a larger appropriation from the Federal Treasury to look after the forests. It seems to me there ought to be some policy respecting these matters. I do not know whether or not it is wise for the Government to take over these forests or these lands. Many of the Western States have complained because the Federal Government has too much land, and we are trying to get it out of the hands of the Government and get it into the hands of the State. On the other hand, many of the States, it seems, are trying to get their lands out of the control of the States and transfer them to the Federal Government.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government already owns 96,000 acres of this land.

Mr. KING. But it was acquired during the World War for military purposes and it is not now needed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The object of the bill is merely to have the Forest Service produce timber on the land.

Mr. KING. There will, of course, be a divided responsibility. If it is needed for war purposes, it ought to be controlled by the War Department. I want some information before I shall be ready to vote for the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the bill will have to go over for certain reasons, but I wish first to say that the Secretary of War has approved it, and that the Secretary of Agriculture has also approved it. I do not understand that there will be any additional expense. The Government, as the Senator from Florida has stated, owns 96,000 acres there. They are now used for military purposes; but the Agricultural Department has control of the forests, and that is the reason why it is proposed to place this tract under the Agricultural Department. There is timber there which the department could sell. The War Department does not have the same authority in the matter of the sale of timber which the Agricultural Department has. However, Mr. President, I will consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think if the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will reflect for a moment, he will see the propriety of turning the administration of this tract over to the Department of Agriculture. It is heavily timbered, or at least there is considerable timber on it. It is now in the control of the War Department, which has not any immediate use for it. Of course, the timber ought to be taken care of, and the matured timber ought to be cut and disposed of. This is obviously a task for the Forestry Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. The point that I was raising was not so much as to the control of the land—although I did suggest that there would be a divided control and a divided responsibility—but as to the question of policy. How far are we going in accepting these tracts of forest land? I was advised in regard to this tract of land that the War Department had no use for it and did not intend to retain jurisdiction over it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. A bill such as the Senator has in mind was passed a short while ago; that was a case where we accepted a gift of private lands; but this is not that kind of a case. The Government of the United States now owns the land.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a military reservation which is under the control of the War Department, which, of course, is not now equipped to take care of forests.

Mr. KING. I understood, if the Senator will pardon me, that the Government did not need the land for military purposes; that the War Department would be willing to have it disposed of, but that the Department of Agriculture was very anxious to have the Federal Government take it over and signified its desire to assume control over it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is mistaken when he states that the Government does not need the tract for military purposes. It is one of the finest training camps in the whole country. The War Department does need it absolutely.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Section 2 of the bill provides:

That such national forest shall remain subject to the unhampered use of the War Department for military purposes——

Mr. KING. If the Government owns the land, and it is needed for military purposes, I have no objection, but I thought that the Government desired to make a disposition of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. No.

Mr. KING. If the War Department needs the land, and we shall not merely be projecting the Government into this matter, though the land is not needed, that is a different matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator would be entirely right if his premise were sound, but the War Department does need the land.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the consideration of the bill has been objected to.

Mr. NORBECK. I wish to state that I am in favor of the passage of the bill, or I should not have reported it favorably from the committee; but the War Department has asked for a little time, and I, therefore, ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION ACT

The bill (H. R. 5478) to amend sections 1, 3, and 6 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and their return to civil employment," was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. A number of suggestions have been made to me that certain amendments are being prepared to that bill, and it will take some little time to consider them. We can not do so under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

STEPHEN A. WINCHELL

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when Order of Business 548, being the bill (S. 1232) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell, was reached and was objected to. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to return to the bill named by him for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. DIAL. I ask that the bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not object to the bill. The bill was passed at the last session of Congress. I think there is merit in it. It is to straighten out the record of Stephen A. Winchell. The facts in the case are these: Winchell entered the service in 1862 and served for three years. He was wounded while in the service. At the expiration of three years, on or about August 3, 1865, three of Winchell's comrades left camp without permission. Their absence was detected, and, thinking that he might be able to assist them if they could be induced to return to camp before being placed under arrest, Winchell went in search of them. He made the admitted mistake of failing to secure leave. He found his comrades on the streets of a town near camp, all of them in an intoxicated condition. Winchell urged them to return to camp, but before they could do so the party was met by an officer, taken back to camp, and placed in confinement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I myself do not object to the consideration of the bill, but an objection was made some minutes ago.

Mr. HALE. I asked the Senator from South Carolina to withhold his objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator announced that he would persist in his objection, and I think, in fairness to the bills on the calendar that have not been reached, and probably will not be reached, that the Senate should not proceed to discuss bills to which objection has been made.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that the Senator insisted upon his objection. I asked him to withdraw it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; he has stated repeatedly that he objected.

Mr. DIAL. I objected twice. I have no objection to the Senator talking, if he wants to, but I am not going to let the bill pass.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the point I make; there is no use talking if objection is going to be made.

Mr. HALE. Of course, under the circumstances it is useless to proceed further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7220) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LYN LUNDQUIST

The bill (S. 976) for the relief of Lyn Lundquist was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that bill go over.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, that is a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands. It is for the relief of a homestead settler. It is not a pension bill.

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to hear it is not a pension bill, and I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to permit Lyn Lundquist, notwithstanding he has heretofore exhausted his homestead right, to make homestead entry of the west half of the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 15, in township 44 north, and range 3 east, Boise meridian, in the State of Idaho, and to give him credit upon his making final proof showing residence and cultivation as required by law for any improvement he may heretofore have made thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1005) to make valid and enforceable written provisions or agreements for arbitration of disputes arising out of contracts, maritime transactions, or commerce among the States or Territories or with foreign nations, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. That bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MAIL MESSENGER SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 6482) authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for mail messenger service was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the words "Postmaster General," to insert "postmasters," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter postmasters may be designated by the Postmaster General as disbursing officers for the payment of mail messengers and others engaged under their supervision in transporting the mails: Provided, That in the discretion of the Postmaster General, postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at post offices of the third class, and postmasters, assistant postmasters, and clerks at post offices of the fourth class may enter into contracts for the performance of mail messenger service, and allowance may be made therefor from the appropriations for mail messenger service: Provided further, That the total amount payable under such contract to any postmaster, assistant postmaster, or clerk shall not exceed $300 in any one year: Provided further, That hereafter special delivery messengers at post offices of all classes may enter into contracts for mail messenger service.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM F. BROCKSCHMIDT

The bill (S. 1650) for the relief of William F. Brockschmidt was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with an amendment, on page 2, line 6, after the word "check," to strike out "was held by officials of said Reclamation Service and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated to and for the benefit of William F. Brockschmidt, of Ballantine, Mont., out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States otherwise unappropriated, the sum of $916.38, to reimburse said William F. Brockschmidt for loss sustained by him on account of a check for said amount of money issued by him November 25, 1922, on the Ballantine State Bank, of Ballantine, Mont., in which he then had on deposit to his credit money to that amount, to the special fiscal agent of the United States Reclamation Service in payment of water charges, water renewal, and construction charges of said Reclamation Service to that amount, assessed to and a lien in that amount on land within the Huntley reclamation project of the United States Reclamation Service, entered and owned or held then and now, in part by said William F. Brockschmidt and in part by his wife, which said check was held by officials of said Reclamation Service and had not been cashed when said bank closed its doors and suspended payments and discontinued business December 4, 1922; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to issue to said William F. Brockschmidt or his heirs a voucher or warrant on the Treasury of the United States for said sum of money, hereby appropriated, worded in such manner that such voucher or warrant must be countersigned or indorsed by the special fiscal agent of the United States Reclamation Service and must be used to pay the aforesaid indebtedness of said William F. Brockschmidt and his wife to said Reclamation Service now unpaid and existing: Provided, That whatever may be realized or paid (not to exceed the aforesaid amount) on account of said check of said William F. Brockschmidt on said bank, in the settlement of the affairs and indebtedness of said bank or on account of the deposit therein of money of said William F. Brockschmidt, shall accrue to and shall be paid to the Treasurer of the United States and shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States and shall be the money of the United States.

SEC. 2. This act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage and approval.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Montana explain that bill. I have not had time to read the report.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The bill is a very meritorious one. The beneficiary of the bill was a homesteader claiming under an irrigation district. He turned in a check in payment for his land to the proper officer of the Reclamation Service, who held the check for an inordinate time; in the meantime the bank upon which the check was drawn failed, and the settler will have to lose his money by reason of the negligence of the reclamation officer in not cashing the check.

Mr. DIAL. For how long a time was the check held?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not remember the exact time.

Mr. DIAL. Is the bill recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURA C. PETERSON AND OTHERS

The bill (S. 2087) for the relief of Laura C., Ida E., Lulu P., and Esther P. Peterson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to Laura C. Peterson, Ida E. Peterson, Lulu P. Peterson, and Esther B. Peterson, children of Peder L. Peterson, conveying to them the west half of section 28, township 37 north, range 29 east principal meridian, being embraced in the homestead entry of said Peder L. Peterson, Glasgow, Mont., serial No. 051413, allowed September 25, 1917.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

The bill (S. 3161) to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is interested in that bill. He is necessarily absent from the city, and I said that when it was called up for consideration I would ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PEARL RIVER BRIDGE, MISSISSIPPI

The bill (S. 3244) granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct a bridge across Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Pearl River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at the city of Jackson, State of Mississippi, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and expressly reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FINAL ROLL OF FLATHEAD INDIANS, MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 2875) to provide for the addition of the names of certain persons to the final roll of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to add to the final roll of the Indians of the (Jocko) Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., approved January 22, 1920, under the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. p. 591), and the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. p. 9), the names of the following persons, descendants of the Confederated Flathead Tribes of Indians: Lucy Contesto, Mary Sophie Contesto, Clifford Gendron, Adolph Squeque, Peter Joseph Chalwain, Dennis McLeod, Margaret Louise Ashley, Veona Carlson, Lois May Houle, Norbert Marage, Eva Matilda Matt, Eneas Isadore Woodcock, Wilton Sidney Worley, Harry Leon Beauchaine, Henry Louseau, and Louise Isaac.

The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to pay to each of the persons named a sum equal to that heretofore paid per capita to those whose names were on the approved roll, such payments to be made from any tribal funds in the Treasury to the credit of the Flathead Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WICHITA AND AFFILIATED INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (H. R. 731) authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in section 3, page 3, line 22, after the word "than," to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma may have against the United States may be submitted to the Court of Claims for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes or bands of Indians from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes or bands, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribes or bands any moneys or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine as right and justice may require and upon a full and fair arbitration all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribes or bands against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said court, it shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums, including gratuities heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribes or any band thereof.

The claim or claims of the Wichita and affiliated bands may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the date of the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of the said Wichita and affiliated bands or any other tribe or band of Indians the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition or petitions shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by the Wichita and affiliated bands or any tribe or band thereof under contract approved in accordance with existing law, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit or cause of action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid to the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribes under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, but in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause, and in no event shall such fee amount in the aggregate under one attorneyship for each tribe to more than $25,000, and shall be paid out of any judgment that may be recovered; and the balance of such judgment shall be placed in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto, where it shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

FINAL ROLL OF THE CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHO INDIANS, OKLAHOMA

The bill (H. R. 6857) to provide for the addition of the names of Chester Calf and Crooked Nose Woman to the final roll of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, Seger jurisdiction, Oklahoma, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to add to the final roll of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians of the Seger jurisdiction, Oklahoma, approved May 28, 1921, the names of Chester Calf and Crooked Nose Woman, which names were inadvertently omitted from the said roll, and to pay to each of these persons a sum equal to that heretofore paid per capita to those whose names appear on the approved roll, such payment to be made from any tribal funds to the credit of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RED LAKE INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 4460) authorizing payment to certain Red Lake Indians, out of the tribal trust funds, for garden plats surrendered for school-farm use was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed $1,000, out of moneys on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Indians in Minnesota, and to use the same, or as much thereof as may be necessary, in reimbursing certain Red Lake Indians whom he may find to have suffered loss through the taking of their individual garden plats, without remuneration to them, for Indian school-farm purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3084) to enlarge the fish-cultural station at Orangeburg, S. C., was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over!

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, that bill is in the nature——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Over!

Mr. DIAL. It is in the nature of economy; it is to help the farmer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

NIAGARA RIVER AND BLACK ROCK CANAL BRIDGE

The bill (S. 3249) granting the consent of Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River and Black Rock Canal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Buffalo & Fort Erie Public Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Niagara River and the Black Rock Canal, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, within or near the city limits of Buffalo, in the county of Erie and State of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That, subject to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War may permit the corporation herein named, its successors and assigns, to construct a tunnel or tunnels under said river and canal in lieu of the bridge herein authorized, in accordance with the foregoing act approved March 23, 1906, so far as the same may be applicable: Provided further, That before the construction of said bridge or tunnel shall be begun all proper and requisite authority therefor shall be obtained from the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be null and void unless the construction of said bridge or tunnel is commenced within two years and completed within five years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. DILKS

The bill (H. R. 7296) for the relief of John W. Dilks was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CIVIL WAR MILITARY TELEGRAPH CORPS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire what disposition was made of order of business No. 584, being the bill (S. 1535) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That bill was this afternoon recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

LA PLATA RIVER COMPACT

The bill (S. 1656) granting the consent and approval of Congress to the La Plata River compact was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to the compact signed by the commissioners of the States of Colorado and New Mexico at the city of Santa Fe, on the 27th day of November, 1922, and approved by the Legislature of the State of Colorado by an act entitled "An act to approve the La Plata River compact," April 13, 1923, and by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico by an act entitled "An act ratifying and approving the La Plata compact," approved February 7, 1923, which compact is as follows:

"The State of Colorado and the State of New Mexico, desiring to provide for the equitable distribution of the waters of the La Plata River and to remove all causes of present and future controversy between them with respect thereto, and being moved by considerations of interstate comity, pursuant to acts of their respective legislatures, have resolved to conclude a compact for these purposes and have named as their commissioners Delph E. Carpenter, for the State of Colorado, and Stephen B. Davis, jr., for the State of New Mexico, who have agreed upon the following articles:

"ARTICLE I

"The State of Colorado, at its own expense, shall establish and maintain two permanent stream-gauging stations upon the La Plata River for the purpose of measuring and recording its flow, which shall be known as the Hesperus station and the interstate station, respectively.

"The Hesperus station shall be located at some convenient place near the village of Hesperus, Colo. Suitable devices for ascertaining and recording the volume of all diversions from the river above Hesperus station shall be established and maintained (without expense to the State of New Mexico), and whenever in this compact reference is made to the flow of the river at Hesperus station it shall be construed to include the amount of the concurrent diversions above said station.

"The interstate station shall be located at some convenient place within 1 mile of and above or below the interstate line. Suitable devices for ascertaining and recording the volume of water diverted by the Enterprise and Pioneer Canals, now serving approximately equal areas in both States, shall be established and maintained (without expense to the State of New Mexico), and whenever in this compact reference is made to the flow of the river at the interstate station it shall be construed to include one-half the volume of the concurrent diversions by such canals, and also the volume of any other water which may hereafter be diverted from said river in Colorado for use in New Mexico.

"Each of said stations shall be equipped with suitable devices for recording the flow of water in said river at all times between the 15th day of February and the 1st day of December of each year. The State engineers of the signatory States shall make provision for cooperative gauging at two stations, for the details of the operation, exchange of records and data, and publication of the facts.

"ARTICLE II

"The waters of the La Plata River are hereby equitably apportioned between the signatory States, including the citizens thereof, as follows:

"1. At all times between the 1st day of December and the 15th day of the succeeding February each State shall have the unrestricted right to the use of all water which may flow within its boundaries.

"2. By reason of the usual annual rise and fall, the flow of said river between the 15th day of February and the 1st day of December of each year shall be apportioned between the States in the following manner:

"(a) Each State shall have the unrestricted right to use all the waters within its boundaries on each day when the mean daily flow at the interstate station is 100 cubic feet per second, or more.

"(b) On all other days the State of Colorado shall deliver at the interstate station a quantity of water equivalent to one-half of the mean flow at the Hesperus station for the preceding day, but not to exceed 100 cubic feet per second.

"3. Whenever the flow of the river is so low that in the judgment of the State engineers of the States the greatest beneficial use of its waters may be secured by distributing all of its waters successively to the lands in each State in alternating periods, in lieu of delivery of water as provided in the second paragraph of this article, the use of the waters may be so rotated between the two States in such manner, for such periods, and to continue for such time as the State engineers may jointly determine.

"4. The State of New Mexico shall not at any time be entitled to receive nor shall the State of Colorado be required to deliver any water not then necessary for beneficial use in the State of New Mexico.

"5. A substantial delivery of water under the terms of this article shall be deemed a compliance with its provisions and compensating irregularities in flow or delivery shall be disregarded.

"ARTICLE III

"The State engineers of the States, by agreements from time to time, may formulate rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this compact, which, when signed and promulgated by them, shall be binding until amended by agreement between them or until terminated by written notice from one to the other.

"ARTICLE IV

"Whenever any official of either State is designated to perform any duty under this contract, such designation shall be interpreted to include the State official or officials upon whom the duties now performed by such official may hereafter devolve.

"ARTICLE V

"The physical and other conditions peculiar to the La Plata River and the territory drained and served thereby constitute the basis for this compact, and neither of the signatory States concedes the establishment of any general principle or precedent by the concluding of this compact.

"ARTICLE VI

"This compact may be modified or terminated at any time by mutual consent of the signatory States, and upon such termination all rights then established hereunder shall continue unimpaired.

"ARTICLE VII

"This compact shall become operative when approved by the legislature of each of the signatory States and by the Congress of the United States. Notice of approval by the legislatures shall be given by the governor of each State to the governor of the other State, and the President of the United States is requested to give notice to the governors of the signatory States of approval by the Congress of the United States.

"In witness whereof, the commissioners have signed this compact in duplicate originals, one of which shall be deposited with the secretary of state of each of the signatory States.

"Done at the city of Santa Fe, in the State of New Mexico, this 27th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

"DELPH E. CARPENTER.
"STEPHEN B. DAVIS, JR."

Mr. KING. Is the Federal Government interested in that in any way or is there any obligation incurred under it?

Mr. BURSUM. There is no obligation, Mr. President; but a compact was authorized by the Congress to be entered into between Colorado and New Mexico as to the waters of the La Plata. That compact has been agreed upon between the two States, and under the resolution it was required that the Congress should consent to the compact. There is no other obligation whatever. It is a matter which involves no interest to anyone except Colorado and New Mexico, which are using the water of the La Plata River, which flows through the two States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BATTLE FIELDS AROUND FREDERICKSBURG AND SPOTSYLVANIA COURTHOUSE, VA.

The bill (S. 3263) to provide for the inspection of the battle fields in and around Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Courthouse, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War:

(1) A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army;

(2) A veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the United States; and

(3) A veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the Confederate States of America.

SEC. 2. In appointing the members of the commission created by section 1 of this act the Secretary of War shall, as far as practicable, select persons familiar with the terrain of the battle fields in and around Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Courthouse, Va., and the historical events associated therewith.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the commission, acting under the direction of the Secretary of War, to inspect the battle fields in and around Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Courthouse, Va., in order to ascertain the feasibility of preserving and marking for historical and professional military study such fields. The commission shall submit a report of its findings to the Secretary of War not later than December 1, 1924.

SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 in order to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE NOT REQUIRED FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

The bill (S. 3276) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "longer," to strike out "needed for," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell or cause to be sold, either in whole or in two or more parts, as he may deem best for the interests of the United States, the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or any interest therein or appurtenant thereto, which said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale.

FIRST CORPS AREA

Maine: Narrows Island Reservation, Boothbay, Lincoln County.

Massachusetts: Fort Phoenix, near Fair Haven, Bristol County; Springfield Armory, two small tracts.

Rhode Island: Fort Greene, Newport.

SECOND CORPS AREA

New York: Fort Montgomery, Rouses Point, Clinton County; Sag Harbor Reservation, Sag Harbor, Long Island, Suffolk County.

FOURTH CORPS AREA

South Carolina: Bay Point Reservation on Phillips Island, Beaufort County; Hilton Head Reservation at south entrance to Port Royal Sound, Beaufort County.

Alabama: Fort Gaines, on east end of Dauphin Island, Mobile County.

Tennessee: Park Field, Millington.

SEVENTH CORPS AREA

Arkansas: Camp Pike Booster Pumping Station, near Little Rock.

SEC. 2. In the disposal of the aforesaid properties the Secretary of War shall in each and every case cause the same to be appraised, either as a whole or in two or more parts, by an appraiser or appraisers to be chosen by him for each tract, and in the making of such appraisal due regard shall be given to the value of any improvements thereon and to the historic interest of any part of said land.

SEC. 3. After such appraisal shall have been made and approved by the Secretary of War, notification of the fact of such appraisal shall be given by the Secretary of War to the governor of the State in which each such tract of land is located, and such State, or the county, or municipality in which such land is located shall in the order named have the option at any time within six months after the approval of such appraisal to acquire the same, or any part thereof which shall have been separately appraised, upon payment within said period of six months of the appraisal value: Provided, That the conveyance of said tract of land to such State, county, or municipality shall be upon the condition and limitation that said property shall be limited to use for public park purposes and upon cessation of such use shall revert to the United States without notice, demand, or action brought.

SEC. 4. Six months after the date of approval of said appraisal, if the option given in section 3 hereof shall not have been completely exercised, the Secretary of War shall sell or cause to be sold each of said properties at public sale, at not less than the appraised value, after advertisement in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary.

SEC. 5. A full report of transfers and sales made under the provisions of this act shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. The expense of appraisal, survey, advertising, and sale shall in each case be paid from the proceeds of the sale, whether made in accordance with section 3 or section 4 of this act, and the net proceeds thereof shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

SEC. 7. The authority granted by this act shall not repeal any prior legislative authority granted to the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of lands or property of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossd for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3285) to provide retirement for the Nurse Corps of the Army and Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

POSTHUMOUS APPOINTMENT AND PROMOTION OF ENLISTED MEN AND OFFICERS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 124) to provide for the posthumous appointment to commissioned grades of certain enlisted men and the posthumous promotion of certain commissioned officers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 25, after the word "any," to strike out "former," and in the same line, after the words "officer of the," to strike out "Regular," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue, or cause to be issued, an appropriate commission in the name of any person who, while in the military service of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany and Austria-Hungary, had been duly appointed to a commissioned grade, and, through no fault of his own, was unable to accept such commission by reason of his death in line of duty; and any such commission shall issue as of the date of such appointment, and any such person's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service to which he would have been promoted by such commission, from the date of such appointment to the date of his death.

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue, or cause to be issued, an appropriate commission in the name of any person who, while in the military service of the United States during the war between the United States and Germany and Austria-Hungary, may have been officially recommended for promotion to a commissioned grade, which recommendation shall have been duly approved by the Secretary of War, or by the commanding general American Expeditionary Forces, as the case may be, and who shall have been unable to receive and accept such commission by reason of his death in line of duty; and any such commission shall issue as of the date of such approval, and any such person's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service to which he would have been promoted by such commission, from the date of such approval to the date of his death.

SEC. 3. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue, or cause to be issued, an appropriate commission in the name of any officer of the Army of the United States who, after having been examined and found duly qualified for promotion, died since April 6, 1917, or shall die, in line of duty after the occurrence of the vacancy entitling him, by virtue of seniority, to such promotion and before the issue or acceptance of a commission therefor; and any such commission shall issue with rank as of the date of said vacancy, and any such officer's name shall be carried upon the records of the War Department as of the grade and branch of the service shown in such commission, from the date of such vacancy to the date of his death.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be entitled to receive any bonus, gratuity, pay, or allowances by virtue of any provision of this resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like just a brief explanation as to what this joint resolution does.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the purpose of Senate Joint Resolution 124 is briefly explained in the committee report, No. 558, and in detail in my remarks before the Senate on May 15.

My resolution in effect simply corrects the records of the War Department to show appointments and promotions that were actually made, but were not legally perfected because the officers and soldiers were killed in action or died in line of duty before the commissions reached them through the mails.

The War Department has on at least three separate occasions formally recommended that Congress authorize these corrections of the records.

The first two sections apply to officers and men who were killed in action or died in line of duty during the World War after their appointments or promotions had been duly approved, but before the commissions actually reached them.

The Senate on two occasions, once during the Sixty-sixth and once during the Sixty-seventh Congress, passed resolutions embodying provisions substantially identical with these two sections of my resolution, but they were never reported out from the House committee, due, I am informed, to objections to other provisions of the old resolutions which I have omitted from my resolution.

So far as I am aware, no exception was taken to the two sections incorporated in my resolution, the sole purpose of which is to do justice to the memory of a few brave officers and soldiers who sacrificed their lives in defense of their country and humanity.

The third section of my resolution covers similar cases of officers of the Regular Army, National Guard, and Officers' Reserve Corps that have occurred since the beginning of the World War or that may occur in the future. This section will render unnecessary special acts such as were passed in the cases of Major Haines, Lieutenant Colonel Butler, and Brigadier General Sigerfoos.

The last section of my resolution specifically provides that no person shall be entitled to receive any bonus, gratuity, pay, or allowances by virtue of any provision of the resolution. The passage of the resolution, therefore, entails no expense to the Government. It will, however, afford some measure of comfort to the parents, widows, and children of these brave officers and soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the case of an officer whose only son came of military age and was killed last month just the day before his commission was to be handed to him. I was up at the department this morning to see the Secretary of War, and, being unable to see him, I saw The Adjutant General, and he called attention to the pendency of this very bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. KING. Suppose the commission has not issued at the time of the decease of the soldier; does it then issue?

Mr. HARRIS. This joint resolution allows the Government to issue the commission. It has passed the Senate twice, and passed the last Congress before that unanimously. There was not an objection to it. The committee recommended it unanimously.

Mr. KING. I think the commission ought to be delivered if it has been made out; but if action has not been taken culminating in the issuing of the commission, that is another matter.

Mr. SMITH. My understanding of the joint resolution is that all the conditions requisite for the issuing of the commission would be fulfilled. In the case to which I refer, the boy had stood his examination, and the commission was ready to issue, and on account of his death it could not issue because the law stipulates that he must receive it in person.

This was a very peculiar situation. This young man was the only son of an officer, and he served under his father during the war, and he took up aviation; and on the aviation field in Texas the day after his final examination, while they were making out the papers, he went up at night, and he and one of the best pilots were up, and the plane fell, and both bodies were consumed. The father wrote and asked if some exception could not be made in that case, and I took up the matter with The Adjutant General this morning, and my attention was called to the pendency of this very bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that the joint resolution provides that commissions shall issue where the recommendations for promotion have been made and where the recommendations shall have been approved by the Secretary of War or by the Commanding General of the American Expeditionary Forces. All those things must have taken place before the death.

Mr. HARRIS. Congress has passed special bills just exactly like this. This joint resolution simply makes the law general and protects a man who has not a "pull" and can not get his bill through.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUBIE M. MOSLEY

The bill (S. 1725) for the relief of Rubie M. Mosley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$5,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Rubie M. Mosley, of San Antonio, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of her claim against the Government of the United States for injuries received by her by being run over and seriously injured by an automobile driven by an enlisted man of the United States Army, the automobile being in the use of Colonel Morton, the commander of the Government arsenal at San Antonio, Tex., on November 17, 1917.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2458) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Swedish Government for the losses sustained by its nationals in the sinking of the Swedish fishing boat Lilly was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I see two or three bills here for a purpose similar to that of this bill. I wonder whether those Governments owe us any money or not. If so, it seems to me this amount ought to be credited on any claim we have against them. I know nothing about the matter myself, and if no other Senator knows about it I will ask that this bill go over, and all bills similar to this.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, what bill is the Senator objecting to?

Mr. DIAL. I am not objecting; I am asking for information, if I can get any.

Mr. WILLIS. I can explain Senate bill 2719, Order of Business 595, to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I do not say that this bill ought to be rejected, but I do not know, and there does not seem to be anyone else here who knows. In that state of affairs, therefore, I will ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over; and, at the request of the Senator from South Carolina, Senate bill 2718 and Senate bill 2719 also will be passed over.

Mr. DIAL. They are in the same situation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, all of those bills were carefully considered by the Foreign Relations Committee. I remember that very distinctly. I think there is no objection to them. I know specifically about Senate bill 2719. If the Senator desires, I can undertake to explain Senate bill 2718.

Mr. DIAL. I do not want to object to the passage of the bills, but I am trying to find out whether those countries owe us anything or not. If so, the amount ought to be credited and not paid.

Mr. WILLIS. That question was not brought up in the committee. These claims were considered upon their merits.

Mr. DIAL. Then let them all go over.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator object to Senate bill 2719?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has objected to that bill, and it has been passed over.

The bill (H. R. 8209) to create the Inland Waterways Corporation for the purpose of carrying out the mandate and purpose of Congress as expressed in sections 201 and 500 of the transportation act, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROBATION SYSTEM IN UNITED STATES COURTS

The bill (S. 1042) to provide for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the courts of the United States having original jurisdiction of criminal actions, except in the District of Columbia, when it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the ends of justice and the best interests of the public, as well as the defendant, will be subserved thereby, shall have power, after conviction or after a plea of guilty or nolo contendere for any crime or offense not punishable by death or life imprisonment, to suspend the imposition or execution of sentence and to place the defendant upon probation for such period and upon such terms and conditions as they may deem best; or the court may impose a fine and may also place the defendant upon probation in the manner aforesaid. The court may revoke or modify any condition of probation, or may change the period of probation: Provided, That the period of probation, together with any extension thereof, shall not exceed five years.

While on probation the defendant may be required to pay in one or several sums a fine imposed at the time of being placed on probation and may also be required to make restitution or reparation to the aggrieved party or parties for actual damages or loss caused by the offense for which conviction was had, and may also be required to provide for the support of any person or persons for whose support he is legally responsible.

SEC. 2. That when directed by the court, the probation officer shall report to the court, with a statement of the conduct of the probationer while on probation. The court may thereupon discharge the probationer from further supervision and may terminate the proceedings against him, or may extend the probation, as shall seem advisable.

At any time within the probation period the probation officer may arrest the probationer without a warrant, or the court may issue a warrant for his arrest. Thereupon such probationer shall forthwith be taken before the court. At any time after the probation period, but within the maximum period for which the defendant might originally have been sentenced, the court may issue a warrant and cause the defendant to be arrested and brought before the court. Thereupon the court may revoke the probation or the suspension of sentence, and may impose any sentence which might originally have been imposed.

SEC. 3. That the judge of any United States court having original jurisdiction of criminal actions, except in the District of Columbia, may appoint one or more suitable persons to serve as probation officers within the jurisdiction and under the discretion of the judge making such appointment or of his successor. All such probation officers shall serve without compensation, except that in case it shall appear to any such judge that the needs of the service require that there should be a salaried probation officer such judge may appoint one such officer and shall fix the salary of such officer, subject to the approval of the Attorney General, in each case: Provided, That probation officers who are to receive salaries shall be appointed after competitive examination held in accordance with the laws and regulations of the civil service of the United States. Such judge may in his discretion remove any probation officer serving in his court. The appointment of probation officers shall be in writing and shall be entered on the records of the court of the judge making such appointment, and a copy of the order of appointment shall be delivered to the officer so appointed. Such court may allow any probation officer his actual expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties. Such salary and expenses when duly approved shall be paid from the appropriations for the courts in which such officer serves.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of a probation officer to investigate any case referred to him for investigation by the court in which he is serving and to report thereon to the court. The probation officer shall furnish to each person released on probation under his supervision a written statement of the conditions of probation and shall instruct him regarding the same. Such officer shall keep informed concerning the conduct and condition of each person on probation under his supervision and shall report thereon to the court placing such person on probation. Such officer shall use all suitable methods, not inconsistent with the conditions imposed by the court, to aid persons on probation and to bring about improvement in their conduct and condition. Each officer shall keep records of his work; shall keep accurate and complete accounts of all moneys collected from persons under his supervision; shall give receipts therefor and shall make at least monthly returns thereof; shall make such reports to the Attorney General as he may at any time require; and shall perform such other duties as the court may direct. A probation officer shall have the power of arrest that is now exercised by a deputy marshal.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before anybody objects to the consideration of this bill, let me say what it is.

The purpose of the bill is to provide for the establishment of a probation system in the Federal courts. Prior to the Killetts case, which was decided in December, 1916, it was customary to suspend sentence in the Federal courts; but under the decision rendered in that case that power was set aside. Chief Justice White at the time called attention to the importance of legislation on the subject, and the purpose of the bill is to make it possible to exercise this power in the Federal courts.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I was going to ask that House bill 8209, Order of Business 596, take the place of Senate bill 3161, Order of Business 573, a Senate bill of the same kind, but probably they had both better be on the calendar until one of them is disposed of. I do not know what the practice is about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we had better carry them on the calendar until we act on one or the other.

Mr. JONES of Washingon. I suppose we had better carry them on the calendar until we act on one of them.

GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC

The bill (H. R. 1869) for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS FOR NATURALIZATION

The bill (S. 2178) to relieve United States district judges from signing an order admitting, denying, or dismissing each petition for naturalization, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L. p. 596), as amended be, and the same hereby is, amended to the extent that the entry upon the court journal or the minutes of the court of any district court of the United States of the names of the petitioners and numbers of the petitions for naturalization granted, denied, or dismissed each day shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of such section and of said act which requires that "every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose," and the clerk of said court shall enter upon the back of each original petition for naturalization, the date and the volume and page of the record in which such order granting, denying, or dismissing the petition is so recorded.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, in regard to that bill, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] has offered an amendment which has been printed and which carries out the purposes of the bill. It is satisfactory to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], who introduced it, and to the committee, which reported it. I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky be acted upon. It virtually substitutes the amendment for the bill and puts it in better language, but the purpose is the same. It extends it to the State courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the votes by which the bill was passed through the regular parliamentary stages and finally passed be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the various votes are reconsidered.

The Senator from Missouri now offers, on behalf of the Senator from Kentucky, an amendment which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 5, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "amended" and to insert the following:

so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That every final hearing upon a petition for naturalization shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon a petition for naturalization shall be under the hand of the court and may be entered upon a record containing the names of the petitioners admitted, or denied, or continued, as the case may be, made by the clerk of the court upon a form furnished by the Bureau of Naturalization and verified by the signature of the representative of the Government from the Bureau of Naturalization attending the naturalization hearing, such record to be signed in duplicate by the presiding judge, one copy to be forwarded to the Bureau of Naturalization, the other copy to be filed by the clerk of the court as a part of the records of the court. Upon the final hearing of any petitioner for naturalization, the applicant and witnesses shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the title of the bill, striking from the title the words "United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the title will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to relieve district judges from signing an order admitting, denying, or dismissing each petition for naturalization."

The amendment was agreed to.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "BARON BERWICK"

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of Senate bill 2719, Order of Business 595, and I ask that that be returned to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the Senate return to the consideration of Senate bill 2719, Order of Business 595.

Mr. COPELAND. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York objects.

PASSPORT APPLICATIONS

The bill (S. 2172) to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 750), and to provide fees for executing applications for passports and for issuing the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 750), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. Hereafter there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $3 for executing each application for a passport and $7 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $3 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines buried abroad, whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does this bill increase the fees that are now required?

Mr. PEPPER. No; Mr. President, if I may answer the Senator's inquiry, it does not change the amounts of the fees. All fees received are returned, as now, into the Treasury. It merely changes the allocation of the portions of the fees, which at present is $1 to the Department of Justice and $9 to the State Department, and proposes an allotment of $3 to the Department of Justice and $7 to the State Department, as more nearly representing the pro rata of the work done by the different branches.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN MICHIGAN

The bill (S. 697) providing for the disposal of certain lands on Crooked and Pickerel Lakes, Mich., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after the word "that," to strike out "in" and to insert "upon"; in the same line, after the word "lands," to insert "erroneously omitted from the original survey"; in line 5, after the word "surveyed," to strike out "upon" and to insert "and represented upon the official plat of township 35 north, range 4 west, Michigan meridian, Michigan, approved February 9, 1841, on file in the General Land Office as a meandered lake, and said lake now appearing as two lakes, locally known as"; at the end of line 9, to strike out the comma and to insert the word "and"; in line 10, after the name "Pickerel Lake," to strike out "and the channel connecting such lakes"; in line 11, after the word "sections," to insert the numerals "20"; in the same line, after the numerals "29," to strike out "township 35 north, range 4 west, Michigan meridian, in the State of Michigan"; on page 2, line 4, after the words "filing of the," to strike out "official" and to insert "approved"; at the end of line 4, after the word "survey," to insert "in the United States land office at Marquette, Mich., to be appraised"; in line 6, after the word "at," to insert "not less than"; in the same line, after the word "acre," to insert a comma and the words "and that the State of Michigan be allowed to select such of the lands as may have inured to the State under the act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stats. L. p. 519)"; and in line 11, after the word "person," to insert "or the State of Michigan," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the survey of any public lands erroneously omitted from the original survey found to exist within the area heretofore surveyed and represented upon the official plat of township 35 north, range 4 west, Michigan meridian, Michigan, approved February 9, 1841, on file in the General Land Office as a meandered lake, and said lake now appearing as two lakes, locally know as Crooked Lake and Pickerel Lake, in sections 20, 21, 22, 27, 28, and 29, the owners of adjacent lands shall have a preference right to purchase such lands so surveyed for a period of 90 days after the filing of the approved plat of such survey in the United States land office at Marquette, Mich., to be appraised at not less than $1.25 per acre, and that the State of Michigan be allowed to select such of the lands as may have inured to the State under the act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. L. p. 519): Provided, That nothing herein contained shall have the effect of defeating the rights of any person or the State of Michigan which may have attached to such lands or any part thereof.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make all necessary regulations to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Seate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTASH DEPOSITS

The bill (S. 3047) authorizing joint investigations by the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Soils of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine the location and extent of potash deposits or occurrences in the United States and improved methods of recovering potash therefrom, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF OPTOMETRY

The bill (H. R. 3236) to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALL. I move that Senate bill 1027 be indefinitely postponed. It is similar to the bill just passed.

The motion was agreed to.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "BARON BERWICK."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we return to Order of Business 595, Senate bill 2719, to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the British Government on account of losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Baron Berwick as the result of a collision between that vessel and the United States steamship Iroquois—now Freedom—and a further collision with the United States destroyer Truxtun. I objected under a misapprehension.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the words "Baron Berwick," to insert the words "or any other parties pecuniarily interested," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be paid to the British Government, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as a matter of grace and without reference to the question of liability therefor, as full indemnity for the losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Baron Berwick, or any other parties pecuniarily interested, on account of a collision on August 22, 1918, between that vessel and the United States steamship Iroquois (now Freedom) and on account of a further collision on October 5, 1918, with the United States destroyer Truxtun, an amount equivalent to £6,200 on the date of the passage of this act, as recommended by the President in his message to Congress of February 28, 1924, printed as Senate Document No. 56, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERS FOR EMPLOYEES IN THE INDIAN FIELD SERVICE

The bill (S. 2799) to provide for quarters, fuel, and light for employees of the Indian field service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may allow quarters, fuel, and light to employees of the Indian Service whose compensation is not prescribed by law, the salaries of such employees to be fixed on this basis and the cost of providing quarters, fuel, and light to be paid from any funds which are applicable and available therefor: Provided, that this authorization shall be retroactive to the extent of approving any expenditures for such purposes heretofore authorized by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF STOCKBRIDGE INDIANS

The bill (S. 3111) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Stockbridge Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 2, after the word "payment," to insert the words "including gratuities," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of any treaty or agreement between the United States and the Stockbridge Tribe of Indians, or arising under or growing out of any act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs, which said Stockbridge Tribe may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of approval of this act, and such suit shall make the Stockbridge Tribe party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Stockbridges approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior; and said contract shall be executed in their behalf by a committee chosen by them under the direction and approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nation to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said Indian nation.

SEC. 3. In said suit the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against said Indian nation, but any payment including gratuities which may have been made by the United States upon any claim against the United States shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suit.

SEC. 4. That from the decision of the Court of Claims in any suit prosecuted under the authority of this act an appeal may be taken by either party as in other cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 5. That upon the final determination of any suit instituted under this act the Court of Claims shall decree such amount or amounts as it may find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys so employed by said Indian nation for the services and expenses of said attorneys rendered or incurred prior or subsequent to the date of approval of this act: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate amounts decreed by said Court of Claims for fees be in excess of $5,000, or in excess of a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount of recovery against the United States.

SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy.

SEC. 7. A copy of the petition shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interest of the United States in such case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TUITION OF INDIAN CHILDREN IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The bill (H. R. 4835) to pay tuition of Indian children in public schools was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, to strike out lines 6 to 12, in the following words, "pupils in State public schools during the fiscal years 1922 and 1923, and to expend for such purpose out of balances remaining from the appropriations for support of Indian day and industrial schools for such fiscal years, not to exceed a total of $30,000, without regard to the limitations heretofore placed by law upon the use of such appropriations for tuition of Indian pupils in public schools," and to insert "pupils in State public schools during the fiscal years 1921, 1922, and 1923, and to expend for such purpose whatever balances may remain from the appropriations for support of Indian day and industrial schools for such fiscal years, respectively, without regard to the limitations heretofore placed by law upon the use of such appropriations for tuition of Indian pupils in public schools: Provided, That so much as may be necessary of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1921 as may be required for the foregoing purpose is hereby appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay any claims which are ascertained to be proper and just, whether covered by contracts or not, for tuition of Indian pupils in State public schools during the fiscal years 1921, 1922, and 1923, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

QUINAIELT INDIAN RESERVATION

The bill (H. R. 5416) to authorize the setting aside of certain tribal lands within the Quinaielt Indian Reservation in Washington for lighthouse purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside for lighthouse purposes, lot 5 in section 13 and lot 1, section 24, township 21 north, range 13 west of Willamette meridian, with the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, in Washington, containing a total of 43.20 acres: Provided, That the Secretary of Commerce shall pay the Indians therefor, from the appropriation for the general expenses of the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year in which this reservation is made, such price for the lands set aside hereunder as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce: Provided further, That the funds thus derived shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians of the Quinaielt Reservation, and shall be subject to expenditure for their benefit in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby reserved for the use and benefit of the Indians of the Quinaielt Reservation in common all oil, gas, coal, or other minerals in the lands set aside hereunder for lighthouse purposes, and the right to prospect for and mine these commodities under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION TO INJURED EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 7041) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "act," to insert the words "if supported by competent evidence," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, be amended as follows:

That section 37 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 37. That if the original claim for compensation has been made within the time specified in section 20, the commission may, at any time, on its own motion or on application, review the award, and, in accordance with the facts found on such review, may end, diminish, or increase the compensation previously awarded, or, if compensation has been refused or discontinued, award compensation. In the absence of fraud or mistake in mathematical calculation, the finding of facts in, and the decision of the commission upon, the merits of any claim presented under or authorized by this act if supported by competent evidence shall not be subject to review by any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States. Any award heretofore made by the Compensation Commission under the act of September 7, 1916, for disability or death resulting from a personal injury sustained prior to the passage of this act, shall be valid, if such award would be valid if made in respect to an injury sustained after the passage of this act."

SEC. 2. That section 40 of said act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 40. That wherever used in this act—

"The singular includes the plural and the masculine includes the feminine.

"The term 'employee' includes all civil employees of the United States and of the Panama Railroad Co.

"The term 'commission' shall be taken to refer to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission provided for in section 28.

"The term 'physician' includes surgeons.

"The term 'monthly pay' shall be taken to refer to the monthly pay at the time of the injury.

"The term 'injury' includes, in addition to injury by accident, any disease proximately caused by the employment.

"The term 'compensation' includes the money allowance payable to an employee or his dependents and any other benefits paid for out of the compensation fund: Provided, however, That this shall not in any way reduce the amount of the monthly compensation payable in case of disability or death."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY

The bill (H. R. 169) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 73 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved June 12, 1916," and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved June 12, 1916, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That the State of Colorado shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Colorado. Terms of the district court shall be held at Denver on the first Tuesday in May and November, at Pueblo on the first Tuesday in April, at Grand Junction on the second Tuesday in September, at Montrose on the third Tuesday in September, at Durango on the fourth Tuesday in September, and at Sterling on the second Tuesday in June: Provided, That if at the time of the holding of a term of said court in any year in either of said cities of Grand Junction, Durango, and Sterling, Colo., there is no business to be transacted by said court, the term may be adjourned or continued by order of the judge of said court in chambers at Denver, Colo.: Provided further, That the marshal and clerk of said court shall each, respectively, appoint at least one deputy to reside at and who shall maintain an office at each of the five said places where said court is to be held by the terms of this act: Provided further, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Sterling are furnished free of expense to the United States."

Mr. KING. Before House bill 169 is passed——

Mr. PHIPPS. It merely provides for terms of the United States district court to be held at Sterling, Colo., in the northeastern section of the State. There are four places aside from the capital city where court may now be held, but they are all in the southern or western sections, across the Rocky Mountain Range. There is only one provided for in the northeastern section of the State.

Mr. KING. I was attracted by this language, which caught my eye:

Provided further, That the marshal and clerk of said court shall each, respectively, appoint at least one deputy to reside and who shall maintain an office at each of the said five places where said court is to be held by the terms of this act.

Mr. PHIPPS. There are four at the present time.

Mr. KING. Does that create new positions?

Mr. PHIPPS. One position, an assistant deputy marshal for Sterling, Colo. The other four are located at Pueblo, Montrose, Gunnison, and one other place on the western slope. This will be the only one in the northeastern section of the State. It is the only one provided for in this bill, and it is necessary, particularly with the number of liquor cases that have to be cared for at the present time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPENSATION TO INJURED EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 2508) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Senate bill 2508 is the same as House bill 7041, which we have just passed. Therefore I ask that Senate bill 2508 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether he understands that the bill which was passed a moment ago, to which Senate bill 2508 is related, changes the general scope and purpose of the employees' compensation act?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; it does to some extent. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does it enlarge the character of the injuries or increase the number of injuries for which compensation may be made?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think it does.

Mr. ROBINSON. It merely embraces what are known as occupational diseases.

Mr. KING. I shall move to have the vote by which the bill was passed reconsidered.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his motion now or hereafter.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The bill (S. 862) amending section 1 of the interstate commerce act was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph (4) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any such carrier to demand, charge, or collect from any person for transportation, subject to the provisions of this act, in any parlor car or sleeping car, any fare in addition to that demanded, charged, or collected for transportation in a day coach, but this shall not prevent just and reasonable charges for the use of accommodations in parlor cars or sleeping cars by companies owning such cars."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAIRY BUREAU IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The bill (H. R. 7113) to establish a dairy bureau in the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Department of Agriculture a bureau to be known as the bureau of dairying.

SEC. 2. That a chief of the bureau of dairying shall be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be subject to the general direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. He shall devote his time to the investigation of the dairy industry and the dissemination of information for the promotion of the dairy industry.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of Agriculture and the chief of the bureau of dairying to carry out the purposes of this act the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to transfer to the bureau of dairying such activities of the Department of Agriculture as he may designate which relate primarily to the dairy industry and to employ such additional persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and the activities of the bureau of dairying such sums of money as Congress may deem necessary are hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to such sums provided for in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be in full force and effect on and after July 1, 1924.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. The bill has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry unanimously and has been passed by the House. It does not require an appropriation, and is a bill which has been recommended by all the dairy interests of the country.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO PHOENIX, ARIZ.

The bill (S. 3093) grating certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal, park, recreation, playground, or public-convenience purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 10, before the word "sections" to insert the word "of"; and on page 2, line 22, to strike out "easements, on said lands" and insert new language, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the south half of the north half and all the south half of section 13, the southwest quarter, the west half of the southeast quarter, the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter, section 14, the southeast quarter, section 21, the east half of the northwest quarter, the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter, the east half of the northeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter, and all of south half, section 22, all of sections 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, township 1 south, range 2 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona. The south half, section 1, the south half, section 2, the south half, section 7, the south half, section 8, the south half section 9, the south half, the northeast quarter, section 10, all of sections 11, 12, northwest quarter section 13, all of sections 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 30, township 1 south, range 3 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona. The west half of the southwest quarter, section 5, the south half and the south half of the northwest quarter, section 6, township 1 south, range 4 east, Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, be, and the same are hereby, granted to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal, park, recreation, playground, or public convenience purposes, upon the condition that the city shall make payment for such land at the rate of $1.25 per acre to the receiver of the United States land office, Phoenix, Ariz., within six months after the approval of this act: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found at any time in the land, and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same: Provided further, That the grant herein is made subject to any valid existing claim or easements, and that the lands hereby granted shall be used by the city of Phoenix, Ariz., only for the purposes herein indicated, and if the said land, or any part thereof, shall be abandoned for such use, said land or such part shall revert to the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to declare such a forfeiture of the grant and to restore said premises to the public domain, if at any time he shall determine that the city has abandoned the land for the uses herein indicated, and such order of the Secretary shall be final and conclusive, and thereupon and thereby said premises shall be restored to the public domain and freed from the operation of this grant.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal, park, and other purposes."

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS

The bill (H. R. 6426) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. DIAL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SCHOOL SITE FOR UTE INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 2882) to provide for the reservation of certain land in Utah as a school site for Ute Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States, and set apart and reserved for and as a school site for the benefit of the Ute Indians, an unsurveyed tract of land in San Juan County, Utah, located in township 36 south, range 21 east, Salt Lake meridian, approximately the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 7.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAIUTE INDIANS

The bill (H. R. 2884) providing for the reservation of certain lands in Utah for certain bands of Paiute Indians was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States, and set apart and reserved for the use, benefit, and occupancy of certain bands of Paiute Indians, and such other Indians of this tribe as the Secretary of the Interior may see fit to settle thereon, subject, however, to any valid existing rights of any persons thereto, the tracts of land in the State of Utah, particularly described as follows: Sections 21, 22, 23, and 24, township 29 south, range 18 west, Salt Lake meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF WILD GAME ANIMALS AND WILD BIRDS IN ALASKA

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 127) to provide that the powers and duties conferred upon the Governer of Alaska under existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska be transferred to and be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That on and after July 1, 1924, the powers and duties heretofore conferred upon the governor of Alaska by existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska are hereby conferred upon and shall be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture; and all money available or appropriated in any act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, for carrying into effect the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," including salaries, traveling expenses of game wardens, and all other necessary expenses, is hereby transferred to the credit of the Department of Agriculture to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for such purposes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLUMAS AND LASSEN NATIONAL FORESTS, CALIFORNIA

The bill (H. R. 656) to add certain lands to the Plumas and Lassen National Forests in California was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described lands are hereby added to the national forest indicated and made subject to all laws applicable to that national forest: To the Plumas National Forest—township 26 north, range 7 east, section 6, southeast quarter; township 27 north, range 7 east, section 22, south half northeast quarter; section 23, south half northwest quarter; township 27 north, range 6 east, section 4, northeast quarter northwest quarter; township 28 north, range 6 east, section 33, west half southwest quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, all of Mount Diablo base and meridian. To the Lassen National Forest— township 29 north, range 7 east, section 21, northwest quarter northeast quarter, north half northwest quarter, southeast quarter northwest quarter; section 29, northeast quarter northwest quarter, northeast quarter southwest quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter; section 34, northeast quarter southeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, northeast quarter northwest quarter, west half northeast quarter, northeast quarter northeast quarter, all of Mount Diablo base and meridian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES SWANSON

The bill (H. R. 1442) authorizing issuance of patent to Charles Swanson was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Charles Swanson, of Gig Harbor, Wash., patent to lots 3 and 4, section 5, township 20 north, range 2 east, Willamette meridian, the same comprising 9.57 acres, and being part of Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation, Nos. 23 and 24, in the State of Washington, upon presentation by the said Charles Swanson of proof that he has resided upon the land for a period of eight years, and upon payment by him of a sum of money equal to the appraised value thereof as fixed under authority of the act entitled "An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the State of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 3, 1916 (39 Stat. L. p. 342), but not less than $10 per acre.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POINT OF WOODS RANGE LIGHTS, MICHIGAN

The bill (H. R. 4481) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to exchange land formerly used as a site for the Point of Woods Range Lights, Michigan, for other lands in the vicinity, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant and convey to Robert P. Hudson, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., all of that certain lot or piece of land acquired by the United States through condemnation proceedings by an order dated January 18, 1909, of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, Northern Division, described as follows:

That part of lot 1, section 25, township 45 north, range 2 east, beginning at a point marked by a stone monument bearing south 40 degrees, 52 minutes, 50.07 feet distant from the center of the front range light mast, and running north 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds west, 408.77 feet; thence north 43 degrees, twelve minutes, 37.87 seconds east, 100 feet; thence south 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds east, 453 feet, more or less, to the shore of the St. Marys River; thence along said shore in a southwesterly direction to the point of intersection of said shore with a line bearing south 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds east from the point of beginning; thence along said last line north 46 degrees, 47 minutes, 22.13 seconds west, 54 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning; for and in consideration of the said Robert P. Hudson granting and conveying to the United States in fee simple, free and clear of all mortgages, liens, encumbrances, taxes, or claims of any kind whatsoever, the following-described premises:

That part of lot 1, section 25, township 45 north, range 2 east, beginning at a point 20 feet south 44° 16′ west from the center of the cast-iron mast supporting the Point of Woods Range Front Light, center of said mast being 206 feet north 38° 50′ east from the location of the old front light of the Point of Woods Range; thence north 45° 44′ west 330 feet; thence north 44° 16′ east 60 feet more or less, to the St. Marys River; thence southeasterly along the shore of the St. Marys River to its intersection with a line through the point of beginning and bearing south 45° 44′ east; thence north 45° 44′ west along the above line 100 feet, more or less to the point of beginning, all bearings given being from the true north.

Provided, That the Attorney General shall first examine the title of the said Robert P. Hudson to premises to be conveyed to the United States as aforesaid and shall furnish his written opinion in favor of the validity thereof: Provided further, That the said Robert P. Hudson, within such reasonable time after the passage of this bill as may be determined by the Secretary of Commerce shall deed to the United States the premises herein described to be conveyed by him: And provided further, That the said Robert P. Hudson shall furnish, free of expense to the United States, requisite abstracts, official certifications, and evidences of title that the Attorney General may deem necessary, and that any expense necessary to be incurred by the United States in effecting this exchange shall be payable from the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service" for the fiscal years in which such expenses are incurred.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN THE COLUMBIA OR MOSES RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (H. R. 7109) to authorize acquisition of unreserved public lands in the Columbia or Moses Reservation, State of Washington, under acts of March 28, 1912, and March 3, 1877, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all unreserved public lands within the former Columbia or Moses Reserve, in the State of Washington, made subject to acquisition under the homestead laws by the act of Congress approved July 4, 1884 (23 Stat., p. 76), be, and they are hereby, made subject to acquisition under the isolated tract (act of March 28, 1912), desert land (act of March 3, 1877), and other acts applicable generally to the public domain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CROOK NATIONAL FOREST, RECREATIONAL AREA, ARIZ.

The bill (H. R. 498) providing for a recreational area within the Crook National Forest, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, in his discretion, upon application by the Board of Supervisors of Gila County, Ariz., to designate and segregate for recreational development any lands, not to exceed 640 acres, within the Crook National Forest, Ariz., which in his opinion, are available for such purpose, and he is hereby authorized to enter into such form of cooperation with said board of supervisors as in his opinion will permit the fullest use of the lands for recreational purposes without interfering with the objects for which the national forest was established. Lands so designated and segregated, under the provisions of this act, shall not be subject to the mining laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that there has been no order made yet as to whether a recess or an adjournment will be taken at 11 o'clock.

Mr. CURTIS. I intended to ask unanimous consent that when the business of the Senate is concluded to-day a recess shall be taken until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. KING. Will not the Senator make it 12 o'clock? We have some committee meetings to attend.

Mr. CURTIS. It is desired that the Agricultural appropriation bill shall be brought before the Senate in the morning at 11.

Mr. WARREN. I hope there will be no objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas. Otherwise we shall have to hold a session to-morrow night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-night it take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN RIO ARRIBA AND TAOS COUNTIES, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 3024) providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands within Rio Arriba and Taos Counties, N. Mex., known as the Las Trampas grant, by exchanging therefor timber, within the exterior boundaries of any national forest situated within the State of New Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to all or any part of privately owned lands, situated within the Las Trampas grant, located within the counties of Rio Arriba and Taos, State of New Mexico, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture public interests will be benefited thereby, and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize the grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber within the national forests of the same State; the values in each case to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the grantor as a fair compensation. Timber given in exchange shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That lands offered for exchange hereunder and not covered by public land surveys shall be identified by metes and bounds surveys and that such surveys and the plats and field notes thereof shall be made by employees of the United States Forest Service and approved by the United States Surveyor General.

SEC. 3. That any lands conveyed to the United States under the provisions of this act shall, upon acceptance of the conveyance thereof, become and be a part of Carson National Forest.

SEC. 4. That before any exchange of lands for timber as above provided is effected, notice of such exchange proposal, describing the lands involved therein, shall be published once each week for four consecutive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county in which such lands so to be conveyed to the United States are situated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF HOMESTEAD LAWS

The bill (S. 2979) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws so as to allow certain credit in lieu of permanent improvements for the period of enlistment to soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 7, to strike out "$1.25" and to insert "60 cents," and in lines 7 and 8 to strike out the words "acre, less 4 cents per acre for each month of military service for which he is allowed credit for residence on the land," and to insert the words "acre: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate value of improvements be less than $200," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who is or may be entitled to credit on the residence required of homesteaders under sections 2304 and 2305, Revised Statutes of the United States, and under the terms of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1919, and all acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, by reason of military service, and who has made or shall make entry of a homestead under the stock raising homestead act of December 29, 1916, shall be entitled to perfect final proof and receive patent to such homestead when he shall have resided on the land and erected a habitable house thereon as now required by law, and has made permanent improvements on the land, having aggregate value of 60 cents per acre: Provided, That in no case shall the aggregate value of improvements be less than $200.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the calendar.

PERLEY MORSE & CO.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that we return to Order of Business 439, Senate bill 2124, for the relief of Perley Morse & Co.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate return to Senate bill 2124. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be reported.

The bill was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike of "$882.50" and to insert in lieu thereof "$859.39," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Perley Morse & Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $859.39 in settlement of the claim of said company for overtime work performed in connection with services rendered the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation of the newsprint paper industry during the month of May, 1918, in order to complete the work in time to be of practical use to the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. These people were the expert accountants employed by the Federal Trade Commission during the war to investigate the newsprint paper industry. We have letters here from the commission saying that this sum is clearly due these people. I think the bill should be paid. It amounts to $859.39 under the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 11 o'clock having arrived, the Senate, pursuant to its order, stands in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 22 (legislative day of May 20), 1924

EXAMINER IN CHIEF IN THE PATENT OFFICE

Webster S. Ruckman, of Michigan, to be an examiner in chief in the Patent Office, vice Richard E. Marine, resigned, effective at the close of May 26, 1924.

POSTMASTERS

ARIZONA

Robert B. Anderson to be postmaster at Clifton, Ariz., in place of W. B. Kelly, resigned.

COLORADO

Charles V. Engert to be postmaster at Lyons, Colo., in place C. V. Engert. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Oscar L. Morris to be postmaster at La Salle, Colo., in place of O. L. Morris. Incumbent's commission expired February 18, 1924.

HAWAII

William K. Kelli to be postmaster at Wahlawa, Hawaii, in place of Elizabeth Perkins, resigned.

IDAHO

Elmer C. Hull to be postmaster at Wilder, Idaho, in place of C. E. Mitchell. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

Ned Jenness to be postmaster at Nampa, Idaho, in place of G. C. Jacobsen. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

ILLINOIS

Arthur Justus to be postmaster at Warren, Ill., in place of Arthur Justus. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Le Roy Gammon to be postmaster at Thebes, Ill., in place of H. S. Rolwing. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

Minor S. Miller to be postmaster at Pearl City, Ill., in place of J. L. Mishler. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

Guy A. Meyers to be postmaster at Milledgeville, Ill., in place of C. D. Miller. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

Joseph D. Robertson to be postmaster at Barrington, Ill., in place of J. D. Robertson. Incumbent's commission expires May 28, 1924.

IOWA

Letha Doughten to be postmaster at Woolstock, Iowa, in place of Letha Doughten. Office became third class January 1, 1923.

Solomon T. Grove to be postmaster at Plover, Iowa, in place of S. T. Grove. Office became third class April 1, 1924.

KANSAS

Charles F. Schafer to be postmaster at Jewell, Kans., in place of B. M. Palmer. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

KENTUCKY

Thoughty Y. Oliver to be postmaster at Scottsville, Ky., in place of B. L. Stamps. Incumbent's commission expired September 30, 1923.

Henry O. Hausgen to be postmaster at Anchorage, Ky., in place of T. C. Hobbs. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

LOUISIANA

Walter C. Miller to be postmaster at Logansport, La., in place of G. D. Nash, resigned.

Harriet B. Rice to be postmaster at Madisonville, La., in place of H. R. Rice. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1924.

Mildred P. Prescott to be postmaster at Lutcher, La., in place of A. L. Woods. Incumbent's commission expires June 3, 1924.

MAINE

John W. Knapp to be postmaster at Stratton, Me., in place of R. L. Lisherness. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

Vernon H. Lowell to be postmaster at Bowdoinham, Me., in place of F. K. Jack. Incumbent's commission expires June 5, 1924.

MASSACHUSETTS

Albert S. Hopkins to be postmaster at Norton, Mass., in place of W. W. McLehose. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

MICHIGAN

James R. Flood to be postmaster at Crystal Falls, Mich., in place of W. J. Kelly. Incumbent's commission expired July 28, 1923.

MONTANA

Lee Jellison to be postmaster at Hobson, Mont., in place of M. J. Keenan. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

NEBRASKA

Otto J. Zuelow to be postmaster at Schuyler, Nebr., in place of F. J. Kovar. Incumbent's commission expired April 9, 1924.

Anton B. Helms to be postmaster at Randolph, Nebr., in place of A. B. Helms. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Robert L. Hart to be postmaster at Cozad, Nebr., in place of Hans Jensen. Incumbent's commission expired April 9, 1924.

Stanley E. Hemenway to be postmaster at Clearwater, Nebr., in place of C. A. Payne. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Guy W. Green to be postmaster at Bloomington, Nebr., in place of T. J. Lane. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Elmer H. Doering to be postmaster at Battle Creek, Nebr., in place of M. G. Doering. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

Harry C. McClellan to be postmaster at Arlington, Nebr., in place of J. C. Badger. Incumbent's commission expires June 4, 1924.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Maurice R. Wright to be postmaster at North Hampton, N. H., in place of M. R. Wright. Office became third class July 1, 1923.

NEW YORK

Ettie M. Babcock to be postmaster at Canaan, N. Y., in place of R. A. Weir, resigned.

NORTH DAKOTA

Michael Coyne to be postmaster at Starkweather, N. Dak., in place of Michael Coyne. Incumbent's commission expired April 23, 1924.

Myron B. Fallgatter to be postmaster at Kintyre, N. Dak., in place of M. B. Fallgatter. Office became third class April 1, 1924.

OHIO

Jerome Goodhart to be postmaster at Brewster, Ohio, in place of J. H. C. Goodhart. Incumbent's commission expired May 10, 1924.

OKLAHOMA

John H. Durnil to be postmaster at Picher, Okla., in place of E. H. Barrett. Incumbent's commission expired November 19, 1923.

PENNSYLVANIA

Martin T. Weaver to be postmaster at Strasburg, Pa., in place of J. F. Johnston. Incumbent's commission expired August 5, 1923.

Paul L. Boyd to be postmaster at Mars, Pa., in place of M. M. Little. Incumbent's commission expired May 18, 1924.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Wallace H. Meng to be postmaster at Johnsonville, S. C., in place of Chivas Prosser, resigned.

Andrew R. Barrett to be postmaster at Rock Hill, S. C., in place of E. E. Poag. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1924.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Sidney H. Dains to be postmaster at Marion, S. Dak., in place of S. H. Dains. Incumbent's commission expired April 13, 1924.

TENNESSEE

Samuel W. Ingersoll to be postmaster at Decherd, Tenn., in place of J. L. Haynes. Incumbent's commission expired September 5, 1923.

TEXAS

Hal M. Knight to be postmaster at Sterling City, Tex., in place of H. M. Knight. Incumbent's commission expired May 6, 1924.

VIRGINIA

Hugh H. Slemp to be postmaster at Big Stone Gap, Va., in place of G. E. Gilly. Incumbent's commission expired August 15, 1923.

WASHINGTON

Trygve Lien to be postmaster at Stanwood, Wash., in place of William Rouse. Incumbent's commission expired August 29, 1923.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 22 (legislative day of May 20), 1924

MEMBERS OF THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD

Lewis J. Pettijohn. Merton L. Corey.
Elmer S. Landes. Edward E. Jones.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

George E. Martin to be chief justice of the court of appeals, District of Columbia.

MEMBERS OF RENT COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

William F. Gude. Oliver Metzerott.
Richard S. Whaley. Thomas E. Peeney.
Mrs. Clara Sears Taylor.

POSTMASTERS

MAINE

Alvin H. Perley, Charleston.
Arthur Donkus, Lisbon.

MASSACHUSETTS

Fred W. Trasher, Marblehead.

VIRGINIA

Emmitt A. Collins, Appalachia.
James O. Fant, Brandy (late Brandy Station).
Sam P. Bowen, Duffield.
Charles C. Peery, North Tazewell.
Herbert C. Bolton, St. Paul.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, May 22, 1924

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as we wait at the threshold of duty, impress us with a solemn sense of our most sacred obligations. May it be a most serious thought with us that only through righteous and conscientious service to our country can our Republic live in honor and power and be a blessing to all men. Make it appear unto us, O Lord, that it is divinely wonderful to work and toil for others and thus influence and direct human destiny. We bless and praise Thee with unmurmuring faith for all Thy condescending mercies and for all Thy gracious providences. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Welch, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) authorizing and permitting the State of Arkansas to construct, maintain, and use permanent buildings, rifle ranges, and utilities at Camp Pike, Ark., as are necessary for the use and benefit of the National Guard of the State of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7877) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6820) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 8, 25, 28, 40, 43, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, and 60 to the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9192, just messaged over from the Senate, to agree to amendments Nos. 1 and 2 and disagree to No. 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the deficiency appropriation bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 9192. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendments: Page 1, line 2, insert: "District courts. Supreme Court, District of Columbia: For fees of jurors, $16,000; 60 per cent of said sum shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment, and I wish to say in that connection we have already had hearings before the Committee on Appropriations in connection with this, and it is a very essential amendment, because it is required to pay jurors' fees that are already assembled, and there are seven courts in session in the District now, including two grand juries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Page 2, after line 2, insert: "Rent Commission: Any unexpended balance of appropriation for rent commissioners of the District are hereby reappropriated and made available during the life of said commission."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to concur in the Senate amendment. I yield the gentleman from Texas five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] would make such a motion. If it were not for having this distinguished gentleman at the head of our Committee on Appropriations I would have little hope of the Government effecting any economy whatever this year, but when he moves to pay a bunch of men and employees money when they can not render any service of value whatever to the Government, I am surprised.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. The Supreme Court of the United States of America has spoken on this question, and they have held that they would judicially declare no emergency existing and they have held this Rent Commission to be unconstitutional, and yet we have gone on and passed an unconstitutional act and attempted to extend it another year. And an official of the Government of the United States has sought to take part through action of an Assistant Attorney General before the courts, asking that the courts not interfere; yet the courts, the bulwark of the liberty of the people, have spoken, for just day before yesterday Justice Stafford, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, enjoined these rent commissioners from performing their duties, and yet in a deficiency bill we are now appropriating money to pay their salaries and the salaries of their employees when they can not move a peg. What is the use of it? Why this waste? Why this extravagance of the people's money when the taxpayers now are overburdened? They are putting one over on the gentleman from Illinois in this instance. He is sleeping on his rights, for I would have expected him to have gotten up here and protested against it and stopped it.

The President of the United States ought to stop it. I will tell you what you are going to see for the next 12 months. You are going to see these five rent commissioners and their attorneys and employees down there drawing their big salaries every month from the Public Treasury and doing absolutely nothing, because the courts are not going to let them do anything. The courts have spoken. The courts say they shall not act, the courts have restrained them, and every time they attempt to act you will see an injunction, and who is going to pay all these enormous injunction expenses?

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Who are to pay the cost of these injunction cases that are rendered against the Government of the United States? The tax-burdened people are to pay for it, and I am not going to sit here quietly in my seat in this House and let this travesty on justice be perpetrated here upon the floor and not raise my voice in protest. It ought to stop.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that these courts are going a long way in recent days, especially in view of the fact that judges have tried to set aside the pardoning power of the President of the United States and——

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the distinguished jurist who presided over the Oklahoma court with distinction that I am glad that the courts will not permit even the President of the United States to set aside the laws. I want to say to him that if it were not for the courts of the country the rights of the poor people would not be protected. It is the courts of the country that protect the poor people. The rich people can hire the best legal talent in the world. It is the courts, at last, which protect the poor man, and I hope the gentleman will never say anything against the courts of the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in opposition to the enactment of the law, but the law has been enacted, and we have that mandate now to make the appropriation. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is asked for.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to Senate amendment No. 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 2, after line 2, insert:

"SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

"That additional taxes amounting to $74,657.70, together with all penalties and other charges thereon, assessed by the Treasury Department against the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased, late of Detroit, Mich., which estate has been closed, the executors discharged, and the residue paid over to the Smithsonian Institution as an endowment for the Freer Gallery of Art, presented to the Nation by the said Charles L. Freer, are hereby canceled and the Treasury Department is hereby authorized and directed to remit any further taxes, penalties, or charges which may hereafter be found due from the said estate."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House disagree to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] use some of his time?

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ASWELL. How much time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has consumed 59 minutes, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] 3 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] has consumed an hour and 12 minutes. That is a total of 2 hours and 14 minutes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Under the unanimous consent adopted the committee remains in session until 7 o'clock. Is that the situation?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is a member of the committee and has given very careful consideration to the bill. He ought to have more Members here to hear him. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-four Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise; and on that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the committee rise, and on that motion he demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the chairman appointed Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. ASWELL to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the committee rising will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 99.

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred and one Members are present—a quorum. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is recognized.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we are meeting to-day for the further consideration of the McNary-Haugen bill.

You know as a rule I am glad to hear from home. Every week as the papers come in from my district I sit down and read them. It is like getting a letter from the folks back in my district. But in recent months I have not found so much news in those papers; I did not find so much that made me happy, but I have found a great many things that have made me sad. I have found that page after page of the newspapers, not only in my district but in other districts throughout the Middle West, are filled with legal notices of sheriff's sales. Those sheriff's sales are because of mortgages that have become due and the farmer is unable to pay. In a great many cases those notices are in there because the tax collector has been unable to collect his taxes, and those farms are being sold for taxes.

Those are the conditions that confront the American people to-day in that country which I have described. Throughout the Central West, the Northwest—practically three-fourths of this Union—the farmers are in bad condition. The years have gone by, one by one, since I have come into the membership of this House, and in those years you have always found me ready to vote for and support any proposition that came before this body for the purpose of helping agriculture in any particular part of this Union.

I like to look into your faces. I have friends here. I have friends here who do not agree with me upon this measure in which I am so deeply interested. From down yonder in the sunny South I have friends in this House who do not agree with me and who are not supporting this bill for agriculture. Let me say to them and to all the Members of this House that in the years I have been with you I have always stood for every proposition before us to develop that great southern country. I have been with you in your fight against the boll weevil, and in your fight against the citrus canker, and in your fight against the pink boll weevil on the Texas border, and in the fight in behalf of diversified agriculture in that great country. I have been with you on all those great propositions. Now we have before us a measure that affects agriculture, and it is needed in our section of the country, and if relief is not obtained our farmers will go down to distress and ruin. Will you not come over and help our Government to do something for agriculture and especially when you are not directly affected in your crop, although you are indirectly affected by reason of the fact that whenever we increase the purchasing power of the farmers of this land we are helping the cotton factory, we are helping the cotton industry, we are helping every industry throughout the length and breadth of the country?

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take any great length of your time; it is not my purpose to make a long speech, because I say to you that I have demands for time upon our side of the House in favor of this bill, and it would be unjust to them for me to consume a great amount of your time.

I want to speak briefly, if you please, and especially shall I talk with reference to the speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], who delivered his address here night before last. One of his first declarations was that this is a price-fixing bill, and he argued at some length against it upon that ground. The proponents of this measure do not admit that it is a price-fixing bill, and yet, if for argument's sake we were to waive that and were to admit that it is a price-fixing bill, what of it? This is not the first time, by any means, that bills have been passed through the Congress of the United States fixing prices. When you pass a bill through Congress on the subject of the tariff you are fixing prices. By the passage of this act we expect to give to the tiller of the soil a ratio price, which is an increased price for his basic agricultural products. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], who argues against this bill because it is a price-fixing bill, on the 21st of April introduced a bill of his own in which he seeks to fix the price of No. 1 northern spring wheat at Minneapolis at $1.65 per bushel. But I am not going to take up your time on questions of this kind, because there are other things far more important.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] makes a strong argument on the proposition of overproduction by taking the position that if we pass the McNary-Haugen bill and guarantee to the American farmers a ratio price for their various basic agricultural products that they will immediately begin to increase their production of the commodities upon which they receive this ratio price. But I want to call the attention of this House to the real provisions of this measure. It is a farm-making measure; it is a measure which will be kept up by the farmers themselves, and any large increase in production will reflect back upon the farmer himself. If we were by increased production to increase the amount of wheat in this country until we would have 100,000,000 bushels more of wheat exported, the farmer of this country would be the sufferer by reason of that fact, because the equalization fee which he must pay under this bill would be increased. If we now had an equalization fee of 15 cents, an additional surplus export of 100,000,000 bushels would increase that amount to at least 30 cents; and when the farmer does that he himself is the sufferer by reason of that fact.

It must be borne in mind by the Members of the House throughout the consideration of this measure that the farmer himself pays the losses of the corporation from exports, and he pays also the expenses of the corporation. He does this by the payment of the equalization fee, and the greater the loss entailed through exports and the greater the expenses of the corporation the larger will be this fee, hence the less will be the farmer's net return in the transaction. The whole bill is based on the theory that the Government must supply the capital stock upon which the corporation will do business and that the farmers of the country will protect the Government in its investment, so that at the end of the period the $200,000,000 may be returned to the Treasury without the loss of a single dollar.

In this connection let me say that Mr. VOIGT, in the bill which he offered in the committee as a substitute for the McNary-Haugen bill, applies the same provisions as in the McNary-Haugen bill and makes the bill applicable to wheat only. He fixes in his bill a charge of 15 per cent, which shall be collected from the wheat producers under such rules, regulations, and contracts as the corporation may prescribe.

He has almost the identical language that is found in the McNary-Haugen bill for the collection of the equalization fee, and yet further on in his speech he calls your attention to the evasions that would be made under the McNary-Haugen bill, and yet those same evasions, if they can be made under the McNary-Haugen bill, can be made and will be made under the bill introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], with the exception, of course, that his bill applies only to wheat, while the other bill applies to other commodities.

Mr. VOIGT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUBEY. I would like to yield, but I must make my speech, and I must set this thing out at length. When I get through with that, I will be glad to yield if I have the time. When the gentleman from Wisconsin made his speech the other evening we all wanted him to proceed without interruption, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] made the request that he should proceed without interruption. I would like to have, if it is your wish, the same privilege.

The same argument about overproduction can be made against Mr. VOIGT's bill, which he advocates, as he himself has made against the McNary-Haugen bill.

When the gentleman from Wisconsin came before the House to deliver his speech he was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], who is one of the four committee members who signed the minority report in opposition to this bill, as a gentleman who knew more about the bill than any other member of the committee. I admit that the gentleman from Wisconsin has been a very close student of the measure, and yet he made statements in his discussion on the floor of the House that, in my opinion, are not borne out by the provisions of the measure itself.

The gentleman insisted a number of times that the corporation would be compelled to declare an emergency upon every one of the commodities in this act, provided, of course, that there was a surplus export of the product, and that the domestic price of the commodity was less than the ratio price. I want to call the gentleman's attention to section 2 of this bill, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) If the corporation finds (1) that there is a surplus for export of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine, and (2) that, according to estimates made by it, the ratio prices, as defined in section 4, in respect of the commodity would be in excess of the domestic price thereof, it shall immediately notify the President in writing of its findings. Upon such notification from the corporation, it shall be the duty of the President by proclamation to declare that a special emergency exists as to such agricultural commodity.

During the closing hours of the consideration of this bill by the committee, and just before the vote was taken on the question of reporting it, I called the attention of the committee to this section, and I offered the following amendment:

After the word "of," in line 22, on page 2 of the bill as it is now printed, insert the following words: "one or more of the following commodities."

If my amendment had been adopted by the committee the language would read:

If the corporation finds, first, that there is a surplus for export of one or more of the following commodities: Wheat, flour—

And so forth.

I called the attention of the committee to the fact that we wanted to give the corporation absolute authority; if in its opinion there should be declared an emergency upon only one of these products, it could do so; or if it wanted an emergency declared upon two products, it could do so; or upon three or four, it could do so. When I offered my amendment in the committee my attention was called to the language as set forth in the section, and it was the opinion of every member of the committee present that my amendment was unnecessary; that the language as written gave the corporation that authority, namely, that it could have an emergency declared upon only one product if it wanted so to do. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that this bill as written will give the corporation authority to have declared an emergency upon wheat alone, if in its opinion, after careful investigation, that should be done. This opinion is concurred in by Mr. Alford, of the House drafting service, who assisted the committee in the drafting of this bill. There can be no doubt but what that was the desire of every member of the committee, regardless of whether or not he was for or against the measure. If there should be any doubt that the corporation does not under the present language of the bill have that authority, an amendment such as I have indicated can be proposed when the bill is considered under the five-minute rule.

The gentleman spoke at great length upon the hog question. He called attention to the fact that upon a certain day at Chicago there were 80,000 hogs on the market. Under present conditions those heavy runs often occur, brought about by the unstable market. Men rush their cattle and hogs to market to get them there upon certain days in the hope that they may get a better market. If this bill is passed and goes into effect, there will be no unstable markets—markets which the packers have been able to manipulate, increasing it or lowering it at their own sweet will. We will have stable markets, and as a result there will be a steady and even flow of the farmer's livestock products to the market places. It will be no longer necessary for him to get his hogs and cattle there on a certain day in the hopes of getting a higher price. We shall no longer have the market glutted on certain days, as we have under existing conditions. I am glad to say that we have upon the floor Members who are experienced in the livestock business, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH], and they will discuss this livestock question.

I want you to give careful attention to what I am saying to you now, because I think it is possibly the most important thing I shall say to you to-day. After the corporation is appointed, organized, and ready for business, in my opinion, being men of experience, able, and thoroughly informed on market conditions, they would not think of having an emergency declared upon even one product—wheat, for example—without making their contract and agreement with those who process wheat, the millers of the country; and certainly they would not declare an emergency upon hogs or cattle, or the products of hogs or cattle, pork or beef, without first calling in the representatives of the packers.

There are only, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] has said, five great packers, but let me call your attention to this fact: We have 200 independent packers, and I want to say to you in that connection that during the war the five big packers gave their attention mostly to the export business, and as a result the independent packers went into the domestic market, got a hold on the domestic market, and they have a strong hold on it to-day, and these 200 independent packers are to-day doing a good business. The corporation, before it has ever declared an emergency in reference to these products, will make its agreements and contracts with these concerns; and if satisfactory agreements and contracts can not be made, certainly the emergency will not be declared. If the corporation can make satisfactory arrangements and if they will agree to give them a fair deal in the handling of the pork and other meat products, then the emergency will be declared, but otherwise it will not be declared.

In my opinion, when the board of directors of the corporation get around the table with these gentlemen who handle the meat products of America, the directors will get a square deal, because if they do not get a square deal the packers well know that an emergency will not and can not be declared. The packers can not afford to be put into the position before the American public of preventing the putting into effect of this legislation. We want to provide specifically in this bill that the present agencies shall carry on this business. We do not want to go into the packing business, into the milling business, or into any other business; but we want the present agencies to handle the business and, under the provisions of this bill, with the powers of the corporation, that can be and will be done.

The declaration of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] that under this bill the corporation will be compelled to declare an emergency upon hogs and other products enumerated here, I most emphatically deny. Yet, as I have said before, if there is any doubt in the minds of the Members of this House, an amendment of two or three words will make it absolutely certain beyond any shadow of a doubt.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] calls attention to the fact we have enumerated in this measure wool and sheep. Of course, there is no Member of this House who knows wool conditions who expects or believes that within the next five years the conditions will come to a point where an emergency will be declared on wool.

If the corporation should, after its agreement with the packers, declare an emergency upon meat products, it would be necessary possibly to declare an emergency upon mutton and upon lambs and their products, because they are substitutes for pork and beef.

Mr. VOIGT says that the millers and the packers are in favor of this legislation and that they will be benefited by millions of dollars because of the hold over of stocks which they may have on hand when the bill goes into effect. Every member of the committee, and I expect every Member of the House, will testify to the fact that stronger opposition to this bill has come from the millers than from any other source. Hundreds of letters have come to me from millers all over the country protesting against the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill.

A representative of the packers came before our committee and opposed in strong and vigorous language the enactment of this legislation. Not only that, boards of trade, stockyards' commission men, and all of those concerns intimately associated with the packers are without exception opposed to this legislation, and every Member of Congress who comes from where these packing concerns are located or who comes from where the great milling industries are located is opposed to this legislation. Why is this true if the packers and the millers are in favor of the legislation? The statement that the millers and the packers are in favor of this legislation is absolutely without foundation, and if, as he says, they will receive hundreds of millions of dollars from their stocks on hand when the law goes into effect, why are they opposed to the passage of this bill?

I admit, and there is no way of getting around it, so far as I can see, that profits will come to the packers, and that profits will come to the millers when this law goes into effect because of their hold over, and yet I want to say to you in this connection that no tariff bill has been passed by Congress that did not bring immense profits to the holders of those things upon which the tariff was raised. Not only that, but while the packers and the millers are getting something by reason of their holdings when the declaration of an emergency goes into effect, remember, friends, that the farmers throughout this land on wheat alone have in their granaries millions and millions of bushels, and they will receive the increase that comes because of those holdings. They have in the feed lots, if you please, hogs almost ready to mature and go to market. They will get the increased price or the ratio price. The farmers and the millers and the packers will be compelled, however, to pay their proportionate part of the cost in the equalization fee that is imposed upon all of them.

There is one other thing I want to call to your attention and that is, when the packers understand that this emergency is under the control of a corporation and they do not know whether it is going into effect or not, that it depends upon their investigation and their ability to make proper agreements and proper contracts, they are not going to hold over a great quantity of stuff or purchase it and put it in their warehouses with that uncertainty in view.

Mr. VOIGT discusses at some length the effect of the passage of this act upon the cost of living. During the discussion he was asked, I believe by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], whether or not he favored the farmer receiving the prices provided in the ratio price, and he declared emphatically that he was in favor of their receiving this increase. Every bill that has been introduced in the Congress the object of which was to bring relief to the farmer provides in no uncertain language that the farmers receive an increased price for their farm products. There is not a man here to-day who believes that relief can be brought to the American farmer without increasing the prices of his farm products. If there is some plan whereby that can be done without increasing them, I would like to have the man who can devise that sort of a plan bring it into this House, because it would certainly be an economic monstrosity. You can not give the farmer prosperity, increased purchasing power, and the things he ought to have without increasing the prices of the products that he raises.

Ah, my friends, the prices of all other products in the land have been raised. They have gone up and up and up, and the farmers' prices have gone down and down and down. The purchasing power of the farmer to-day has been decreased almost 50 per cent. I had a letter yesterday from a farmer out in my country wherein he said, "I never see a new Springfield wagon on the road. Why? The price has been more than doubled. I find in the little shops around the country old wagons. They are taken in there to fix them up and repair them and use them over and over again."

Everything the farmer buys has been increased and his purchasing power has been depleted.

I want to call your attention specifically to this fact: Mr. Edgar Wallace, a representative of the American Federation of Labor, came before our committee. He made the statement that any bill which we could pass to bring relief to the farmer might result in some increase in the cost of living, but that the organization which he represented was there to urge the committee to give relief to the farmers, and stated that his organization to a man was willing to accept as a result of that relief any slight increase in the cost of living that might come about.

Do you believe that the increase in the price of the farmer's wheat 30 or 40 or 50 cents a bushel would materially increase the price of bread? When you know that during war times hogs were selling at $14 and $15 per hundred and the price of bacon was just a little more then than it is to-day, when hogs are selling at $7 a hundred? Do you think there will be much increase in the price of bacon?

I want now to refer to my friend from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], and I have great respect for him. I have known him a long time. He has been a Member of this House for many years, and we all admire him. That gentleman has issued more words on this bill, possibly, than everybody else in the land. He has written article upon article and delivered speech upon speech; he has sent out letters upon letters. Let me give you an illustration. Just a few days ago I read in a St. Louis paper an article written by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois wherein he gave an illustration about a widow woman with a pig. I want to say to you, because I counted them, in that story about the widow woman and the pig he used 700 words describing what would happen if she wanted to sell her pig, and yet I want to say to him that if that story were true, then there is not a member of the Committee on Agriculture that would vote for the McNary-Haugen bill.

Misrepresentation has gone abroad all over the land in regard to this measure from the boards of trade, the packers, and the large financial institutions.

I read an article in an agricultural paper this morning, or a so-called agricultural paper, published here in Washington, about the McNary-Haugen bill. The man who wrote the article evidently had not read it since it was introduced in January last.

Those are the conditions which confront us. This is indeed a new kind of legislation. Nothing exactly like it has been attempted in this country, although it has been carried out in other countries. For years the Congress of the United States has helped almost every industry in the land. Through tariff legislation the manufacturing industries have been enabled to increase their prices for their products by millions of dollars. Through immigrant laws—and I voted for them all—we have kept out the undesirable farming element and have thereby reduced competition and kept up the price of labor. Through the Adamson law—and I voted for that—we further increased the price of wages. Through the enactment of the Esch-Cummins law—for which I did not vote—we gave the railroads of the country a guaranteed income and virtually instructed the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase the freight rates, and that has given an increase of price to all the products of the land. For years and years we have given to the great magazines of the country a low rate of postage. Every year, as the result, those publications are carried through the mails at a loss to the Government of fifty millions of dollars.

But I must not prolong this discussion. Suffice is it for me to say that through legislative enactment we have helped every industry in America except the one great basic industry—agriculture. More than one-quarter of the people of America live on the farms. They toil through all kinds of weather both early and late. They seek no eight hour law; they depend for their success more than any other industry known to man upon the elements. They plow, they plant, they cultivate, and if the sunshine and the rain come in due proportion, they harvest their crops. On the other hand, if perchance the rain does not come or if it comes in too great abundance, the result of their labor will be destroyed by drought or by flood. These are the conditions that we can not regulate by legislation. But when the farmer reaps an abundant harvest and takes his commodities to the market place we want him to receive a just and fair price for those commodities, and that, Mr. Chairman, is what we are going to do by the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman from Missouri take another five minutes in order to answer questions?

Mr. RUBEY. I should be glad to do so, but there are other gentlemen who want time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can help us by answering questions more than he can by generalities.

Mr. RUBEY. I have already used 45 or 50 minutes, and if I yield to one I must yield to another.

Mr. BLANTON. I think perhaps we would get along better with the bill if Members were enlightened by answering questions.

Mr. RUBEY. I know, and I want gentlemen to ask questions about the bill to enlighten them. I want every Member of the House to hear what is said, do not make up your minds against this measure, and if you are, so to speak, on the fence, stay on the fence until we get through with the debate. Stay on the fence until we get through with the discussion of the bill under the five-minute rule, and then you will be able to ask questions and we will be ready to answer them. I would like to answer the questions of the gentleman from Texas, but I have refused the gentleman from Wisconsin, and there are others who would like to ask questions. But let me say that there are many gentlemen who have asked me for time and I must not consume any further time. [Applause.]

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I regret to find myself in emphatic disagreement with our distinguished chairman, for whom I have the highest regard. I am also in disagreement with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], who has preceded me, one of the most lovable Members in the House. He made an appeal to Members from other sections of the country to come and help him out in his country, as he stated it. I for one have supported every measure that I thought was for the benefit of the people of all sections. No worthy measure has had my opposition for sectional reasons. I have come now to help Mr. RUBEY's people by helping save them from the tragedy of the operations of this monstrous bill.

The bill has a peculiar history. When it appeared before the two Houses it was so curious in its theories and provisions that a lively interest was manifested as to its fatherhood. It was first called the Wallace bill. The Secretary of Agriculture came before the committee and disowned it. He said he was not for it especially, but that he was for any measure that would improve agriculture. Later there came forth from the multitude a gentleman named Charles J. Brand, whose friendship and services to the Big Five meat packers were exposed by the Federal Trade Commission and are matters of common knowledge and public discussion. Mr. Brand announced that he was the father of this bill and that he wrote it at the instance of the Secretary of Agriculture. Later the Secretary of Agriculture came back to the committee and admitted fatherhood by proxy and that he had directed Brand to create it.

Later on another gentleman appeared before the committee, a Mr. Peek, of the Moline Plow Co., and he startled us by saying that he originated the idea and it was brought here in 1921. According to late reports Mr. Peek's business is in the hands of a receiver. I am not criticizing him, I sympathize with him, but having put his own business in the hands of a receiver I wonder if he is a competent man to tell the Congress how to legislate on economic questions.

When the word "scrip" grew into disrepute about the Capitol the S O S call went forth that "scrip" would kill this child of doubtful parentage, and there came rushing to the support of the proponents of the bill, among others, a gentleman from the Northwest, a Mr. Jewett, who is reputed to be a banker and the head of a grain pool or grain corporation in the Northwest with which he has made a failure. I am not criticizing him, but I can readily understand that he would like to have the taxpayers recoup him and enable him to reestablish himself in the confidence of the wheat growers whose money his management has lost. He helped change "scrip" to the euphonious "equalization certificate," meaning the same thing. So we have found the creators to be the Brand-Jewett-Peek combine. Our chairman [Mr. HAUGEN] is clearly not the father of this bill. He is the stepfather, three generations removed. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. Does the Secretary now approve it?

Mr. ASWELL. He did the other day. I do not know what he would do now.

Mr. BLANTON. Where is the "Mary" part of it?

Mr. ASWELL. Oh, in the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. I can not yield; I shall have to follow the gentleman's example. The majority report is not a report, but an argument, an appeal. It reveals clearly the weakness of this bill. It contains 109 pages, 52 pages of which are devoted to a thesis trying to prove that the bill is constitutional, and then on page 79 the majority brief concedes that in certain transactions the bill would be unconstitutional.

The Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture says, "I am of the opinion that in all probability it would be finally sustained by the Supreme Court."

The impression has been deliberately given to Members of Congress that this is the only chance to vote for farm relief. I call the attention of Members to the fact of record that there are four other farm-relief bills on which we have had hearings before the Committee on Agriculture, and within 24 hours any one of these bills can be reported out. It is not true that you have to vote for this bill or none. I call attention to another fact, that if one of these other measures after the defeat of this bill should not be brought out immediately there are Members of Congress on both sides of the Chamber who believe in the proper kind of agricultural relief, and they will hold this Congress here, if need be, until proper farm legislation is enacted. [Applause.]

A lot has been said here this morning and at other times about the condition of the farmer. No man in this House or anywhere else is more deeply concerned in the welfare of the farmer than I. I represent a great agricultural district and I have no business in the world outside of my duties here except that of farming.

Every Member of Congress knows that agriculture in certain lines and in some sections of the country is in grave distress. You do not need a book the size of the majority report to convince you of that depressing fact. Everyone agrees that agriculture, suffering most heavily and unfairly from post-war deflation, deserves the earnest and sincere consideration, the active encouragement, and the fair-handed cooperation of the Government. I am eager to see the Congress go every step of the way in this direction consistent with sound principles of government, but I am not for this fantastic panacea, which if it did not fall of its own weight would disappoint and enslave the farmers and disrupt and destroy the financial and economic policies of our Government. [Applause.]

It would set the precedent of socializing and nationalizing the industry of agriculture, which would lead inevitably to the nationalization of all industry, including the railroads, overriding economic laws by statutory laws and thus place our Government squarely in the class of the bolshevistic Government of Russia, which has disappointed the Russian people and is now collapsing. I, for one, most solemnly protest against taking a single step toward such a calamity for the American people. [Applause.]

This bill would make the farmer the ward of the Nation, as are the Indians. It declares the farmer incompetent to handle his own business and places him under the paternalistic care of the Government. It destroys individual initiative, socializes and communizes the agricultural industry, and places a Government corporation in full control of the farmer and his industry.

The value of the agricultural products of the country last year in the hands of the farmer is reported by the Department of Agriculture to have been seven and one-half billion dollars, while the consumers of the country paid twenty-two and one-half billion dollars for the same products. The producer is receiving only one-third of what the consumer is paying for his products. By enabling the cooperatives of the country to organize nationally and establish direct connection between the producer and the consumer the farmer will receive two-thirds of the amount the consumer pays and thus double the farmer's price of agricultural products without taking a penny from the Federal Government. It will actually reduce the price to the consumer by eliminating one-half of the two and a half million food dealers or middlemen. The spread between the price the producer receives and that the consumer pays will be reduced to the minimum. The difficulty with the present cooperatives is that they are too limited in scope and in finances to control the final markets in reaching the ultimate consumers.

A marketing bill national in character is pending before the Committees on Agriculture in both Houses. Senator CURTIS introduced it in the Senate and I introduced it in the House. Vote down the McNary-Haugen bill and you will have a chance to consider the marketing bill that enables the farmer himself to handle his own business for himself.

I call attention to another fact. The President of the United States, to be consistent, can not be for this bill. He is not a communist, he is not a socialist, he is not a Bolshevik. Let me read one sentence from his message to the Congress on December 6. Discussing agricultural relief, he says:

> No complicated scheme of relief, no plan of Government fixing of prices, and no resort to the Public Treasury will be of any permanent value in establishing agriculture. Simple and direct methods put into operation by the farmer himself are the only ways to restore agriculture.

[Applause.]

That is the President's language to Congress. If his language means anything, he can not be for this measure. What does this bill do? It establishes a corporation, a Government corporation, and puts the Government squarely into business. To prove that I shall not give any secondhand evidence, but I shall read from the bill. Section 21 reads:

> For the purpose of relieving the emergency declared in section 1 by conducting the business of trading in basic agricultural commodities.

That is the object of the corporation. Further, on page 11 of the bill, it is provided that "the corporation shall have such powers as are necessary and proper to conduct the business of trading in basic agricultural products."

This bill puts the Government squarely into business, and it will be the biggest Government corporation that was ever proposed in the history of the world in any country. This bill proposes not a private corporation but governmental control strictly, nothing more. The corporation is to be created by the Congress. The President of the United States is to appoint the members of the corporation and they are to be confirmed by the Senate of the United States. The corporation is to be presided over by a member of the Cabinet. The certificates are to be printed at the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and by a Government bureau, the Bureau of Printing and Engraving. It is from top to bottom governmental and the Government would be morally bound. Two hundred million dollars is to be appropriated from the Federal Treasury, from the taxpayers, and $1,000,000,000 is to be borrowed. There is not a gentleman in this Congress to-day, having voted for this bill, who would not later cast his vote in an emergency to appropriate another billion dollars to pay the losses of this corporation. The Government would be morally bound because it is a Government corporation. So it is—the Government involved from start to finish.

It has the most extraordinary powers ever granted any similar organization. This corporation would be bigger than any department of the Government, because it is specifically provided that any department of the Government shall act as the agent of the corporation.

It is bigger than all the executive departments of the Government because the bill provides that all departments act as its agents. It is bigger than the President himself. Why, because the President of the United States has no authority to declare an emergency until the corporation notifies him. As far as the Committee on Ways and Means in the House has to do with tariffs, it abolishes that committee entirely. It would abolish the Tariff Commission, too. Authority is given upon the recommendation of this corporation for the President to ignore all existing law and declare an embargo or raise the import duties on any article, any substitute, or derivative. The records show that the Big Five packers handle about 400 derivatives and substitutes contained in this bill, including fertilizer for the farmers of the country. It gives authority to declare an embargo and increase the price on all elements needed by the farmers for fertilizer.

It is a price-fixing scheme. I do not understand why the proponents of this bill try to hide that fact. The proponents of the measure ought to know somebody is liable to read this bill. [Laughter.] Why, turn with me to section 4 on page 3 in the bill:

> The corporation shall publish, after the issuance of a proclamation declaring the special emergency, the price for such commodity, or any class or grade thereof.

It must publish the price for that period, and that period can be 1 month or 3 months or 12 months. I wish to say to the gentlemen who try to argue that it does not fix prices that if anybody reads the bill, all the other things they say will be discredited.

Now, as to the ratio price. It will be discussed over and over again. But, in a word, the proposal is, for example, that when wheat, we will say, is selling in the world's market for a dollar, the ratio price will bring wheat in this country to $1.50. If 200,000,000 bushels are exported, it will produce a loss to the wheat farmers of $100,000,000, a loss of 50 cents a bushel. The wheat growers will have to pay that $100,000,000 plus the cost of the operation of the corporation. And I made it my business to ask every one of the fathers and stepfathers of this bill, experts, lobbyists, and specialists that we had before that committee—I asked every one of them this question: How much will it cost the farmers for this corporation to operate? And never have I heard an answer yet hazarded except once, when it was said that if corn and wheat were in the emergency, the corporation could operate probably for $15,000,000 per year. We know that about 50,000 Federal agents would be employed. It has been said to-day that the farmer would be protected by this bill as the railroads are protected and as the Steel Corporation and other industries are by the high protective tariff. I am opposed to the existing discriminatory protection of big business and to the railroad guaranty, but not a single one of these corporations or special interests is taxed to bear the cost of the increase of its own prices as the farmer is proposed to be handled in this case. The comparison is absurd.

Another point. Gentlemen, I want you to turn with me to section 305, on page 27 of the bill, and you will find that this corporation has the power to punish by putting the farmer into a Federal prison for not paying his debts. Here is section 305:

> Any person who, in violation of this act, willfully fails to pay, collect, or account for and pay over any equalization fee, etc., or attempts in any manner to evade the payment or the future collection of such fee, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

It authorizes a Federal corporation to drag men or women to a Federal court and put them in a Federal prison for even an attempt to evade the payment of the equalization fee. Now, let me illustrate that. You will understand when an emergency is declared on corn only a small portion of the corn will pay the equalization fee and the fee will be high. The corn used for feed and seed is exempt, and the corporation may exempt purchases between producers to the amount of $100 a year. A man, as it happens in all parts of the country, starts to market with a load of roasting ears. He gets to the town. You are a banker or a merchant or a professional man. You are not a producer and therefore you have to pay the equalization fee. The producer sells you a half dozen roasting ears. What is the situation? You both must know what the equalization fee is on corn. The producer sells the corn, say, for 50 cents. He is not allowed to take the full amount in cash. You who purchased the corn must deduct the equalization fee from the payment, and you must send it to the corporation. Now, that is literally the situation. But that is not all. You must give the producer a receipt printed in Washington by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving for the fee deducted, and if you do not have a receipt at hand you do not dare buy the roasting ears.

If you attempt to evade the equalization fee or fail to give the receipt, what is the result? It will perhaps be a dime; but if you fail to pay that dime or fail to give a Government receipt, you are subject, both of you, to be hauled into a Federal court, perhaps 100 miles away, to be tried, and, if convicted, fined $5,000 or put in prison for a year, or both. That applies to butter, milk, and every other food product of cattle, hogs, or sheep when it is brought under the emergency. Do you need any further proof as to the monstrosity of this bill? I am trying to save my good friend RUBEY'S people, who grow corn principally, from such a calamity as this bill would heap upon them. [Applause.] Gentlemen, this bill has been facetiously called Mary Haugen's bill. I do not know where that originates; it is not named properly——

Mr. BLANTON. Well, it had to have a mother, did it not?

Mr. ASWELL. Well, perhaps; yes.

Gentlemen, this bill should be called the "Big Five bonus bill." Why? I would like you to follow me accurately and read between some of the lines. The first announced father of this bill has reputed connections with the meat packers. The bill provides that when there is an established exportable surplus and the price falls below the ratio price, then that product is to come under the emergency.

Let us see. "When there is an established exportable surplus." There is no question but that the packers would wake the next morning richer by $500,000,000. They wanted certain of their food products named in the bill. It does not take any argument to prove that. See the letter of Secretary Wallace. I hold his letter in my hand.

> The value of meats in cold storage was $175,000,000 on the 1st of April.

There are other products in the hands of the packers, elevators, and terminals that reach into the hundreds of millions. This bill increases their value overnight from 60 to 70 per cent. In the cold-storage products to-day owned by the five big packers the increase overnight will be exactly $122,500,000.

I said it should be called a packers' bonus bill. There must be an exportable surplus. Yet the man who wrote this bill has put into it beef. Why? How could beef be included? The report of the United States Tariff Commission, April 11, 1924, on this bill states that last year we imported into this country $65,000,000 worth of cattle and cattle products, while we exported only $25,000,000. Yet beef is included. Where is your "established exportable surplus"? We imported last year 6,000,000 pounds of mutton and exported only 2,000,000. Last year we imported $130,000,000 worth of wool and exported none. Yet in the interest of the "Big Five," who are vitally concerned in their profits on beef, wool, and mutton, these food products to benefit the "Big Five" are included in the provisions of this bill. In the face of these facts of record how can you call this a farmers' bill?

No one knows the cost of operating the corporation. There is only one thing well known and established as a certainty, and that is, whatever the cost of operation, whether it be $15,000,000 or $150,000,000, it makes no difference; whatever the loss, whether it be $100,000,000 in wheat or by stimulating production and piling up the exportable surplus to the point where the wheat farmers lose $300,000,000, it makes no difference, the farmer pays the cost. Every time you increase production you reduce consumption. Increase the exportable surplus and you increase the equalization fee that the farmer has to pay. The only thing you know is that whatever happens the farmer pays the freight at every point in this bill.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. In the opinion of the gentleman, would it be within the powers of this corporation to destroy excess commodities in the hands of the millers and packers, paying for the same after condemnation?

Mr. ASWELL. Perhaps that might be done should this bill ever become a law.

Now, what will be some of the results? The first outstanding result is that it will destroy the existing cooperatives in this country. Why not? The object of the cooperatives is to increase prices to the producer through a marketing system. In this bill it is proposed that the Government do this very thing with the Federal Treasury back of it. What inducement would the cooperatives have to hold together? Why should each member of the cooperatives pay $10 or $15 a year and know at the same time that the Government is handling that business? The cooperatives would go out of business, and what could prevent a calamitous collapse to the farmers at the end of five years when the law would suddenly expire?

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. No; I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ASWELL. Another thing that we know about this bill is that it will increase the number of Government employees by at least 50,000, but what the ultimate limit will be no one knows. Take the case of the roasting ears. You have to have a detective to see that you do not cheat the Government out of that fee. The bill would send throughout this country an army of Federal agents, detectives, and Secret Service men beyond the comprehension of any man. They would be more numerous than the income-tax agents and the prohibition agents combined.

Why? Because you have got to watch every transaction; you have got to see that the Government is not swindled out of anything. I believe the American farmer properly resents the increasing intrusion of Federal agents. He will still more resent this new army of Federal agents.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say in all candor that for four months I have earnestly studied this bill. I wanted to support any measure that would bring relief to the agricultural interests of the country. I tried to help amend it so it would be workable, but I was forced to conclude that you can not build a good measure upon an unsound principle. I have been forced to the deliberate judgment that this bill is unsound, unworkable, full of Bolshevism, purely socialistic, indefensibly communistic. It would endanger the stability and the perpetuity of the institutions of this Republic. I have faith in my country, in her institutions, in her people. I am not afraid that the foundations of the Republic will be shattered by this bill, because I do not for one moment believe that it has a shadow of a chance of being enacted into law; but if you should pass it, the President of the United States, in conformity with his straightforward proceedure, could not help but veto it, and if he did not do that, I am perfectly convinced, as I stand in your presence, that within a few months, or as soon as it could be brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, it would be declared unconstitutional. But you say the elections will have been over, and the $200,000,000 will have been used as a campaign fund. What a tragedy, what a crime against the farmer, against the taxpayer, against the American people.

Gentlemen, I for one, am willing and anxious to go as far as humanly possible for farm relief legislation, but on this measure the institutions of our country are involved. Gentlemen, if you vote down this bill, so unsound and unworkable, you will have a chance before this Congress adjourns to consider and enact legislation for the farmers which will not only give relief but which will stand through the years to come.

The difference between conditions in Europe and conditions in the United States lies in the fact that the principles of our institutions and our Government are different from those of Europe.

Would you take a step toward those conditions in Europe that have become the tragedy of the world?

Consider the conditions in Europe for a moment and compare them with ours. Their economic conditions are chaotic, ours are good. Much of their currency is worthless, ours is normal. Their governments are tottering, ours is beneficent and strong. [Applause.] Their women are enslaved, ours are loved and exalted. They worship the god of war, we the God of peace. [Applause.] Their tongues speak hatred, ours good will. Their people are miserable and in turmoil, ours are happy, for the most part, and living in peace. Their millions are idle and wretched, ours, for the most part, busy and contented. Their millions are cast down and discouraged, ours stand erect with courage and purpose.

Reviewing this contrast I wonder how any American can fail to be thankful for such a Government as ours, for such a country, for such a people. [Applause.] I wonder how any Member of Congress could dare take the chance of voting for this bill, creating a sentiment and establishing a precedent in government which, if pursued to the end, would destroy the very foundation of the Republic. [Applause.]

If for political reasons you believe that you must aid the farmers in one section of the country directly and immediately from the Federal Treasury to get their vote in November, then it would be far better for the farmers themselves and for the country to appropriate the $200,000,000 and borrow the $1,000,000,000 as a gift to them, and not saddle upon the country this dangerously vicious form of paternalism. If this bill passes, it will be permanent law or agriculture will collapse and bring a national panic at the end of five years.

The remedy for the farmers is—

First. Nation-wide cooperative marketing authorized by law.

Second. The creation of foreign markets by aiding in establishing normal conditions in Europe, for which our Government has done nothing.

Third. The reduction of indefensibly high tariff duties on some of the things the farmer has to buy, which the Congress has failed to do.

Fourth. The restoration of normal freight rates on agricultural products, for which during six long years the Congress has refused to act.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Outside of the objections which the gentleman has presented, is the bill otherwise all right? [Laughter.]

Mr. ASWELL. Except that it is unconstitutional, unworkable, impracticable, socialistic, communistic, bolshevistic, and would enslave the farmers; otherwise it might be all right. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Gentlemen of the House, of course I do not believe it is a convincing argument on an important measure like this for me to call my opponent, who thinks there is no merit in the measure, a Bolshevist or to say that a man who believes as I do not believe is Bolshevistic. I am not surprised, however, that men who use figures as carelessly as some people do use them and get facts so distorted as some people do get them distorted are compelled to resort to the practice of calling the other fellow names in order to make an interesting speech. [Applause.] Instead of importing more meat products than we exported last year, we exported 280 per cent more meat products than we imported, a slight change from the figures just handed you, which said that we imported 65 per cent more than we exported.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman does not want to make a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not.

I want to announce now that I will yield to any gentleman in this House, while I am talking, who controls time for the purpose of asking me questions if he will yield me such time as he uses, but I do not want to yield time for speeches. However, I want to be in this attitude if I can have the time: I want to be able to answer any question that is asked about this bill or tell the Members of this House whether I can answer it or not.

I propose to talk concerning the measure. I want to be fair with the House. I claim that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and the crowd of us who have reported this bill are not Bolshevists. I claim we believe in our country just as firmly as anyone else, and I claim that the 42 per cent of the population of this country who to-day are engaged in agriculture are entitled to the same treatment and the same consideration by the lawmaking bodies of this Nation as anyone else. [Applause.]

There are two arguments against this measure. One is that it will raise the cost of living and make it a burden on other people, and the other is that it will ruin the farmer. How consistent those two arguments are. You are going to raise labor's cost of living, so that all you boys who represent labor districts will vote against it; and it is not going to help the farmer, it is just going to ruin him, and in order to make that kind of argument you have to distort figures.

I am frank to say that had this bill come before Congress and had no emergency existed it would not have been sound as a governmental economic proposition. It is not a peace-time proposition, but we have an emergency. We have an emergency in agriculture, the basic industry of our Nation, and that emergency, whether it was caused by the fact of war or whether it was caused by laws pertaining to the emergency of war, is immaterial. The emergency is here. Talk about the $200,000,000 that this bill appropriates in an effort to do something for agriculture; why, by one fell stroke of the pen at the White House the President of the United States signed a bill during the war that took away from the American wheat owners, the farmers of America, overnight more money than this bill contemplates appropriating.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman speaks of the fixing of the price of wheat?

Mr. TINCHER. I do.

Mr. RAYBURN. Which was done at the instance of the wheat growers.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not care who it was done at the instance of, I was a wheat grower and did not ask for it; and it was done at a time when the farmers of America had in the process of harvesting an 800,000,000-bushel wheat crop, and it took from the cash price for wheat overnight $1.35 a bushel, and now say to that farmer who faces bankruptcy to-day, but who faced that emergency and took his part of the load without a whimper, that when he comes to the American Congress, when he is down and out by reason of the war and the emergency, that he must not ask for legislation or the proponents, the men who will speak for him, will be pronounced Bolsheviks.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was opposed to that and I tried to protect the wheat farmers at that time against their own representatives, and that experience with price fixing will justify me again in trying to protect them from their representatives.

Mr. TINCHER. That was a matter of fixing a price. I am not talking about politics. I am not reflecting on anyone and I am not even saying it was not justified. Our country was at war and our people needed food, and the American farmer had wheat and the Government confiscated that wheat to win the war, and took it at a fixed price, and it was the only confiscation of property that this great Government of ours indulged in during that great conflict.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say for the information of the gentleman that I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs during the war, as the gentleman knows, and the question of fixing the price of the wheat and of the pork and of the meat products that the Government would require to carry on that war was considered there, and I heard a member from Texas state that the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture showed that the Government was bound and determined to take the wheat and the pork at prices satisfactory to them because the Army had to fight upon bread and upon pork, and the price was fixed not to take care of the farmer but to take care of the Government in waging the war. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. I agree with the gentlemen thoroughly. I do not want to inject any other issue into this question, but I do say that this is an emergency.

Mr. RAYBURN. But the price that was set on wheat by the Congress was higher than the price at which wheat was selling at that time.

Mr. TINCHER. No; it was $1.35 a bushel less. The price went off that much in 12 hours. You can not tell me that. There is no use trying to get something like that in the RECORD here.

Mr. BURTNESS and Mr. WOODRUFF rose.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield to me just to read a sentence touching that point from the report of the grain corporation?

Mr. TINCHER. I yield first to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. This bill contemplates an appropriation of $200,000,000 out of the Public Treasury.

Mr. TINCHER. Yes; as a revolving fund and as capital stock.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Everyone recognizes the fact that the farmers of this country have lost their buying power. Do you not believe that if we had, as a result of this bill, a prosperous and happy agriculture that an appropriation of $200,000,000 each year would be fully returned to the Treasury as a result of the ensuing prosperity in this country?

Mr. TINCHER. I think so, but that is not possible under this bill. This bill puts the burden of paying the losses on the farmers. The $200,000,000 is simply the amount of the capital stock, and my judgment is—and of course a whole lot in this bill, if it passes and becomes a law, depends on the administration of it—that with the borrowing power they will have they will never need to take out of the Treasury any money to speak of at all.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield for one further question on that point? I understand that perfectly, and I believe that is true, but I want to ask again, if, as a result of this measure, agriculture was made prosperous, would not the prosperity which would ensue to every other individual in this country result in such a condition that the increase in taxes would more than return to the Treasury the $200,000,000 carried in this bill?

Mr. TINCHER. It would. There is no question about that. Every great war has been followed by a panic. Eighteen hundred and seventy-three was nine years after 1864. Nineteen hundred and twenty-six or 1927 will see a panic in our industries in the United States as a natural result of this deflation unless the people of this great country have advanced since 1873 in the matter of government so that by man-made laws we may avert that. Do not any of you eastern men think that this load will be carried by the western farmer forever. Do not think that it must not be reflected back. Look at the conditions to-day. Then they call us Bolshevists because we ask for a corporation with a capital stock of less than one-quarter of the amount of money confiscated by the Government over night.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman recall that in 1914 when cotton went down $25 a bale below cost that no provision was made by congressional action?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not know, I was not in Congress until after the war. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture for a short time after I came to Congress, I served with a distinguished gentleman from Texas, and you have a member now, and no member of the Committee on Agriculture will ever say that I as a western man ever split hairs with him on something he asked for because my district was not affected. I voted for every bill with reference to cotton that a man from the cotton States asked me to vote for.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman know whether the depression of cotton existed for five or six years?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not know. Now look at the chart on page 9204.

Here we start at 100 and everybody starts together. We had a war. Agriculture has got back to where her prices are 118. It went up during the war, and look at this drop down here, so that prices have come down to 118. Wages of farm employees have dropped back some, but not down to 100 mark, but about 155 against the prices of farmers' products, 118. Wages of railroad employees, every one of them to be paid, and a large part by the 42 per cent that are engaged in agricultural production. That stands at 186. But look at this: New York factory workers, 230.

Now, that condition can not continue to exist. The products of every one of these articles produced by the workers of that wage must be sold to all the people. Forty-two per cent of our people are on their knees. Forty-two per cent can not buy your goods, so that that condition can not continue. Some man said yesterday that we were self-appointed, self-styled representatives of the farmer. Sometimes I feel when I am talking that I ought not to be so earnest. I am not a self-appointed representative. I was elected a Representative of the farmer, and every dollar I have in the world, every dollar any member of my family has a chance to inherit, is invested in agriculture. So I am not talking about the matter from pure sentiment, but cold facts.

Now, what do you want to do? What is your remedy? Are you going to bring this down [indicating on chart] to a prewar status? That can not be done. Some people advocate that. Some people advocate the passage of laws that would reduce our standard of living, our scale of wages to a place where we would have to adopt the standard of living of the world and the world's scale of wages. If you do that, then we will be in the same shape that the countries are the gentleman described a little while ago.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is familiar with the subject and I am trying to get information. Will the gentleman take one staple farm product and tell us what would be the result of this bill under consideration if enacted?

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman name the product?

Mr. AYRES. Take wheat.

Mr. RAKER. Take hogs.

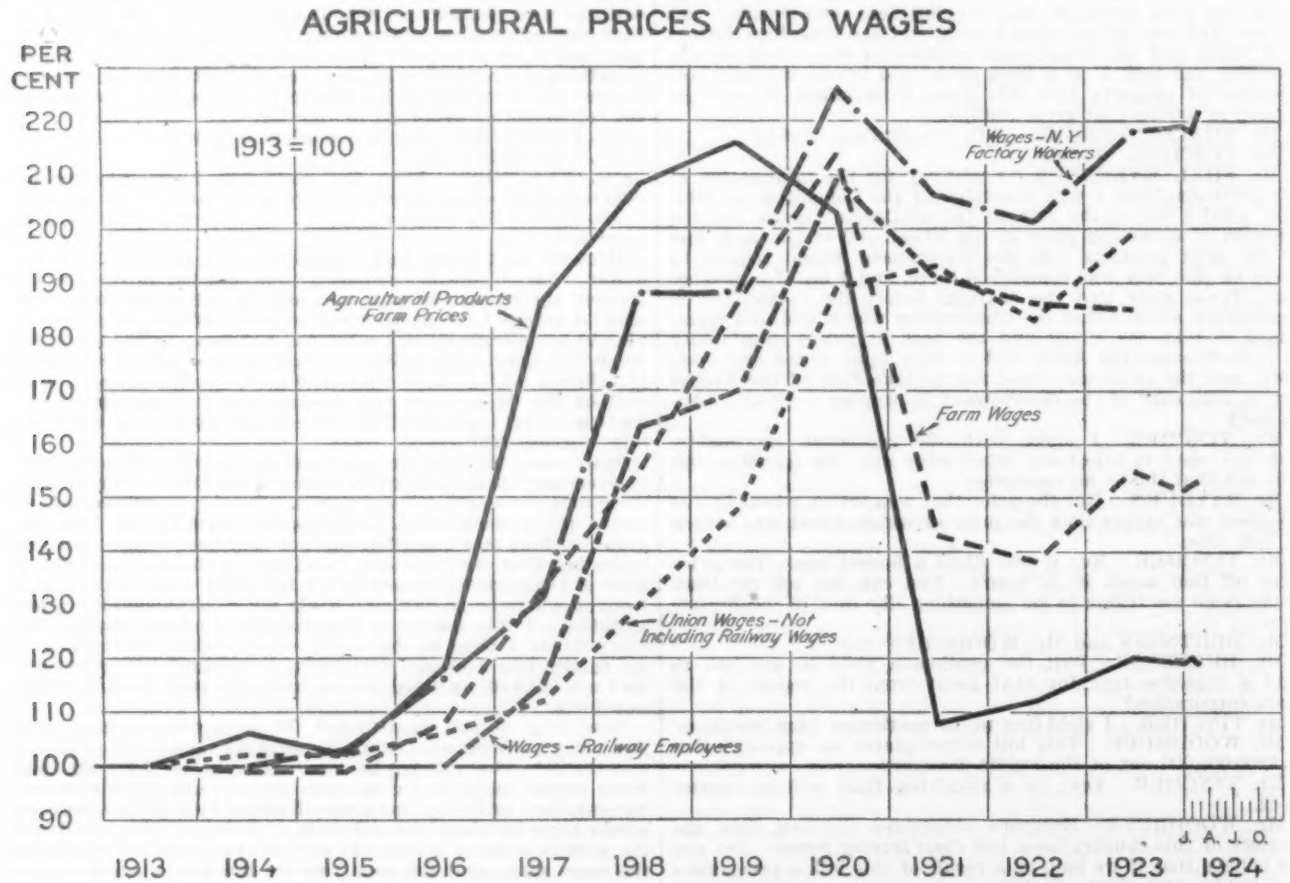
Mr. TINCHER. I will take wheat first. Wheat to-day, based on the price of the 400 commodities which people have to buy, ought to be selling for a little less than $1.60. In other words, the wages of these men up here ought to strike an average, and in coming down to this level strike an average somewhere, and they ought to be willing to pay the farmers $1.59 for wheat consumed in America.

Now, you ask about hogs. The day the bill was introduced and we started to have hearings hogs were selling at $9.85, and the fair ratio that day was $10.55. That was not much difference. To-day hogs are selling for $7, and a fair ratio price would be a little higher.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I am like the gentleman from Kansas; what little extra surplus I have is invested in cattle. Our people are interested in cattle, and I know the gentleman has given a great deal of attention to it, and will he give us the benefit of his knowledge by showing how it will affect the price of cattle?

Mr. TINCHER. Let me finish on hogs first. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] will talk about cattle, and I will say something, too. I do not believe that there is a man within the sound of my voice that realizes any difference in the price of the pork products from last December to what it is now.

If that fair ratio price was declared by the corporation purchasing on any kind of meat, they would not have had to buy a pound, because that fair ratio price would prevail and that would apply to cattle as well as hogs, and, Mr. RAKER, the only man who has got cattle to-day who is not broke, is some fellow who has some other way of buying than getting them in the cattle business. There is not a cattle producer in America who is dependent on that entirely but is worth less to-day than before the war, and 90 per cent are bankrupt.



Mr. RAKER. That is absolutely true; but how are you going to relieve that by this legislation?

Mr. TINCHER. By giving him a ratio price for his products, and I say that any good business man or corporation can take that $200,000,000 and let the farmer pay his own losses because of the ratio price and there is not a man engaged in labor in the United States but who will be happy for it and will be contented with it, because when their boys and institutions feel this panic we have now in the West, then their wages will go crumbling, and instead of having full time they will have probably less than half time.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman has stated, and stated correctly, that the price of pork or hogs last fall was 9 cents plus. And yet the consumer is not getting any relief in what he pays for his pork. Who is getting that difference?

Mr. TINCHER. That is a question clear outside, but my opinion is that there are nine or ten times as many retail men in Washington, perhaps, as the trade would bear, but that is quite a different proposition. I simply mention it to call attention to the fact that we want to be fair with the farmer and not hurt anyone. These boys working in the New York factories are getting good wages and they are happy, but they will not be happy if they are working on half time, and if 40 per cent of the people down here to-day are not given relief they will be laid off.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Glancing at the index chart, I find your agricultural products are down to 118. Now, is it not true that by the time those products reach the factory end in New York it will be necessary to fix the wage up to 230? Now, if you are going to bring your line up in accordance with the provisions of this bill, this line would necessarily have to go higher; and are not we going around in a circle?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. These men up here to-day with that wage—the New York fellows—are prosperous. These men down here are bankrupt—are broke—and you have got to equalize the thing. If you vote against this bill on the theory your New York laboring man will profit by your defeating farm legislation, you will be doing him a great injustice.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The trouble is this: There is no doubt about the condition of the farmer down here; but by the time his product reaches the New York factory worker his wage must be fixed in order to buy these products.

Mr. TINCHER. Has the gentleman got a bill to remedy that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. What bill is it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Take control of all transportation of the country, take all the elevators and storages, and eliminate entirely the middleman and banking industry. [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. I was laboring under a little misapprehension. I thought Mr. BERGER had the sole honor of representing his party in Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is not any more socialistic than this.

Mr. TINCHER. There is nothing socialistic about this. The farmer himself pays the equalization fee.

Mr. AYRES. Is it not a fact that bread now in New York City is about the same price as when wheat was at $3 a bushel?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. And bread was not reduced when wheat went down?

Mr. TINCHER. Right in Washington it is the same price as when wheat was worth $2.65.

Mr. AYRES. And there is no reason why it should cost more if wheat was $1.60.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. According to the chart—I can not detect the color here, but I suppose it is the factory workers in New York—the wages have dropped about 30 points from 1920 to 1922.

Mr. TINCHER. I remember Congress met and we passed a law, not a socialistic law, but a law that opened your factories.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The question is——

Mr. TINCHER. I would like to get in part of my speech as I go along.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Wages came down. We know it came down because the manufacturers could not keep those factories going. There had been overproduction, but even in that time farm products were rising, were going up even when wages in the East were going down. I am wondering if that does not teach us a lesson, that overproduction will cause wages to fall in the factories, and whether that is not also the cause of the low purchasing price of the farm products, and that you are not attacking the problem from the right end?

Mr. TINCHER. You started there for the rocks because you did not have the price any more based on blood, and you started for the rocks because you had no protection, and the American Congress met and gave a protective tariff and said that you could have the American standard of wages and the American standard of living when you at that time were going on the rocks. But now, when we come here and ask for a law that will give us a little fair chance we are called Bolshevists. I do not believe in a foreign standard of living. I do not believe in any foreign level of wages. As one of the western Republicans I want to say that I want to hold people up and am not willing to kick anybody else down. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did you not have at the same time a tariff protecting agriculture?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, you can not protect agricultural products as you can manufactured products. We export agricultural products.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did we not have an emergency tariff to protect agricultural products?

Mr. TINCHER. I will have a Democrat answer your emergency tariff questions.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] assumed plainly something that is not a fact, that the wages of manufacturing workingmen began to fall while agricultural prices were rising. Agricultural prices began to fall one year before the wages of industrial factories fell.

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it would be a benefit to all of us if the gentleman would take as an example hogs, and illustrate how this legislation will relieve the farmer on that particular product, and carry it on through.

Mr. TINCHER. We have passed a bill, and a corporation is organized, and we got Otto Kahn, the biggest financier in America, to come down from New York and manage it. He says this is not what is called sound economics, but it is modern economics. We are forced to resort to modern economics. He goes to Chicago and says to the five packers, "Are you going to pay the ratio price? The consumer will have to pay it. You will not buy a hoof. That ratio price will be fixed. They will pay it. It will not hurt anyone." They say, "We will not do it." You know what a surplus is of pork. We do not export 6 per cent of our pork. It will not take anything to handle that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. In a moment.

I believe this bill should give the President all the power he wants, to use it as he wants to, and not to use it when it is not required. It should not be a permanent proposition. It should apply only when there is an emergency.

Why, my friends, who is it that would say that the Dawes report was sound economics a few years ago. The Dawes report is sound economics to-day because it is to clean up a thing brought about by the greatest emergency of the world. The Dawes report is sound economics.

This question may not be settled now, but it is a live American question. The question is whether by a man-made law we will harness this thing and avert the experience of 1873 or go on and treat the farmer lightly and not wake up to it until every industry in the country is down to where the farmer is to-day. I say we have progressed since the Civil War. I say there is a chance by a man-made law to manipulate the thing so that we will not suffer the natural consequences that always go with war.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This is an important matter. For the last two years our stockmen have got from 4 to 4½ cents per pound for cows and from 5 to 6½ cents per pound for prime steers. Hides are down to a dollar or even less.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, I know these facts. You need not state them to me.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman illustrate how he will help the stock-raising farmers so that they will get a fair price for their cattle under this project?

Mr. TINCHER. The corporation will fix a fair ratio price, and the fair ratio price will be the price they have to pay for the meat consumed there. They are to enforce that law. They have a right, if the people who handle the product will not do it, to do it themselves. But the packers, with 60 per cent of their factories empty to-day, will be glad when Uncle Sam goes down and says, "We have established a ratio price for the products."

That is not "TINCHER in Congress howling about the way things are going." That is somebody who has power, and the only justification for using that power is that an emergency exists by reason of a law act, and one class of people in this country are suffering from that emergency.

Mr. RAKER. If our cattle go to 4 and 5 cents a pound, how is that when we come to Washington we must pay 60 or 65 cents for beef per pound?

Mr. TINCHER. I have not been here as long as you have. Why have you not fixed it? You have been here a long time. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Kansas is really making a good speech.

Mr. TINCHER. I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. May I have a little more time?

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course, the condition of the country to-day is due to some cause. That is admitted. I want to ask the gentleman what he thinks about this legislation as a remedy for remedying the cause. Or is it simply emergency legislation for a time, and when the limitation expires the same old cause may be back again, and we may find ourselves in the same situation?

Mr. TINCHER. No; the same old cause will not be back. The condition was brought about by an emergency, either by the war itself, alone and uninterrupted, or by the war and the laws that we passed for running our country during the war. But the farmer's condition is an emergency, and we propose to relieve him from the emergency the same as we relieve everybody else. I do not believe the same conditions can come about again.

Of course, I think the emergency, perhaps, will have to be declared for this year and next. I think this bill runs three years, and I think it ought to.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Contrary to numerous expressions on the floor of this House, is it not true that by reason of the packing industries being concentrated in five great companies, that feature of the act will be more easily and more completely administered than any other feature of this bill?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes; I think it will be easy to administer it. Now, let me say this: I have been here only five years. I have been on the Agricultural Committee ever since I came, and I have worked with some of the most genial and high-class gentlemen any man ever had the privilege of working with. I never impugn the motives of any man who is on that committee, and I do not to-day. I understand how I could have a lot of fun here talking about the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT]—both opposing this bill—and about as much fun as I could have in talking about Mr. ASWELL's roasting ears. They do not generally agree on matters of economics, and they are opposing this bill, I believe, for directly opposite reasons.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not true that when the filled milk measure was before the House I supported that bill because I believed it would do something to aid the dairy interests of this country, so that when you are challenging other men's motives you are challenging mine.

Mr. TINCHER. I did not challenge the gentleman's motives.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I thought you did.

Mr. TINCHER. All I said was that ordinarily you and Mr. VOIGT do not travel together on matters of economics. I did not impugn your motives at all and never had such a thought at all. I was criticizing another man for doing the same thing. But it is all wrong to draw a picture of some one selling roasting ears, and then, an emergency having been declared on roasting ears, say, "Who is going to administer this thing in order to give any weight and effect to it?" If you listen to such ridicule you must imagine that good men like Mr. RUBEY or Mr. CLARKE or some other Members of this House, men of good judgment, are not going to administer it, but you have got to imagine that they are going out to find the craziest man in the world to administer it, and that he will declare an emergency on roasting ears, and that suggestion is made in order to heap some ridicule upon the bill.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman please advise us whether there is any exportable surplus of roasting ears? [Laughter.]

Mr. TINCHER. There is no idea of exporting roasting ears. That illustration was simply used for the purpose of heaping ridicule on the bill, because the idea never would be to declare an emergency on them. As I say, that was just simply mentioned for the purpose of putting ridicule on the bill.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Is not the low price of farm commodities due to the fact that there is an overproduction?

Mr. TINCHER. No.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Then my second question is not necessary.

Mr. TINCHER. The low price of farm commodities is due to an emergency which arose during the war or due to the laws attendant upon the war, the disproportionate prices. However, the prices are not lower than they were before the war. The prices of farm commodities are now a little higher than at the time of the starting of the war, but the proportion or ratio to the other 400 articles is making a bankrupt out of every farmer in America.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I am not opposed to this bill, but does the gentleman understand that the law of supply and demand has nothing to do with prices?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. If there was a scarcity of wheat in the country, would not the price of wheat go up?

Mr. TINCHER. The law of supply and demand applies except when an emergency exists, and we have an emergency to-day. You do not want your American wheat grower to produce 200,000,000 bushels less wheat than will be consumed in America, but I have heard that suggestion made—that the wheat growers produce less than enough and then charge a high price for it and starve a few. But that is not the kind of people we have in the American farmer. But we ought to do something along the lines proposed in this bill in order to avoid a repetition of the days of 1873.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. Will not the gentleman get one more minute, in order to permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TINCHER. I have used all the time I can.

Mr. MACLAFFERTY. I am a mourner at the bench seeking light, but the gentleman has not given it to me.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, venerating as I do, GILBERT N. HAUGEN, the chairman of the great Agriculture Committee, who for 26 years has faithfully represented an agricultural district from Iowa, and has rendered signal service everywhere to the general cause of agriculture, and fond as I am of the members of that great committee, individually and collectively, it has been a difficult matter for me, with a predisposition toward "going along," to differ with the majority of this committee on this bill, but after months of hearings, where all the facts regarding the present serious agricultural situation were carefully gone into and analyzed, I felt my greater duty was to oppose this proposed experiment, believing that it is not alone unworkable, but that even if it could be made to work it would ultimately bring disaster to agriculture, far greater than the present "slough of despond."

1. No session of Congress has gone so far as the Sixty-seventh Congress did in enacting legislation to give the farmers that equality of opportunity that is fundamentally the right of every great industry, as well as of the individual himself, under the Anglo-Saxon theory of government.

(a) The bill for allowing the farmers' cooperatives to engage in interstate business so as to orderly market their products was a vastly helpful law in its practical aspects, as well as in the encouragement it offered to those cooperative organizations trying to help themselves.

(b) The Voigt filled milk bill to prevent the interstate shipment of a nonnutritive, fraudulently marketed product, in competition with a wholesome, whole-milk product, met squarely the duty of the Congress to the dairy industry of the United States.

(c) The Capper-Tincher bill, compelling those speculating in our great national agriculture commodities, such as the grains, and so forth, to keep a record that would be available to the Government in case of alleged cornering of these necessities of the people, for personal enrichment.

(d) A splendid, fair, moderate tariff to properly protect the products of our farms.

(e) Appropriations for increasing in many ways and supplementing the service of the Agriculture Department to those engaged in agriculture.

(f) Extensions of the life of the War Finance Corporation that have been most helpful to agriculture, especially in assisting with the "frozen-credit" situation of many banks in particular, and in assisting other ways in the orderly marketing of agricultural products.

(g) The agricultural credits bill extending the Federal farm loan act and setting up—

(1) Federal intermediate credit banks.

(2) National agriculture credit associations.

While all these measures have been helpful, prevented, or made unlawful unfair competition and enabled us to more orderly market our products, at the same time giving that equality to agriculture that is its due, we have found that agriculture like many of our other great industries—farm machinery companies, copper and zinc mines, the great packing plants, and so forth—have not escaped hardships, bankruptcy, and trying situations following the World War; so, if none of these private, better-managed enterprises can finally escape the application of the law of supply and demand, how, I ask you, in all seriousness, can a law be a success that has for its objective trying to get around that law of supply and demand under Government auspices?

I feel, in common with every other member of our committee, that the Government has a moral obligation to aid the wheat farmer because the Government went into the price-fixing business in 1917. When it fixed the price of wheat at $2.20 per bushel at the primary markets this price then was unsatisfactory to the wheat growers, even though it was supposed to be the cost of production plus a reasonable profit for a bushel of wheat in 1917. When this price was fixed by the fair-price committee wheat was selling at $2.72 and had been up to $3.45 per bushel. September 1, 1917, President Wilson issued a proclamation fixing the maximum price of wheat at $2.20 per bushel, and wheat that day fell 52 cents per bushel in all the primary markets. It was and is my understanding that $2.20 was the minimum price that was to be charged; and this board arbitrarily fixed the minimum price as the maximum, which was eminently unfair—unfair because, after establishing that price wages on railroads were increased 146 per cent, freight rates 78 per cent, and the cost of producing that same bushel of wheat increased over 100 per cent. This was far from fair in comparison with the cost-plus shipbuilding program and other profiteering enterprises launched thereafter, and it is for that reason that I claim the Government has a moral obligation to meet; but this bill does not meet it. In addition to all this there was the patriotic slogan, under Government inspiration, "Feed the world," and the farmers of the Northwest heeded the call and increased their acreage in two years by over 18,000,000 acres in wheat alone. The farmers were loaned more money to buy seed wheat, to purchase modern farm machinery, tractors, and so forth; and then came deflation and all its consequent chain of hardships and failure. I was and am perfectly willing to meet that moral obligation, as I see it, in accordance with the plans so carefully worked out by Professor Coulter and his splendid organization that came here from the Northwest in the bill they backed that failed in the Senate, maybe because the McNary-Haugen bill was in the offing. I am willing to meet it in any fair, workable law; but I am unwilling to wish onto this Government, through law, this bill that may open the door for special privilege under the law; that makes great additions to our already enormously large bureaucracy, and the people taxed, then taxed some more, to support and keep up this great extravagance and added burden. I must enter my protest, as a Representative of the farmers on the hills from whence I sprung, against added taxes, for these farmers are also suffering a serious depression because of the surplus milk now flooding our markets, with prices down to less than cost of production, with labor inefficient and almost impossible to get on our farms and at prices that are prohibitive. We are trying to meet our problems, not by coming to Congress but by getting all the milk-producing organizations together and trying to work out our own salvation.

Let us analyze some of the features of the bill now under consideration.

1. Price fixing: The proponents claim the McNary-Haugen bill is not a price-fixing bill. Let me quote you from the language of the bill itself:

> The corporation (United States agriculture export corporation) shall designate a price for such commodities.

And the bill provides the mathematical formuln for such price fixing. What further argument is necessary to prove that this is a price-fixing bill?

What does this United States agricultural export corporation intend to fix prices on? On whatever agricultural products there may be an emergency declared. To-day it is wheat; to-morrow it is corn; the next day it is cattle, "or any food product thereof"; next week it is hogs, " or any food product thereof"; and so on ad infinitum. Thus we will have foisted on this country by law not a temporary but a permanent price-fixing policy until the grand blow-up and the final calamity day arrives, when this perpetual-motion, price-fixing machine, made so by law, runs on its inglorious course to its inevitable end, and that old, never-failing, world-wide law of supply and demand goes into effect, "and the last days shall be worse than the former days," and the poor farmers again taking up a burden a hundred times worse because a Congress ever enacted such a short-sighted law.

Again the proponents of the bill propose that this United States agriculture export corporation is to take care of exports of a great number of agricultural products—wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine. Let us see what these profligate promisors promise. Sheep, for instance, are mentioned. What is the good of setting up the export machinery, holding out this rainbow of promise to the sheepmen, when, since 1914, the United States has been on an importing basis as to mutton and lamb. In 1920 to 1923, inclusive, the Bureau of Animal Industry reports that we exported but 17,000,000 pounds of mutton and imported 97,000,000 pounds. In 1923 we exported 2,000,000 pounds and imported 6,000,000 pounds. How ineffective, therefore, is such a gesture. Impure bunk to the sheepmen, and taxes to the people.

Again let us look at beef. In 1923 our total beef production was 6,916,000,000 pounds. Our home consumption was 6,918,000,000 pounds. It would therefore seem we are on an importing instead of an exporting basis. Why, therefore, indulge in these fruitless promises and set up an expensive export machinery when it is unnecessary and adds more taxes to the people. I could cite you other examples in the bill, if I had the time, of promises and bunk.

If the proponents of the bill, therefore, only intended it for the wheat grower, why do they not frankly state it and prepare a bill on that basis exclusively? They are looking for votes, and under the direct primary law the poor Congressman must feed up his people on promises, and they have been buncoed so much by political promises of laws to lead them into the promised land that you would think they would be fully awake by now. Some are, thank God; but the rest are berating and beseeching the Congress for something that, in its last analysis, is class legislation, which, even if it could become effective, would increase the cost of living to millions upon millions, taxed both directly and indirectly for vicious legislation.

Suppose this law goes into effect and an emergency is declared on only two or three of the commodities, so that it becomes operative only as to those commodities. The additions to the bureaucracy, already overly manned, in Washington—although we have gotten rid of over 110,000 on the civil list alone since March 1, 1921—and the multitude of additional employees made necessary to attend to the details, both at home and abroad, will be something astounding. Taxes and more taxes put on the people, and I can hear the people exclaiming in the language of the Declaration of Independence, "He has elected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat up our substance." I want to go back to my people to render my report as their representative that I have been no party to any scheme to bring a return to such conditions.

If an emergency is declared on cattle, it also includes "any food products of cattle." Take a community of 2,000 people, with at least 500 sales in these products each day. How many agents of the Government would have to be there to see to it that the Government's interests are protected, to pass the equalization fee or scrip, and what a multitude of employees would be necessary in the larger communities.

Let us take the animal, the hog, and see what is possible to happen to him under this bill, as well as to us. Millions of hogs will be offered that the export corporation will be compelled to buy at the ratio prices in the various stockyards of the country. It is unfortunate, but it is true that hogs can not be exported as hogs, therefore they must be slaughtered and processed. The export corporation can not build packing plants, they can not even lease a plant if the existing agencies are adequate for the handling and processing of the hog "on reasonable terms." This corporation can not compel anyone to lease his plant. Small packers, of course, can not handle the large volume, and hogs must be moved quickly. There is but one answer and that answer is, this export corporation if ever an emergency is declared on hogs will find itself at the mercy of the Big Five packers. What may happen to the animal, the hog, may also happen to cattle and sheep, at least on those that we export. Now, suppose the packers and the export corporation get into a disagreement regarding the terms, and so forth, of the contract and figure out the two horns of the dilemma, either, on the one hand, the export corporation loses and passes back to the producer millions upon millions in losses, or else the packers wax fat upon a contract drawn upon their own terms.

In this country to-day there are being built up great cooperative societies and organizations that have proven helpful in the marketing of agricultural products. The McNary-Haugen bill, if it becomes effective, would tend to weaken and ultimately break down these splendid organizations for there is no longer a necessity for such organizations. Uncle Sam is going to protect them, and when the final collapse comes we will have to start anew to build them up again. A tragedy, indeed, to our farmers.

COMPETITION OF THE WORLD

It is axiomatic that high yields tend to make low costs, and that low yields tend to make high costs. The Canadian farmer is now producing practically four times as much wheat as he produced before the war, and his yield averages about 23 bushels per acre. The land, because new and stronger, produces a better quality of wheat than much of our land produces; indeed, some of this Canadian wheat is now imported, even under our present tariff, in order to blend with the wheat produced in the Northwest. As against this, take the vast acreage of North Dakota, for example, with an average yield of about 12 bushels per acre. Take the added cost, therefore, of the production of each bushel of wheat here and how is it to compete or how are the farmers producing wheat in North Dakota to compete on an equality with their Canadian neighbor, who produces at less cost over twice as much per acre and of a better quality?

The McNary-Haugen bill says, "We will set up an embargo or a Chinese prohibitive-tariff wall or law. We will not let the Canadian wheat in." Under such a policy what can we expect Great Britain to do when we propose to dump our 200,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat, as against the Canadian, the Australian, and the Indian competitors, in the Liverpool market? These countries are all part and parcel of the United Kingdom, and you can rest assured Great Britain will protect her own. Do you expect these countries or other countries to sit idly by with folded arms if this dumping policy is put through under Government sanction? The chain of involvements is endless. Canada will at once set up an embargo prohibiting the exportation of wood pulp, and so forth, from Canada into the United States, with authority already granted its Government so to do. Other countries will start in with their policies of retaliation, and our great markets for large surpluses in other lines of agriculture, already built up at great expense and through painstaking effort, will be utterly destroyed. If for no other reason, this bill should be defeated.

Agriculture is indeed in a great depression. The farmer is not only suffering from the relatively low price for what he sells, but he is also paying the penalty in the high price his farm machinery costs. Freight rates either on the machinery he brings to the farm or the products he ships from the farm are very high, owing largely to the increases in the cost of labor on the railroads.

Another burden that is becoming intolerable is the great increase in taxation, whether local, State, or National. There is no one answer to this very difficult situation, but it does mean there must be retrenchment in all governmental expenditures, whether they be local, State, or Federal, in order that taxes may be reduced. Reductions in the tariff in order to reduce the cost of what the farmer has to buy, and finally the restoration of Europe to its intensive manufacturing activity, are splendid, helpful steps. Taxation is breaking the backs of the people, and when this Congress or any other goes cheerfully along its care-free way, voting bonuses and other costly legislation, it is working directly against the farmer, whose land is always in sight and is always soaked by high taxes.

We need more diversified farming, and instead of added capital that flows easily toward the extension of loans in order to increase agriculture in its overly expanded state, we need capital that will only aid in a national diversification program. Private enterprise is trying to help meet the situation. Many of these little banks that spring up overnight in the inflation period in the overly extended and overly expanded Northwest should not have gone in there at all, and it will take time for them to liquidate without losses to depositors. The strong banks of the great cities, like New York, Chicago, Minneapolis, and so forth, have gone to the rescue, along with certain business interests and the railroads, and subscribed $10,000,000 toward the capitalization of a corporation which is authorized to borrow $40,000,000 toward helping to liquidate these frozen assets, and, as I said before, it is not alone the wheat producer, cattle, or hog growers that suffer, but our copper and zinc miners also. The fertilizer and agriculture-machinery interests and other great enterprises are hard pressed as well, but most of all, beloved colleagues, let us not be so foolish as to think through wishing we can add to our stature or that we can raise ourselves by our own boot straps.

The law of supply and demand has been running longer than any of us. Stimulants and artificial methods may temporarily overcome economics, but it is the aftermath I am thinking of, when our great cooperatives shall have become weakened or disappeared, when "the cold, gray dawn of the morning after" shall arrive after the Haugen-McNary bill shall have run its course and agriculture shall have to build again. I can wish no such prospect on the tillers of the soil of to-morrow and shall accordingly vote against this bill.

TARIFF

It is not my purpose to discuss the effects, directly or indirectly, of setting up this tariff or embargo. If you will read the evidence of Mr. T. O. Marvin, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee regarding the tariff features of this bill, on April 2, 1924, you will find that the delegation of power in this bill means that, when it is in operation, a tariff adjustment in at least a hundred items, possibly a great many more, will be involved, as it is not alone the items themselves that are running into competition with our own that we have to protect ourselves against, but substitutes, derivatives, chemical combinations, and so forth.

CONSTITUTIONALITY

I do not intend to submit to you a single argument on the constitutionality, much as I might desire to, for if you can not be convinced upon the economic features alone that this bill is not a proper one to pass at this time. I for one shall not argue further, but leave the legal complications involved in this bill to the lawyers, the United States Supreme Court, and Father Time for answer. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] yields back eight minutes.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, many bills for the relief of the farmers are pending before the Committee on Agriculture. I am glad to be a member of that great committee, one of the most important in Congress, for it deals with the most important legislation. Agriculture is our basic industry and the one upon which all others depend. There can not be any general prosperity in this country unless agriculture is in a prosperous condition. When the farmer receives a fair price for the products of his toil and raises a good crop, all lines of business enjoy his prosperity. Therefore, when we deal with that great industry in a beneficial way we are assisting business in general.

The Committee on Agriculture has been holding hearings almost every day since its organization after the holidays last January, and most of this time has been on the bill now under consideration. The committee was patient and heard every person who expressed a desire to be heard, for we knew that this was an important bill, dealing with an important industry. No member of that committee would do anything that would injure or cripple any legitimate business. We want to see all lines of business prosper and succeed. In the Sixty-seventh Congress I introduced my farmers' warehouse bill, spoke on the floor of the House several times in support of the bill, and argued it before the Committee on Agriculture in that Congress. I also spoke before the committee during this Congress on the bill. It is a good bill and would undoubtedly benefit agriculture. Then there is the Norris-Sinclair bill, which is a good bill and the same in principle as the McNary-Haugen bill. I voted to report that bill from the committee as a substitute for this bill.

I believe every member of that committee would like to do something beneficial for agriculture. I think this bill will bring great relief. Some of my colleagues do not agree with me, but that is their business. This is not a political bill. Agricultural legislation should not be political, nor should any other legislation for the good of the people. What is good for one political party is good for all. Some opposed the Sinclair bill, for they feared it would entail a loss upon the Treasury of the United States. The McNary-Haugen bill eliminates that objection and places the expense of operation and any losses that may occur on the producer of the particular product or the person who benefits by the legislation.

Ah, but some say that it is socialistic. Well, I have often heard that cry used, and so have you, against certain legislation that will benefit the people. That charge does not frighten me, and I am as far from wanting to see the Government engage in business as any of you. This bill is to meet a great emergency. Farmers are leaving the country and drifting to the cities for the reason that they can not longer continue to produce the necessities of life at a loss. Something must be done and done now. If we are going to do anything for the farmers of America, now is the time to act. Harvest will soon be here, and a month's delay will not help the wheat grower this season. Why delay longer? To those who oppose this bill I will ask, What have you to offer? [Applause.] Have you appeared before the committee for any other bill? It is easy to object, but difficult to construct. This bill is not perfect, just as nothing is perfect devised by the hand or mind of man.

Mr. Chairman, all products of the farm could not be included, but the leading grain crops are provided for in the bill. When one leading crop brings a good price, it naturally helps all other crops. If wheat is at a fair price, it enables the wheat farmer to buy more cotton goods with which to clothe his family and thereby helps the cotton farmer. It causes a larger consumption of cotton. It is also a fact that when cotton is at a fair price it helps the price of wheat and all other farm products, for the cotton farmer has more money with which to buy wheat products. If you increase the price of hogs you likewise increase the price of corn. If this measure is as successful as we hope it will be, other leading crops of the country can be included later, for we all realize that the prosperity of this Nation depends upon the prosperity of the farmer. [Applause.]

In addition to the assistance this McNary-Haugen bill will give to cotton by stimulating the price of other products of the farm, Senate bill 2112, identical with House bill 5842, which I introduced, is now the law and discontinues acreage reports based upon farmers' intentions to plant cotton. These reports on intentions to plant cotton were first issued in 1923. That law provides for semimonthly reports on cotton by the Department of Agriculture instead of monthly reports, as heretofore, to be issued at the same time as the ginning reports by the Bureau of the Census. That law also requires that a majority of the cotton-crop reporting board shall be familiar with the methods and practices of producing cotton. Weather and other conditions often make a great change in the cotton crop within a period of two weeks. For instance, the Department of Agriculture estimated July 2, 1923, that there would be 11,412,000 bales of cotton produced in the United States; the estimate December 12, 1923, was 10,081,000 bales and the actual production 10,159,498 bales. These reports greatly affected the price. The purpose of the law will prevent such a wide variance in estimate hereafter and will be a great help to the cotton farmer. It is all nonsense to say that there is great prosperity in this country with the depression in agriculture that we now have.

The McNary-Haugen bill is indorsed by most of the great farm organizations, such as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Farmers' Union, and other great organizations. Under date of April 15, 1924, I received the following telegram:

Oklahoma economic conference, composed of Federation of Labor and all organized labor, farmers' unions, and all other farm class organizations in Oklahoma. Ten State organizations at their quarterly meetings to-day unanimously indorsed the McNary-Haugen bill pending and ask our delegation in Congress to support same.

C. H. HYDE,
Chairman Farm Labor Economic Conference.
IRA M. FINLEY,
Vice Chairman and President Oklahoma State Federation of Labor.
VICTOR S. PURDY,
Secretary and Treasurer Oklahoma State Federation of Labor.

On March 5, 1924, I received the following telegram:

Oklahoma Federation of Labor requests you to support McNary-Haugen bill as the best opportunity to give farmers relief sorely needed.

IRA M. FINLEY,
President.
VICTOR S. PURDY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

Under date of March 4, 1924, I received the following telegram:

I have read the McNary-Haugen bill and personally I am very strong for the measure. I believe I am expressing the sentiment of a large majority of the farmers when I say we hope this will pass at this session. John Simpson out of city. He wrote HARRELD, Oklahoma farmers were 100 per cent for this bill.

OKLAHOMA FARMERS' UNION.
Z. H. LAWTER.

On March 5, 1924, I received the following telegram:

The Oklahoma State Board of Agriculture in regular session to-day unanimously indorsed the McNary-Haugen bill and urge its immediate passage.

A. T. WHITWORTH,
Member of the Board.

Mr. Edgar Wallace, Washington, D. C., representing the American Federation of Labor, appeared before the Committee on Agriculture in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill and said that he represented possibly 5,000,000 workers. Mr. Wallace further said that he wished to go on record as representing the only articulate expression of the workers, to the effect that we are in favor of comprehensive action in order to help the farmers out of their present condition, and to place them on an equality with others.

Mr. J. P. Russell, president of the Farm-Labor Union of Oklahoma, appeared before the committee in behalf of the Sinclair bill, and, among other statements, said that he believed through the Norris-Sinclair bill, or something similar to it, they would be helped to a great extent in marketing their products, and that they were asking the Government to help them to do that through some kind of marketing organization.

Mr. Arthur J. Lovell, vice president and legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen; Mr. W. M. Clark, vice president and national legislative representative, Order of Railway Conductors; also representing the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Mr. E. H. Kruse, assistant to the legislative representative, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and Mr. James C. Noonan, international president, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, appeared before the committee during the hearings on the Norris-Sinclair bill and in support of the bill. Mr. Lovell said that the organization which he represented was in favor of some measure to bring about better conditions for the farmer. Mr. Clark said that the organization which he represented is on record as favoring some bill, whether the Norris-Sinclair bill or some other bill that is satisfactory to the farmers of this country. Mr. Clark further said:

As far as we are concerned, we are not wedded to any particular bill or language, if it benefits the farmer, because that is what we are trying to do.

I wish to congratulate and compliment these great railway brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor for exerting their energies in behalf of the farmers of this country. They want to see the farmer prosper and to receive a reasonable price for his products. I am glad that their honored representatives appeared before the committee in behalf of the farmers of this Nation.

The farmers need help now. This bill will help them, and unless a Member who is opposed to the bill can point out some way in which it will not help them or which will endanger the Government, then it seems to me that he should support the bill. The cost of these products to the consumer need not be increased, for the price of bread and flour now is out of all proportion to the price paid the farmer for his wheat, as the hearings on this bill will show.

Subdivision (c) of section 42, substantially the same as the amendment I offered, was adopted and is as follows:

Inasmuch as operations under this act will not continue for more than five years, the corporation shall cooperate with and encourage formation of associations of producers of agricultural commodities, so that during such period producers may perfect marketing associations for procuring the objects to be accomplished by operations under this act, and after the termination of the general emergency such associations of producers will be prepared to assist in producing orderly and efficient production, distribution, and marketing of agricultural commodities.

I also offered subdivisions (b), (c), and (d) of section 53, which provide that the books of the corporation shall be open to inspection to any person or governmental agency of the United States designated for the purpose by Executive order of the President, any governmental agency authorized by concurrent resolution of the Congress, and any committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives when authorized by resolution of the Senate or the House of Representatives, respectively.

The provisions of the bill relating to the cooperatives will be a great stimulus to their further organization, and the transactions of the corporation will naturally be through these associations, when possible, for the best interests of the producers of the agricultural commodities bought and sold under the provisions of this measure. These cooperative associations have done and are now doing a great work for agriculture, but, in the interest of the farmers of the country, need encouragement and assistance until they are able to handle their products effectively themselves.

Another good amendment adopted was the one offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY]. This is subdivision (b) of section 203, and eliminates scrip. This will be a great saving, as the handling of scrip would put an additional burden on the postmasters and would cause another heavy outlay in additional help in the post offices. The scrip would have caused a great deal of inconvenience to the producers. Under this bill as it is now written the purchaser of the agricultural commodity gives a receipt to the producer, who may keep this receipt, and if there is any balance in the treasury of the corporation after the payment of all expenses and losses may receive his pro rata part. I believe that the corporation will be able to figure out just about the expense of handling the business; but if there should be anything left from the equalization or expense fund, the farmer is entitled to his part of what is left.

The bill provides that if there is a surplus for export of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine, and that the ratio price in respect to such commodity would be in excess of the domestic price the board shall immediately notify the President, whose duty it shall be to declare that a special emergency exists as to such agricultural commodity. Further provision is made that as soon as practicable after the issuance of such proclamation declaring a special emergency in respect of a basic agricultural commodity the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Labor shall jointly prepare the average price for such commodity during the period 1905 to 1914, inclusive.

The corporation is composed of the Secretary of Agriculture and four persons appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the States within each of the following groups of Federal land-bank districts: One from districts 1, 2, and 4; one from districts 3, 5, and 10; one from districts 6, 7, and 8; and one from districts 9, 11, and 12. These persons constitute the board of directors, and the President designates one of the directors as managing director. The bill further provides that not more than two of the appointed directors shall be members of the same political party.

Under the terms of the bill all purchasers of the basic agricultural commodity by the corporation must be at the ratio price, and when the producer sells such product he will receive therefor such ratio price. At the present time the market price of wheat is about $1 per bushel, and the ratio price is about $1.57 per bushel. If it should take 10 cents per bushel to handle the corporation in regard to wheat, the farmer would receive $1.47 per bushel and would receive a receipt for 10 cents per bushel. At the end of the year if it did not take 10 cents per bushel to handle his wheat, he would receive back his proportionate part of the 10 cents per bushel. Of course, the farmer would prefer the $1.47 per bushel and whatever part of the balance of the equalization fund to which he would be entitled. If he did not receive anything for his receipt, he would be 47 cents per bushel better off than without the operation of this bill. Why not do as much for him as for our other citizens? Many want to help the farmer if it will not cost anything. He pays all operation expenses of this measure; he wants to try it, and why not pass the bill? The Government can not lose anything. Objections have been made to other bills for his relief for the reason that it might cost the Government something. Here is a bill that costs the Government nothing. All costs are paid by the producer whose products are sold under the terms of the bill.

Wheat production costs, 1919 to 1923, inclusive.

[Costs as given by the Agricultural College of North Dakota]

Year	Average yield per acre (bushels)	Average cost—
		Per acre	Per bushel
1919	7.5	$18.48	$2.47
1920	11.2	20.37	1.83
1921	9.9	14.09	1.43
1922	13.5	13.84	1.03
1923	8.2	12.23	1.49

Corn production costs, 1921 and 1922

[Computed on average State yields for Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana]

Year	Average yield per acre (bushels)	Average cost—
		Per acre	Per bushel
1921	34	$21.76	$0.64
1922	34	20.83	.61

Mr. Chairman, these figures on cost of production of wheat and corn are for the Wheat and Corn Belts of the United States, and the cost of production will, of course, be greater where the production per acre is less. It will thus be seen that farmers can not continue to produce these indispensable products at less than cost. No business man can continue his business at that rate and the farmer can not much longer continue to produce these products unless something is done to help him. A man can not raise wheat that costs him from $1.03 to $2.47 per bushel to raise and sell it for less than a dollar per bushel. The same is also true of corn and other products of the farm.

The first products that will likely be handled by this bill if it becomes a law are wheat and pork and their products.

With the increased cost of everything the farmer is compelled to buy, caused largely by the outrageous Fordney-McCumber tariff law enacted by the last Congress, it is about time that something was done for the farmer who has to contribute under that tariff law to the pockets of the manufacturers for the necessities that he must buy to feed and clothe his family and make his crop. With our agricultural exports falling from the enormous sum of $3,466,619,819 in 1920 to $1,883,315,000 in 1922 and $1,820,000,000 in 1923 after the present tariff law began to work, it is evident that something must be done. There is no chance to repeal that unfair and unequal law in this Congress, and the only opportunity we have to put the farmer on an equal basis with these beneficiaries of that tariff law is by the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill now under consideration by this House. Our exports have fallen from $8,100,000,000 in 1920 to $4,000,000,000 in 1923. [Applause.]

Some have argued that the enactment of this bill will cause a greater production of wheat. In answer to that argument I state that the greatest production of wheat was in 1915, when we produced in the United States 1,025,801,000 bushels; in 1918 we produced 921,438,000 bushels; in 1919, 967,979,000 bushels; and in 1923, 786,000,000 bushels. Then the farmer knows that if the production of wheat is greatly increased that the price will decrease and with additional acreage to wheat, the price of his other crops will be increased. Those conditions will keep the production to about normal.

Mr. Chairman, if the farmer could exchange a part of his products in foreign markets for goods and articles needed on the farm, a long step would be taken for his assistance, and I supported the following amendment offered to the bill:

> The corporation shall have power to an amount or amounts not exceeding its sales in foreign markets to purchase in such foreign markets any goods, except farm products, and to enter such goods into the United States free of tax or duty for sale or disposition in the domestic market at the best price obtainable, and shall give preference in the sale of such goods to cooperative marketing associations.

That is a good amendment and should be adopted, for it would be a great help to the farmers whom we propose to assist under the terms of this bill. However, just because the bill is not just as I would have it is no reason for my opposing the measure.

The bill authorizes, it is true, an appropriation of $200,000,000 from the Federal Treasury, and is empowered to issue its notes, bonds, and other evidence of indebtedness in the sum of five times its capital stock. This appropriation will be returned to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, under the guaranty provisions of the transportation act of 1920 the Government has paid to the railroads of the country the enormous sum of $551,000,000 cash, not including the large amounts paid the railroads for use, upkeep, and operation during the period of Federal control. The Interstate Commerce Commission sees that the railroads make a good profit, but nothing is done for the farmer. The net revenue from railway operations in 1921, as given by the Interstate Commerce Commission, was $969,346,226; in 1922, $1,162,779,249; and $1,412,962,592 in 1923.

The last Congress appropriated $20,000,000 for Russia, and the House in this Congress voted to give $10,000,000 to Germany. I voted against these appropriations. Congress is very generous with the people's money for these purposes, and then I ask, why turn a deaf ear to our own farmers and our own people, that they may enjoy a little prosperity? I want all legitimate business to prosper and receive a fair return on investment and work. I also want the farmer brought to this level.

Among opponents of the bill are such business institutions, great and powerful, as the National City Bank of New York, which is sending its "Analysis of the McNary-Haugen bill" to Members of Congress. This institution devotes more than one page of its booklet to the scrip provision of the bill, and this provision has been eliminated. It then devotes more than another page as to how the bill will injure the cotton farmers, and cotton is not in the bill. These seem to be its two principal objections. With these two provisions eliminated, what does this great banking institution have to say? I presume it will find other objections. It tries to show that "Metals and metal products" are more depressed than agriculture. Well, no doubt this bank knows more about "metal" than it does about agriculture and cares a great deal more. Note that this bank does not condemn the present protective tariff law, but says "A protective tariff has the merit of simplicity as compared with this measure." Such institutions as the Illinois Manufacturers' Association of Chicago, the Washington Post, the large exporters, and the New York and Chicago boards of trade oppose the bill, but these will not deter me from supporting the bill, for I am more interested in helping the farmer than in listening to these "Wall Street" arguments. It seems to worry the National City Bank of New York because the working people of the country are for a bill to assist the farmers. These workers know that agriculture needs some helpful legislation.

This bill provides that the ratio price of any basic agricultural commodity shall bear the same relation to the pre-war basic commodity price as the current all-commodities price bears to the pre-war all-commodity price. Below is a table prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, showing how the bill will affect the prices of certain agricultural commodities:

Market prices of commodities

Index of all commodities, 1905–1914	100.0
Index of all commodities, year 1923	162.3
Index of all commodities, December, 1923	159.8

Individual commodities	Average market price			Ratio price
	1905–1914	1923	December, 1923	1923	December, 1923
Corn: Contract grades, cash, Chicago	$0.602	$0.821	$0.730	$0.977	$0.962
Wheat: Range of No. 1 northern spring and No. 2 red winter, Chicago	1.000	1.163	1.097	1.624	1.598
Cattle: Good to choice, steers, Chicago	6.853	9.952	9.785	11.123	10.949
Hogs: Heavy, Chicago	7.099	7.690	7.050	11.522	11.342
Sheep: Wethers, Chicago	5.379	7.648	8.000	8.731	8.594
Flour: Patents	5.127	6.365	6.100	8.322	8.192
Wool: One-fourth and three-eighths grades, scoured basis	.492	.979	.964	.799	.787

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. I would like to finish my statement, and then I will yield if I have time.

Mr. TINCHER. I know the gentleman does not want to mislead the House. The gentleman does not say anything about the price of wheat when the Fordney-McCumber Act was passed.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Missouri give me five more minutes?

Mr. RUBEY. I yield the gentleman five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Oklahoma is the fourth largest cotton State in the Union. The main crop in my State is cotton. The main crop in lots of other States is cotton. The farmers who need help more than anybody else are the cotton farmers. Yet this bill does not help them at all.

Mr. SWANK. Cotton was originally in this bill, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] called all the Members together from the cotton-producing States; did you not, Mr. ASWELL?

Mr. ASWELL. Yes.

Mr. SWANK. And it was the unanimous opinion of that meeting that cotton should be eliminated. As I stated before, an increase in the price of the products covered by this bill will help the cotton farmer and all other farmers.

If this bill had been in operation last December, instead of receiving $1 per bushel for his wheat the farmer would have received $1.59 per bushel; instead of receiving 73 cents per bushel for his corn he would have received 96 cents per bushel. These are the prices he would have received at that time, less the expense of operation. The ratio price for wheat last January was $1.50 per bushel, the same for February, and $1.48 per bushel for March for No. 2 hard winter wheat. The average market price last December for good to choice steers in Chicago was $9.78, and the ratio price was $10.94, and the average market price for hogs, heavy, in Chicago was $7.05, and the ratio price was $11.34. The ratio price for hogs in this market for last January was $11.35; February, $11.37; and March, $11.25.

Mr. Chairman, some object to the tariff provision of the bill. I do not believe in the theory of a high protective tariff, and opposed the present Fordney-McCumber law, but everyone knows that if this bill is put into operation on wheat, for instance, that it is necessary to put an embargo on wheat and not permit any to be shipped into the United States, for if importations were permitted it would destroy the operations of the bill. But little wheat is now imported, yet much would, of course, be imported if the bill increased the price of wheat from $1 per bushel to from $1.50 to $1.60 per bushel, as it will do. To those who object to that provision, let me call your attention to the food control act, approved August 10, 1917, which contained a similar provision, and in fact the provision in this bill was taken from the food control act, which act gave the President at that time the power to fix the price of wheat. That power to fix the import duty was necessary then while the price of wheat was fixed, and it will be necessary under the provisions of this bill. A vote for this bill with that provision is no indication that a Member of Congress believes in a high tariff any more than it was an indication in 1917 under our Democratic administration.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, arguments against this bill can not stand when confronted with the facts. The question before us now is this: Do you want to help the farmer, in whose behalf many talk and few act? This bill will greatly assist him in recovering from the depression of his prices during the past four years, and will show him that we are interested in his welfare and the welfare of his family. I hope the bill will become a law, and would like to see it pass this House without a dissenting vote. I am not so anxious to see a few pile up huge fortunes as I am to see the masses of the people reasonably prosperous. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum at this time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SANDERS of Indiana). The gentleman from New York suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL].

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], who has just concluded, prefaced his remarks, as have many of those who oppose this bill, with the statement that he would be glad to be for it if he thought it would work. He would be glad to support it in the interest of the American farmer if he thought it a practical measure. Now, gentlemen, as you all well know, the work of the Congress, with which you are as familiar as I, has become so complex and so comprehensive that of necessity we conduct it very largely through committees. When this bill came to this House it bore the indorsement of 14 members of the Committee on Agriculture, without regard to politics. This bill not only has the indorsement of 14 members of the Committee on Agriculture who have given it unlimited study but it has the indorsement of the Secretary of Agriculture, the statement of my good friend from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] to the contrary notwithstanding. It has the indorsement of over 200 farm organizations, a list of which is set out in the printed report and which includes almost every farm organization in this country. I am not one of those Members who are stampeded by petitions, telegrams, or propaganda, because I have been here now just about long enough to recognize propaganda when it comes in, but I am impressed with the almost universal demand for this legislation coming from our farmers. I hold in my hand a petition from my own State of Indiana signed by from 60,000 to 70,000 farmers, bankers, doctors, lawyers, and business men, who believe that the McNary-Haugen bill will give some relief to the American farmer. I have not counted them all, however. This great Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor to be a member, has not reported this bill without due and careful consideration. For two long months we sat in session day after day listening to men from every part of the country, in every kind of business, both for and against this plan. For one month the Committee on Agriculture sat in executive session and considered line by line this proposed legislation. One month more was consumed in the consideration and discussion, informally, of the bill, so that it is not a hastily prepared bill. The Secretary of Agriculture, for whose ability, honesty, and fairness I have the highest regard, in a letter addressed to Senator NORRIS a short time ago, said, among other things, in discussing this bill:

> As I have previously testified both before the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture, I believe that the principles embodied in this bill are fair and just to farmers and to other groups of citizens, and that this bill is the most practical measure yet suggested for the purpose of overcoming some of the economic injustices under which the farmers of this country have been working for three years.

I shall not read all of Secretary Wallace's letter, but this extract from it will clearly show the Secretary's attitude toward the bill. The Secretary of Agriculture is in favor of this bill as are 14 members of the Committee on Agriculture, who after careful deliberation and study, recognizing that perhaps it is not perfect, and that perhaps it lays itself open to some criticism, yet believe it to be the only constructive thing presented to this House that offers the American farmer immediate relief, and God knows he needs relief and needs it now, as these lines on this chart clearly demonstrate.

Let me suggest to some of you gentlemen just what we were "up against" when we began the consideration of this bill. We had a choice between two courses. I am assuming that no Member of this House gainsays the proposition that the American farmer is at the lowest ebb in his existence. I am assuming that no Member of this House would undertake to refute the statement that the American farmer is passing through the most serious depression that has ever come upon him in the history of this Government. With that thought in mind, and with the thought in mind further that immediate relief, not relief in the distant future, is necessary to save not only the farmer but the banker and the business man who have extended him credit, we found ourselves confronted with a choice, as I say, between two courses. We could either seek through legislation to drag these lines [indicating on chart] downward until they meet this line [indicating] represented by the farmer's condition to-day or else seek to lift that line to meet the others. The latter seemed easier, and it was with that thought in mind that we drafted this bill.

And I want to impress upon the membership of this House, especially upon those who may have been affected by the statement that this is bolshevistic, that it is socialistic—I want to impress upon them that this is not a permanent policy of this Government if enacted into law, but that it is a temporary piece of emergency legislation. It is a pulmotor which this Congress is seeking to apply not only to the American farmer but to those who are dependent upon him.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I will yield to my friend from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that the proposition was presented to the Committee on Agriculture to make a choice between a constructive policy and a destructive policy, and the committee took the constructive policy.

Mr. PURNELL. The gentleman has stated the fact exactly as it is. If we had chosen the former, the result would have been to drag down wages, to drag down the price of every other commodity in this country until it reached a level that would be on a parity with the price of the things that the farmer raised; and, as I said a moment ago, the latter course seemed easier.

This plane [indicating on chart] represents the things that the farmer has to buy, and this one [indicating] represents the things he has to sell. They are entirely too far apart. It was the duty of the Committee on Agriculture to present something constructive to this Congress that would tend to bring those two planes closer together. And so we went back to the 1905–1914 period of 10 years, during which time there was practically a normal, rational, and equitable parity between the price that the farmer receives for his products and the price of the things that he has to buy; and we are asking by this present emergency legislation to lift the farmer out of his present dilemma and to transplant and transport him back to that prewar normal 1905–1914 period, when he got a reasonable return upon his investment as well as a reasonable return upon his labor.

It is necessary to keep a few facts in mind when you consider this bill. One is that the farmer during the last four years has passed through the most disastrous panic agriculture has suffered in the history of the Nation. Although 40 per cent of our people, or to be exact 42,436,776, live in unincorporated places, mostly on the farms, and nearly half of our population is directly dependent upon agriculture, we find that the products of the farm are at such a wide variance with other commodities that farming has not only ceased to be a gainful occupation but it is actually being carried on at a loss.

Now, what is the reason for it? Consider wheat, for instance, because that is more easily understood. And I want to say that I am not one of those that think that wheat is the only thing that can be favorably affected by this bill. I think we all mention wheat because it is easier for everybody to understand. But if you can make it workable for wheat, you can in the same way make it workable for all other products.

Let us not flippantly deal with the situation that is so serious to the American farmer, when we might look profitably at the principle that is involved.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; for a short question.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman tell us how it will affect the farmer who raises stock and cattle? That is what I am directly interested in.

Mr. PURNELL. Yes; the gentleman has asked that question four or five times to-day.

Mr. RAKER. And I have not had an answer yet.

Mr. PURNELL. If you will take my friend from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] out into the cloakroom, he will give you the information desired.

Mr. RAKER. He admitted that he could not.

Mr. PURNELL. No, sir; he never admitted that he could not answer anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I think I can answer it. If the ratio price will increase the price of your beef animals 2.6 cents per pound that would be the solution.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that he ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to take his friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] into the cloakroom and have him answer.

Mr. PURNELL. I am sure the answer that would be given on the question by my good friend and Democratic colleague from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] would be worth more than anything that I could say.

The price of wheat is not controlled by the flow of wheat to the domestic market, but is and always has been controlled by the price at Liverpool, less the cost of transportation. The Liverpool price is fixed by competition from the Argentina, from India, Russia, Hungary, and other parts of the demoralized and stricken world. All of the commodities except agricultural commodities have advanced 60 per cent on the average, while crops and livestock have advanced only 17 per cent from 1913 to 1923.

Clothing has gone up 101 per cent, metals and metal products have gone up 41 per cent, building materials have gone up 81 per cent, house furnishings have gone up 76 per cent, while crops and livestock have gone up only 17 per cent. From the figures I have just given you it will be seen that if the farmer was getting his share—and by share I mean a reasonable return upon his investment and a reasonable price for his labor—he would be getting about 43 per cent more for his products than he now receives. But he is not getting his 43 per cent because his exportable surplus comes in contact and competition with other countries that are stricken and demoralized.

Now, some of our other industries are aided by our tariff and by our immigration policies. In reality this is a tariff measure. This bill seeks to give tariff protection to agriculture. If we are willing to pass a tariff law and an immigration law to protect American labor and the products of the American laborers from competition with the underpaid laborers and their products in the old countries, then we ought, in simple justice to the American farmer, to be willing to pass a bill that will apply the tariff principle to him and his products. [Applause.]

This bill is not complicated and unworkable, as some of its opponents have suggested. On the other hand, I regard it as fairly simple. The purpose of this bill is clear. This whole discussion can be stripped of 75 per cent of the extraneous matter that has been brought into it, and it can all be boiled down into this clear, succinct statement: The purpose of this bill is to segregate the exportable surplus from the domestic supply, to sell that surplus in the world market at the world price, and to sell the normal domestic supply on a reasonable parity with all other commodities.

The destroyed purchasing power of the farmer is the real basis of his present unfortunate condition. The restoration of the purchasing power of a few great farm products to an equality in purchasing power with the average enjoyed during the 10-year period, 1905–1914, is the remedy we are seeking to apply in this bill. And certainly, gentlemen, this is a very modest and a very reasonable demand.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. For a brief question.

Mr. RAKER. I hope the gentleman will not quit me or claim the question has been answered. I will repeat it again, and I would like an answer from this gentleman because I know he knows.

Mr. PURNELL. You are going to ask about your steers?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. PURNELL. I am going to get to that in a few minutes.

Mr. RAKER. One gentleman suggested to me that it did not apply to stags.

Mr. PURNELL. Steers, I said. The farmer sold his wheat in November, 1923, for 92 cents per bushel. With the aid of this bill he would have sold it at $1.52, and had he sold it at $1.52 he would have gotten a reasonable return on his investment in land and upon his labor.

Nobody for or against this bill questions the right of the American farmer—and I use the word "right" advisedly—to have received last November $1.52 for his wheat rather than 92 cents; and this bill, had it been in operation then, would have given him just that amount. In other words, our farmers would have received something like $36,000,000 more for their wheat last November than they did receive.

Now, I want to call attention to a few of the suggestions which have been made here by some of the gentlemen who oppose this bill. One of the principal indictments that have been brought against it is that it is a price-fixing bill. If I had thought the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] had seriously meant what he said this morning about this being Bolshevistic legislation and communistic, I should have resented it, because, if I know myself, I do not believe there is a drop of that sort of blood in my veins, and I am against the principle of price fixing as a permanent policy of this Government. I am against the Government's interference in private business, and I am against the Government going into business than can be done by private individuals. But I am saying to you gentlemen that which you already know, namely, that unusual conditions demand heroic remedies. I do not admit, in making that statement, that this is a price-fixing bill.

A price that fluctuates with all other commodities and that only protects the farmer in the same ratio that the manufacturer and laborer are protected by the tariff and restricted immigration can hardly be called "fixed." But if it be price fixing pure and simple, I undertake to say that as emergency legislation needed to save America's basic industry we had better indulge in price fixing rather than see it destroyed. [Applause.]

I do not agree with the gentlemen who say it will cause overproduction. If it does cause overproduction, and if it encourages it, then that is a matter of concern for the farmers themselves rather than for the opponents of this bill, because it must be borne in mind that the farmer is the man who pays this bill in the end anyway. [Applause.]

The farmers of the country want this legislation. If production is excessive, then the effect will be heavier assessments and lower prices for farm products. Assessments increase as production increases, hence this bill, in my judgment, will, after it has come into operation, guarantee against overproduction rather than encourage it. There may be a tendency in the beginning, before it is thoroughly understood and before it is working as well as we hope to have it work, that overproduction will be encouraged, but whenever the farmers of this country realize that overproduction penalizes them they will use the machinery of this Government that is provided in this bill and that is already in existence to avoid that overproduction.

Objection has been made to this bill because of the amount of surplus that will be in the dealers' hands in this country. The statement has been made that if this bill goes into effect there will be something like $252,000,000 worth of meat products in the hands of the packers that will be enhanced greatly in value overnight. That may be true, but I do not agree with the gentleman who preceded me that there will be anything like $100,000,000 profit, because that is not a fact.

On five or six of the commodities affected by this bill the total increase in the hands of the dealers on all of the products is but $121,000,000. On meat products alone $54,000,000, as I recall; but what of that? Suppose we do pass this bill and suppose to-morrow morning the men with wheat—and, by the way, 20 per cent of that wheat is in the hands of cooperative elevators and in the farmers' hands—suppose in the morning we do wake up and find that those who have the wheat and the wheat products, the meat and live cattle, have profited by the passage of this bill to the extent of $121,000,000? Is that anything unusual? Is not that exactly what happens when we pass a tariff law? Do not the ships of all countries rushing under full steam head for our ports, their ships loaded to the gunwales, in an effort to get inside of our borders before a new tariff bill goes into effect?

Is there anything unusual about that, and even though it is unusual, I undertake to say that it is worth ten times $121,000,000 if we can restore the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar. [Applause.]

This bill provides specifically for the utilization of existing agencies, and any suggestion that the packers will adopt any policies other than those which now control their operations is far-fetched and urged only for the purpose of discrediting the bill. Everybody knows that the packers can and will continue to do the meat-packing business better than the Government, and that they will readily and willingly cooperate with the Government.

It has been suggested that this bill may produce some foreign entanglements and that other countries may retaliate, because the American farmer gets an American price for that portion of his crop consumed in this country, and because foreign countries continue to buy our surplus at the world price as they have been doing in the past. The fact is, they would go on getting their wheat and other products at the same old price, and would have no cause or desire for retaliation.

If the bill is unworkable, it is a matter of concern to the farmers rather than any other class, because he pays the great bulk of the bill. It is true this proposed legislation may result in a slight increase in the cost of living, but the farmer, who represents about 40 per cent of the population of the country, bears his part of that increase. In my judgment this is the only legislation now pending before Congress which offers that immediate relief which is necessary to save our farmers from complete ruin. The farmers can no longer continue to operate their farms and produce the food for the Nation at a loss. Every man who tills the soil is entitled to a fair return upon his investment and a profit for his labor. He is not receiving such a return at this time. This bill may have some objectionable features, but it is the only constructive plan before us. I am willing to give it a trial in the hope that we may thus restore the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar. This Nation can not exist industrially free and agriculturally in bondage any more than it could exist half slave and half free during the days of the Civil War. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. May I have two or three minutes more, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I ask that the gentleman be given additional time. Maybe he will yield to me then.

Mr. PURNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am sorry I can not yield further time.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. It is manifestly impossible in the time at my command to analyze this complicated bill and discuss all its features. Perhaps most wisely I may address myself to that phase of it which particularly concerns the people whom I am supposed to represent. Not alone for the people of my own district would I speak, however, but for the consumers of all the United States.

Four years ago the President, diverting his attention from the League of Nations, besought us to stay here and attack the high cost of living. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will recall that sizzling August when we faced the problem of reducing the price of food. By the way, he will also recall that the remedy suggested was a bill relating to cold storage, of which we never heard more. I wish the chairman would tell me where is the grave of that bill that I may visit it and drop a tear and pray that its soul may rest in peace. [Laughter.]

Times change. Four years ago we roasted here during the summer that we might reduce the cost of food. This year the newspapers tell us we may be compelled to roast into another August that we may raise the price of food.

The way here proposed to do it is to compel the American consumer to pay higher prices for certain staple articles of food—for example, half as much again for wheat. A Government corporation, with $200,000,000 of the taxpayers' money as working capital and the right to borrow a billion more, is to buy all the staples that may be offered, at the price determined, which will automatically establish the price the American consumer will pay in turn. It is to sell in foreign markets the surplus, the excess not consumable here, at whatever price it will bring, a price surely far below the cost of production. This means that what the farmer and the foreign consumer gain the American consumer loses. What will be the result from the point of view of the American consumer, 80,000,000 of him, 80,000,000 of the people of the United States?

I wish my friends from the far West would consent for one minute to recognize that a man from New England no longer represents only half a dozen States when he speaks for the consumer. New England is now the tail of the industrial dog. It has, to be sure, 1,200,000 persons engaged in manufacture, but in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin there are more than 2,000,000 persons engaged in manufacture. The value of the product in New England is about $5,000,000,000. The value of the product in these east North Central States, as they are called, is more than $12,000,000,000. And this takes no account of the industries of the Middle and Southern States.

I am not speaking for a small section of the country nor a small fraction of the people. I am speaking for all those who toil in the factory, who work on the railroads or in the mines, for all those wherever they may be, other than on the farms, who earn a daily living in the sweat of their brow, 80,000,000 of them. What will this bill do to 80,000,000 of the people of the United States?

The weekly letter of the American Federation of Farm Bureaus, the body supposed to be the most powerful influence behind this measure, on the 28th of last February said the McNary-Haugen bill would mean $1,000,000,000 to the farmers of this country. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], in that most remarkable and effective speech night before last, put the possible cost, direct and indirect, at $2,000,000,000 or possibly more; but let us take the figure put forward by the proponents of the bill, its dearest and warmest friends, $1,000,000,000, and see what it means to the 80,000,000 consumers of the United States.

Everybody agrees that this program will increase the price of a barrel of flour by $2.50. The average annual consumption of flour in this country is a little more than one barrel to each person. You have simply to multiply the number of people in your own city or town by the figure $2.50 to find out how much it will cost your neighbors on wheat flour alone. It will cost the city of New York $14,000,000 a year. It will cost the city of Boston $2,000,000 a year. I come from a small city, having but 32,000 people. It will cost my neighbors in that city $80,000 in one year on wheat flour alone.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not as yet.

You tell me the West is in distress and we out of our abundance ought to make such sacrifices. There came to my desk this morning the bulletin for April as to activity in the cotton-spinning industry. By the official figures here it appears that almost 6,000,000 spindles in this country are idle. This does not take into account other millions of spindles running on part time. Two weeks ago one of the oldest mills in the land, within half a mile of my house, cut down its working time from six to four days in a week.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. No; not now.

Nonproduction and unemployment are found on every hand in my neighborhood. You are bringing to us this bill at a time when we have just as much ground for turning the proposal upon you. I know some gentlemen will say that we will have prosperity again for all these textile mills and shoe factories if we but restore the farmer to prosperity. Speed the day when prosperity comes to him, but do not bring him prosperity at a cost that may in the end ruin him and destroy us.

Go further into this matter of the cost. I have spoken to you only of wheat and told you it will cost the people of my city $80,000. According to the figures of the American Federation of Farm Bureaus, those who advocate this bill, that is only one-fifth of the cost. Multiply $80,000 by 5 and you have $400,000 that you ask my little city in this time of distress to turn over to one group of the people in one part of the country.

Why, the whole tax levied on the property in my city is only about a million dollars a year. You ask us by this sales tax, the most burdensome of all forms of taxation, to add $400,000 to the million dollars of property tax in my city. Is there a Representative of the farming district here who has not proclaimed loudly against a sales tax? Have you as Representatives of the agricultural interests not fought it first, last, and all the time, because you know that it is a tax on the consumer? Now, here you urge a tax that is the most iniquitous of all forms of the sales tax because it bears on bread, the staff of life.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not now. You who have traveled, you who have seen the countries of the world, know that everywhere bread is the staff of life for the poor. The rich man eats little, if any, more bread than the poor man. Indeed, the diversity of his diet makes it probable that he eats less wheat than the poor man. So you are going to impose a tax that will be practically the same whether paid by those who are in the greatest distress or those who hardly feel the depression at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not now. Yesterday our conferees reached an agreement on a revenue bill in which we all hope we can take some measure of pride. One feature of it to which every Member will point with satisfaction is that we put a heavier tax on the rich man than we put on the poor man. You have graduated the tax. Gentlemen on one side rejoice because the conferees have put the maximum at 40 per cent; most gentlemen on the other side would have preferred the maximum to be lower, but all Members on both sides believe in a graduated tax, and that the greater burden should be on the stronger shoulders.

To-day you present a proposition under which you will put a level sales tax alike on the weakest shoulders, those of the unfortunates who are near the door of the poorhouse, and those of the wealthy man in his palace on the hill. How can you justify yourselves by making such a demand as this on the working people, the toiling masses of the land?

Ah, but you say that agriculture is necessary for the prosperity of the country; you say it is the basic industry, fundamentally important. Well, so it is. You remember somebody asked Andrew Carnegie which was the most important—labor, capital, or brains. He retorted: "Which is the most important leg of a three-legged stool?" Will you gentlemen tell me which is the most important leg of the three-legged stool on which the Nation rests—agriculture, manufacture, or commerce? [Applause.] Are not all three necessary to the prosperity of the land? We do want agriculture to prosper; we will help it in every reasonable way; but what we say is that its prosperity should be in the main left to the working of laws of economics, that are never defied without disaster.

What is the situation? Why, it is this: On one-fifth of the wheatlands of this country, lands the most remote or of the poorest quality, lands that can not produce wheat except at a loss, farmers persist in continuing to raise crops. You are distressed because the farmers operating the worst lands or those in the worst situation can no longer make a living. And you are asking us, 80,000,000 of the consumers of the country, to pay for the cost of cultivating the worst lands.

You say that about one-fifth of the crop, equal to that grown on the unprofitable lands, is surplus and you desire to sell it abroad. You want to tax the masses of the people of the United States in order that one-fifth of the wheat crop, grown at a loss, may be put into the mouths of our competitors in Leeds, Manchester, the Ruhr, Lyon, Milan, and all the other manufacturing cities of Europe. You are asking us to feed the people of Europe at a lower price to them than you will accept from the consumers in the United States.

You are asking that as an inevitable result of an increase in the cost of living our employers be forced to pay still higher wages, while employers in Europe, as an inevitable result of a lowered cost of living, can pay still smaller wages. As the sure sequence, you are asking that the prices of all American-made articles shall be raised, while the prices of all foreign-made articles are lowered. So you are asking us to help those against whom we raise the tariff wall.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not just now. In order to feed the people of the rest of the world, you are asking us to put this enormous sales tax on the people of this country.

What is our remedy? Why, the natural remedy, the remedy of nature herself, the remedy of the competitive system, the remedy of the laws of economics. Cut down the products. You say that is cruel; you say it is hard. Well, it was hard on the manufacturers of this country to close down after the Great War some of the factories they had built. It is hard for them to-day to lay off the men and shut the doors. It is the cruel law of the competitive system, but it is the just law; it is the law under which we have become prosperous, and the only law under which we can survive.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. How about the tariff?

Mr. LUCE. I shall come to the tariff if the gentleman will wait until I reach it in the orderly course of my remarks.

Economic law says when agriculture is overproductive lessen its production.

Only the other day we passed an agricultural appropriation bill here. We brought the total of what we had spent to develop agriculture up to $600,000,000 since 1881—all expended in order that on the farms fewer men may do more work. By the invention of agricultural machinery we have made it possible for one man to do that which it took 15 men to do a century ago. Within a few years we have put upon the farms 450,000 tractors, between 350,000 and 400,000 trucks, and more than 4,000,000 automobiles—all presumed, and I think properly so, to lessen the labor of the farmer; to make it possible for fewer men to feed the rest of the country.

Now, having done this thing, why do you, the moment after you pass these huge appropriations for good roads and all the other things that help agriculture, come here and complain of the very result that you meant to accomplish by those appropriations?

You have made it possible for many fewer people to live on the farm. Half a century ago it took the labor of one family in this country to feed itself and one other. Presently the man labor was brought down so that one family could feed two others. To-day you have reached the point where one family can feed three others, and only one-quarter of the people remain on the farms. The change goes on. Why, according to your own Department of Agriculture in 1922 more than a million people left the farms and went to the cities in excess of those who went the other way. According to the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation in 1923 another million left the farms and went to the cities. In two years more than 2,000,000 people were taken away from the farm, where almost every speaker here intimates it is not an attractive place to live. I doubt that. I would rather live on a farm than anywhere else, but every man who speaks for the farmer feels it necessary to deplore the lot of the farmer. Assuming that you gentlemen who speak for the farmer are telling the truth, assuming that it is an undesirable life, you have seen as a result of peace and of what has been done to make farm labor more productive 2,000,000 people in two years returning to the joys and comforts of city life. I say that with irony, because I hold life on the farm to be happier than anywhere else; but you evidently think it is desirable to have 2,000,000 people go from the farm to the city or else you would not continue to make appropriations and encourage invention that this very thing may result. The program is going to keep on if you will let economic laws work out their natural ends.

You want another remedy? Find it in diversifying your crops. Find it in other suggestions put before you by the Department of Agriculture. Do not, for Heaven's sake, look for it in legislation.

You suggest, however, that in the shape of the tariff there has been legislation to help some parts of the country. You want to know why you can not have a protection for agriculture of the same nature that you say manufacture has for itself.

The gentleman who preceded me declared that this is a tariff bill; that it is a proposal to apply the tariff principle. If that be true, it is applying the tariff by turning it upside down. The tariff was made to develop industry. You do not ask this to develop agriculture. Do you want more farms? Do you want more wheat produced? Why, this morning's paper has a cablegram from Paris where at the very moment there is in session the Academy of Agriculture. Let me read from this cablegram:

> Joseph Hitler, a member of the academy, pointed out that there were 140,000,000 quintals of wheat now available in the market, furnished by the United States, Canada, Australia, India, and Argentina. Of this quantity he assumed only 65,000,000 quintals would be absorbed by the world's consumption, leaving more than half left over at the time of the next harvest.

Right at the time when you have this cablegram before you, you are imploring us to add to the overproduction of wheat in the world.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not now.

Mr. BURTNESS. If not now, eventually? [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCE. I hope so, if gentlemen are considerate enough to give me the opportunity.

We are asked to meet the situation with something that, in fact, is not a tariff at all. What is the right name for this thing? It is a bounty, a subsidy. You are asked to give a subsidy to the wheat industry in order that more wheat may be poured into the markets across the seas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUCE. May I have a little more time?

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LUCE. I thank the gentleman. You are asked to impose this tax in order that unprofitable land in the Northwest may produce wheat to be sent abroad, and you defend it upon the ground that it is a tariff. Why, great heavens, a tariff was meant to develop industry, and you will instantly deny a desire to develop or extend agriculture. A tariff was designed to keep for our own people our own markets. Was there ever any tariff advocate from my own neighborhood so crazy as to suggest that the protective tariff ought to be or could be designed to enable American manufacturers to protect themselves in foreign markets against foreign competition?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Not just now. The protective tariff was devised to help the whole country. Its only justification is that it is of nation-wide value to have the industries and the occupations of our people so diversified that we may be self-sufficient in time of war, and that in time of peace we may produce the greater part of what fabricated articles we need. Now you say, call this new thing a tariff and set it to work producing more than we need. Oh, if time permitted I might go on, showing you the absurdity of suggesting that this is anything like a tariff proposition, but of what avail? It is in fact a bonus proposition—oh, I ought not to have used that word "bonus," because bonuses seem just now to be popular—it is a subsidy proposition; it is a grant to one part of the people at the expense of the rest. If it complied with any economic law, if it met the demands of the very A B C of economics, if it would in any way make it possible for us to accomplish the results you desire, without outraging all our instincts and principles, then you might have support from all over the land.

Somebody said not long ago that there was doubt as to whether this thing would work. I think I am justified in pausing for a moment to recall that I engaged our colleague, SYDNEY ANDERSON, in conversation on this subject early in the session. In view of his deep interest in the matter it may be permitted me to interpolate here an expression of my personal regret that he is not with us to take part in the debate, and I think I voice the hope of every man in the House that he may be speedily restored to health. [Applause.]

I remember the substance of his reply though not the words, because it was four months or more ago. He said that it would work for a time and then would come disaster. I grant you this will work. I grant you that for a time you may persuade the farmers to continue the dangerous and costly practice of wasting their energies in wrong directions. But when you have once brought them into the habit of defying the laws of supply and demand, you have invited catastrophe.

What do you do first in this direction? You set group against group and class against class and section against section. You come here and demand public alms because you are in distress, and so you invite every other group and every other section in the land to come here for the same purpose.

Mr. BURTNESS. What portion of the bill is that in?

Mr. LUCE. You demand in the bill that you shall at the expense of 80,000,000 fellow citizens be relieved from your distress. If that is not charity, what is it?

Mr. BURTNESS. Has the gentleman finished and eventually gotten to the point where he can yield——

Mr. LUCE. I would like to finish my speech.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman has suggested a diversification of crops, for instance. Now, does the gentleman feel the Government is under any obligation——

Mr. LUCE. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman had observed closely, he would have observed I was in the very beginning of a magnificent peroration that would have brought my speech to a fitting conclusion. [Applause.] I think I will now throw the peroration to the winds, as the force of it has been destroyed by the interruption of my friend. Perhaps, though, I can recall one or two fragments. I had meant to follow my deprecation of the class prejudice and sectional hostility aroused with expression of regret that you are trying to put the Government still further into business with the longest step that has ever been proposed seriously within the walls of this body. I meant to ask you to allow the situation to cure itself. The prices of manufactured commodities are falling, the prices of farm products are rising, and sooner or later you are going to see their lines cross once more. Let these things work themselves out naturally. Keep your hands off. If you do that, the people of every class and every group and every section of the land will save themselves. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any part of my 10 minutes left, I shall be delighted to yield to anyone.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman had a good deal to say about supply and demand and economic forces and all that sort of thing. Does that apply to this knife which cost me 75 cents, but which I believe could be made to sell at 30 cents, but it would have been manufactured in Japan or Germany instead of Pennsylvania or Connecticut?

Mr. LUCE. I am a Yankee, and it is said to be the prerogative of a Yankee to answer one question by asking another.

Did the gentleman vote for the tariff which produced that price? [Laughter and applause.] And if he voted for the tariff, why?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is the first time I have had the opportunity of saying I will never vote for a tariff that does not give its benefits to all classes and all parts of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. My friend from Kansas, I think, now has the right of way.

Mr. TINCHER. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts is opposed to the bill or opposed to the farmer adding the ratio price to his products?

Mr. LUCE. I meant to consent to yield to fair questions, and I think I should have put in the word "fair."

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked the gentleman from Washington if he voted for the tariff act that did that. The gentleman from Massachusetts voted for it, did he not?

Mr. LUCE. I voted against the tariff on food——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am talking about the general tariff law, the Fordney-McCumber bill. Did not the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. LUCE. I have the impression I did; yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And is it not true and does not the gentleman know that the reason that agriculture can not be pulled up by its boot straps to an equality with manufactured goods and the prosperity of industry lies in that very tariff bill for which the gentleman voted?

Mr. LUCE. I do not know any such thing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McSWEENEY].

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as one of the younger members of the Agricultural Committee, I brought my slender torch of knowledge on this subject to be lighted at the redundant light of those who had more experience in this great work.

If you will indulge me for a moment, I will mention some of the men who were there and the work they have done on this bill, and let me give some credit to the opposition of this piece of legislation.

There is no legislation before the House that has had the strong opposition that this bill has had. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], I will say, has not been an iconoclast. Mr. VOIGT in voicing his opposition has been constructive, and if this bill were to pass the House, I will say, in a commendatory way of him, that the bill is in better form than it would have been without his opposition. But, nevertheless, he is the strongest opponent the bill has had.

But first of all, being the opponent he is, he made two acknowledgments. First of all, that agriculture was passing through a crisis, a crisis probably unprecedented in the history of the agriculture of the world. He also made another acknowledgment. That legislation would help. Now, these are the two precedents he has established: First, that there is a crisis, and then that legislation will help it.

We have had numbers of bills brought before us, and, as one of the younger Members, new in this work, I acknowledge frankly that the McNary-Haugen bill is the best bill that has been brought before us. If Mr. VOIGT acknowledges the two things that I have suggested, that an emergency exists and that legislation will help it, then it seems to me the obligation devolves upon the House of Representatives to accept the bill which the majority of the members of the Agricultural Committee have deemed to be the best legislation upon this subject. [Applause.]

The speaker who just preceded me spoke about the fact that great obligations would fall upon the great consuming public. This will probably be agreed with, but let me call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] to the fact that wheat, when it sold at 97 cents back in 1908, allowed a manure spreader and a binder to be respectively purchased at $97 and $142. That same wheat, which is now bringing 97 cents, must pay for a manure spreader $140 in the State of Ohio and $227.50 for a binder. The purchasing power of the wheat has remained the same, and yet the thing that the wheat has to purchase in many cases has more than doubled.

We have had the statement from a man who is very favorable toward this measure—Mr. Wallace—who represents that great body, the American Federation of Labor, that it would undoubtedly raise the cost of living. We realize the fact that it may, but you must all realize that the farmer has had to bear the burden of increased living; he has had to bear the burden of increased price of labor, and he has had to bear the burden of increased prices for all the commodities he has to buy, and it only seems reasonable that at this time we do something to protect him.

I was very glad as a Democrat to hear the gentleman from Iowa acknowledge that a tariff has never been beneficial to the farmer. I am probably the worst Democrat in the House with regard to tariffs, but I am willing at this time to vote, not a discriminatory tariff, not a tariff for revenue, not a tariff for protection, but an embargo in order that the men who are producing the agricultural products of America may be protected during this crisis. I do not want anyone to accuse me of giving up my democracy, because I feel that many of the great evils of the world will be rectified in 300 or 400 years, when the nations of the world are producing the things they are best fitted to produce. We see a movement in that direction when we find that the producers of the country are trying to fit men for the work they are best fitted to do. They are trying to get men who are best fitted for work at the lathes to work at the lathes; they are trying to get the men who are fitted for work at the forge to work at the forge; and it will not be long until the great will of the Almighty will be worked out, and each nation will produce that which it can most economically produce. Until that time I swear I will always vote, if I have the opportunity, against a merchants marine which can not exist in the face of a tariff, but at this time I will vote an embargo on wheat in order to help the great producing masses of America, who are now going through the greatest crisis that any group of people in America has ever gone through.

I only hope you will all realize it is temporary. We can go through the history of America for the past few years and we find that under the protective system we can go along for about eight years of production and then there has to be a depression. From 1873 we were able to jump to 1893 without depression; then from 1893 to 1907 without depression. But the overproduction must be taken care of, and always after those periods of overproduction we have a period of depression.

Now, if this bill were to call for a 10-year period of emergency, I would vote against it, because under the protective system we are now in there must be a depression. There must be a depression following this overproduction which may come, but we realize that with a five-year emergency period the farmer will be on his feet before the depression really comes upon us in other lines of work, and so I am in favor of it for that reason.

I only hope that in some way I can bring to you the spirit of the West. I feel that the farmers of Ohio are in pretty good condition now, and I feel that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON] and myself, who are serving on the Committee on Agriculture, are in reality asking the farmers of Ohio to be missionaries and to be really charitable. They have diversified and they are in the midst of the finest markets in the country and are probably in the best condition of any farmers in the country, but, nevertheless, I shall go before them this fall and say that I, in behalf of them, have allowed them to be missionaries and to send their surpluses and to send their encouragement and to send their help to the stricken sections of our country in the West and the Northwest, and I am sure that the magnanimity of soul that has usually prompted the Ohio farmer will allow me to make that request of him, and he will grant it. I know he is in need in some respects, but is better off than most, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON] and I, I am sure, will have the indorsement of those men whom we are trying to represent.

I only ask that each of you go as did our Christ into Gethsemane and, considering the things that are confronting our country, let not your personal or your local prejudices guide you, but realize that the whole world depends upon food which we should produce as economically as possible. Go into your Gethsemane, consider the things that confront you, consider the struggling nations abroad, consider the farmer who to-night does not know the condition that confronts him to-morrow. He in reality is the greatest gambler that America has, not voluntarily, but from the nature of his occupation. As some of the speakers have said to-day, he has to depend upon the rain in its due season and upon the sun in its due season, and he depends upon the Almighty to send him the blessings his ground can produce. Therefore when he is passing through a very stringent crisis, it seems well for us to give him an opportunity to be placed on an equality with the great manufacturers, with the great bodies of laborers in other fields of endeavor, and allow him to again be that independent, splendid, intelligent citizen that has graced America from the very inception of her existence.

I thank you. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio yields back 10 minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, it is always popular to talk about the needs of the farmer and what we propose to do for him. I am a little given to that myself. Farming is my principal occupation at the present time because if I should lose my place in Congress—I have lost my law practice—I have nothing but farms left.

I want to call attention to the fact that we have been doing everything the farmer has asked us ever since 1920. What was the first thing that came about when the slump came in 1920? They came here and asked that the War Finance Corporation be rehabilitated and be directed to lend money to take care of the farmer; and what did we do? After a struggle in the Committee on Banking and Currency we reported the measure out here. We put it through Congress and put at the beck and call of the agricultural interests of this country the $500,000,000 of capital which the Government furnished and the power of floating bonds to the extent of $1,500,000,000, or three times the capital, making $2,000,000,000 of capital we put to the service of the agricultural interests of this country. We limited this for a certain length of time, and they came back here in 1923 and wanted the time extended, and we extended it another year; and they came back in 1924, and on February 20, 1924, we extended it for another year, and they have had access to the greatest source of credit this Government has ever established for any class of people anywhere, amounting to $2,000,000,000. How much have they borrowed? I am going to speak just for a minute as to those States that are embraced within the wheat territory that are in such dire distress. I will give you the States: Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. They borrowed $144,614,000, which left the difference between that amount and $2,000,000,000 which could be loaned by the War Finance Corporation untouched. Therefore we should assume at least that in so far as they have credit they have had the capital and have had it at a rate below the rate they could get it anywhere else, and the bonds that have been issued are nontaxable and the notes which they gave did not even have to have revenue stamps because we took care of them to that extent.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AYRES. Do you not think that the farmers of the country at this time realize it was not credit they needed but a market?

Mr. STEVENSON. The farmers now realize it was not credit they needed, and they are not providing for a market now. What they are providing for is to get their hands into the Treasury and get the cash straight out, and out of the pockets of the consumers. That is what they are providing for, and they are providing to take it out of the Treasury and out of the pockets of those of us who buy flour and meat.

Let us see whether they are broke or not out there. Taking the bunch of States I have just named, that borrowed from the War Finance Corporation $144,000,000, how much do they owe to-day? Only $40,000,000. They have paid back $104,000,000, and they have paid that back when we have directed the War Finance Corporation, presided over by Mr. Meyer and directed by Mr. Mondell, who lives in the very heart of this country, and whose State has more of it than any other, $10,000,000——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. In just a moment. They have paid back $104,000,000 of it when we have directed them to continue to advance this money, and they are ready to advance it on anything that is reasonably sound. I have a table showing these figures, as follows:

State	Loaned	Outstanding
Idaho	$3,026,000	$1,244,000
Iowa	24,002,000	3,617,000
Kansas	4,768,000	1,125,000
Minnesota	12,551,000	4,804,000
Missouri	7,918,002	761,000
Montana	12,524,000	4,954,000
Nebraska	12,080,000	861,000
North Dakota	20,621,000	10,987,000
Oregon	6,437,043	1,231,000
South Dakota	14,648,000	7,020,000
Utah	12,921,000	231,000
Washington	1,054,000	395,000
Wyoming	10,054,000	3,610,000
Total	144,614,000	40,780,000

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I simply desire to call attention to the fact that those figures simply show that while we are poor out there we are honest.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I do not question that, and we are poor but honest down South, but I do not propose to have the right of taxation given to your people to tax my people because you happen to raise something that is not selling for a good price.

Now, what else did they do? The Farm Bureau Federation came here a little over a year ago and said that this was not enough, that they wanted something that was permanent, and what did we do? We labored day and night, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] was one of the subcommittee, I believe, that finally recast the law that established the intermediate credit banks and put $60,000,000 of Government money at their control and provided for $60,000,000 more, making $120,000,000, and in addition to that we gave them the power of issuing additional bonds to ten times that amount, making $1,200,000,000, which makes a total of $1,320,000,000 of capital in the intermediate credit banks, put there for the purpose of discounting farm paper, and no other kind could be discounted at all.

We also increased from $10,000 to $25,000 the amount that one man could borrow from the farm land banks and increased the discount privilege for farm paper in the Federal reserve system. All of these measures I assisted in framing in the Banking and Currency Committee and in passing through the House.

So do not come here talking about Congress not doing anything for the farmers. What is the next proposition? They come around here, and if this bill means anything it means adding 30 or 40 per cent to the cost of flour and bread and 30 to 40 per cent on the price of meat. That is what it means. Go down to our country. I am a little different from the gentleman from Massachusetts. I am against his tariff, and I did not vote for it. I did not vote to make a 32-cent knife cost 75 cents. I am glad to see that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] has got on the mourner's bench.

What do we find? We find that in the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill they have laid the hand of the manufacturer in the taxing power on every man in my country who raises cotton and has to buy manufactured goods; they have taxed him for the benefit of protecting the manufacturer; and there they get us once, and then under the Esch-Cummins law they give the taxing power to the railroads that manage your transportation business and say "put in all you need, take out all your expenses, no matter what they are, and levy a rate on these people who have to pay the freight on goods that come to them, pay the freight on cotton that goes out, then levy a rate that will give you 6 per cent, and you can get away with it." There is another tax on us for the benefit of a class.

Now, what is this proposition? This proposition is one that says here are the packers and the elevator men and the wheat farmers of the West who are not getting enough; they need more, and we are going to go down South and give them a law that will lay a tax on us, put a tax on the bread we eat, put a tax on the meat we eat, put a tax on everything else on earth that we buy that is covered by this bill, and then come here and talk to us about not being the friend of the farmer because we would not vote to take away the small profit that is now left under the present condition in the raising of cotton in our country.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will yield.

Mr. FULMER. I want to state to the gentleman that every witness that came from the Northwest, when we asked if we could not reduce the freight rates and the tariff, said, "No; we do not want to disturb that."

Mr. STEVENSON. No; of course not. They want to keep the tax for the benefit of the Massachusetts manufacturer, put a tax on that will pay the railroads, and put this tax on bread and meat, all for the benefit of the people out West. We may not be in the majority, but we can raise the devil from the time you start that, and I do not believe you can put it across. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another thing about that proposition; we are asked to submit ourselves to another iniquitous form of taxation, a tax on the breakfast table, the dinner table, and every time we sit down to eat. It takes money from the consumers all over the country, especially when we can not raise wheat and do not raise hogs. We are asked to embark on this proposition, which has a direct tendency to destroy the market on which we depend. You can not put an embargo on goods from every other country while 60 per cent of the cotton goes abroad and is sold at a reasonable price and continue to sell our cotton to them. You are trying right now to destroy the export market, upon which the prosperity of our country depends; and if this bill becomes law, you will succeed; but you will never be able to get that across with the people who have heard it properly presented and understand it, because the pocket nerve is the "talking nerve," and they will never submit to that scheme of legal extortion from one class for the benefit of another class, as this bill provides. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there have been many measures before the House in which I have been very greatly interested and to which I have tried to give very careful thought, but to none that have been presented since my membership has there been given so much thought and sympathetic consideration, so far as I am personally concerned, as to the one that we now have before us.

Before proceeding with the formal discussion which I had planned I want to take just a moment to pay my tribute to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. I have waited nearly three years for a proper situation to develop to tell a New England story, and this is the chance. Whoever visits those splendid New England States comes away feeling that there resides a wonderful people. The reception I have received as I have visited them lacks nothing in the way of cordiality and all other like things that go along with the fine spirit they have in that country. The only wish I have for the people of New England is that they come to recognize what the United States really is. Their conception of what the country is, is well illustrated by a story that is an old one in New England, upon which I was checked up very sharply when I first told it. Coming to that section for the first time, I said that the story was current in our section to the effect that the school-teachers of New England when they were teaching the boys and girls of New England to bound the United States taught them that it was bounded on the north by the Dominion of Canada, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, on the south by Long Island Sound, and on the west by the Hudson River. There were some smiles, but I noticed one splendid, good, old New Englander sitting down about halfway in the crowd, who kept smiling all the way through. I suspected that I had something coming to me at the end of my address, and it proved to be the fact. He came to the front and he said, "Mr. KETCHAM, I want only to check you up on one fact. You are a bit wrong in your geography." I said that I was sorry about that and asked him to tell me in what way. He said that in bounding the United States I said that it was bounded, according to the conception of the New Englander, upon the north by the Dominion of Canada, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, on the south by Long Island Sound, and on the west by the Hudson River. He said, "You are wrong in your western boundary. It is the Connecticut instead of the Hudson River." [Laughter.]

With all due deference to the distinguished Representative from New England, who has so ably pleaded for that section of the country, as I listened to him I was moved to wish that they could see the need of such a bill as the one before us, which would give the same degree of protective benefits to the farmers as the protective tariff has given New England for many years. My best wish for the royal people of New England is that they may learn something by personal inspection and visits to this great country of ours about its true extent and resources. Did they know them and did they clearly comprehend them, then I think there would have been no such tearful pleading for a particular section of the country as we have listened to from their distinguished Representative. He has made an able presentation of a narrow and sectional viewpoint. But this is a time when I believe our viewpoint should be a national one. We are not here advocating legislation that has for its sole purpose the benefit of one group of our citizens at the expense of the rest, but we are here with conviction in our hearts that when we do something to benefit agriculture we do something that will do good for the whole people of the United States. The very statement that the gentleman made with reference to the 6,000,000 idle spindles is proof of the fact that already New England has some evidence of the very substantial results of the dreadful situation that has been brought upon the American farmer. [Applause.] When you turn your back deliberately upon the fact that the farmer of the country constitutes 35 per cent of the buying power, and you put him out of the market, then you have no good reason to complain about the 6,000,000 idle spindles. I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but I do believe this from the bottom of my heart, and that is the reason that I am so heartily advocating this bill. If it becomes a law, not only will the psychological effect be immediately apparent upon the farmers and the whole of the rest of the country but something more substantial will happen. The farmers of the country will appear in the buying market, and you will find that some of your idle spindles will then begin to hum. On the other hand, you can not ruthlessly neglect and laugh aside this legislation, nor by opprobrium, calling it class legislation and other derogatory terms, can you belittle it. You must face it squarely, not as a localized measure, not as class legislation, but as a national problem.

Perhaps the best answer to the plea that is made for the laboring men of New England is to let the men speak for themselves. We have had here a very eloquent plea in their behalf. However, I think we ought to get back to those who are supposed to know about it, and therefore I desire to present to the committee now just a few statements from the official representatives of these groups of people for whom the gentleman claims to speak. First, I shall read from the statement of Edgar Wallace, representing before the Committee on Agriculture the millions of members of the American Federation of Labor, and I shall take time only to give you just one sentence. Speaking in commendation of the bill, I quote a very vital sentence, which goes directly to the point. He says:

> What does it profit us if we can get meat for 10 cents a pound if we do not have the 10 cents?

It seems to me that is a very striking answer. Further:

> The farmers are our customers, and when they have no money we can not work. We are the farmers' customers, and when we can not buy their foodstuffs pile up and lose in value.

That demonstrates the very intimate relationship that exists between those who labor in the great centers of population in the East and the men out upon the western farms.

I quote now from the statement of Mr. Robert Fechner, representing the International Association of Machinists. Giving his indorsement of the bill, he closed with these words:

> We did so, and after giving due consideration to the entire matter we have officially recorded ourselves as supporting, in principle at least, the provisions of this pending legislation.

He followed that up with this further sentence:

> I certainly hope Congress will not stand still. That is what I am here for—to urge that something be done; and I am sure that the committee can formulate some plan.

I call now as my next witness Mr. Lovell, vice president and legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, who said:

> Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have the honor to represent the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. You will find in your record that our organization, representing 118,000 railroad men throughout the United States, went on record in favor of some measure to better the condition of the farmer.

I might go on and quote the testimony of Mr. Clark, who is the vice president and national legislative representative Order of Railway Conductors, all to the same effect. I congratulate these men upon their statements before the committee. They recognize very clearly that their welfare is inseparably bound up with the welfare of the men and women upon the land. Mr. Chairman, I deem this a good and sufficient answer to the plea that has been made on behalf of these men who work in the factories of the East, and I shall now proceed directly to the formal discussion of the measure before us.

As a preface to the discussion of this bill I shall quote from some remarks I made when the agricultural bill was under consideration in the House. In those remarks I stated that the program for the rehabilitation of agriculture had five parts: First, reducing production costs; second, orderly and economical marketing of farm crops; third, legislative enactments; fourth, better organization; and last, the personal qualities of the individual farmer.

Under legislation I made the following statement:

The third step in a rehabilitation program for agriculture is a general Federal legislative one. Here two extremes must be avoided. One, the cry for Congress or State legislatures to "do something about it" in the way of legislation whenever a disagreeable situation arises; the other that classic of the conservative, "economic ills can not be cured by legislation." What is the plain truth? Many unhappy conditions can not be improved by legislation. Climate, seasons, soils, location, and management are outside the law. On the other hand, it is foolish to assert that legislation has not affected our economic situation. The echoes have scarcely ceased in this Chamber from the discussion of one such piece of legislation. No laboring man needs anyone to tell him the effects of millions of immigrants on his wage scale and his standard of living. No railroad man needs to be told of the economic effect of the Adamson or the Esch-Cummins laws. The tariff is possibly our oldest illustration. In short, these laws have affected our economic life. World conditions have made them necessary. We have built up a standard of living that leads the world. We are all for it and propose to maintain it. It costs more, but it is worth it. Because the farmer is not able to pass on the added costs which increased transportation rates impose on him and that higher wage scales demand of him, much of the new legislation has affected him unfavorably, however. The tariff is not fully effective in raising price levels on his export surplus. He produces a surplus of a number of the basic commodities which must find a market under world conditions from which much of our legislation has been designed to protect us. He buys by the American market and sells by the world market. If he is to survive he must be put on an American basis in his selling as well as his buying. To put him on such a basis is not doing him a favor. It is simply putting him on a par with the rest. It is plain justice. To acclaim the virtues of these higher standards of American life in one breath and in another to deny their practical application to all our people alike is a strange performance. It recalls some stirring references to "intellectual integrity" in other debates. The McNary-Haugen bill, so widely discussed, is directed straight at this price inequality which the farmer suffers under because of his production of a surplus which must be exported. The widespread demand for this legislation is based on our American gospel of the "square deal."

The farmer in supporting it is simply asking that he be put on equal terms with the rest of the country who have been made the beneficiaries of Federal legislation. His attitude is well summed up in the words of Henry Van Dyke:

> "In the game of life, as we play it here in America, the rules must be the same for all; the penalties must be the same for all; the prizes of life, so far as we can make them so, must be the same for all—and may the best man win."

In the historic language of this Chamber, the farmer wants to "go along" on equal terms with the rest and not trailing along in the rear. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the McNary-Haugen bill is an emergency measure intended to make the farmers' commodity dollar equal to the industrial dollar and the labor dollar. It is grounded upon the theory that farm commodities are entitled to a fair exchange value with other commodities. It recognizes that American standards of living are higher than world standards. It acknowledges that the surplus of farm products over the needs of domestic consumption is sold in the world market and that this world price determines the price on the whole. It affirms that other Federal legislation has lifted price levels in industry and labor, and it proposes to give agriculture the same advantage.

Mr. PAIGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. In just a moment. I am sorry to say to my colleague from Massachusetts that I have only a limited time, and when I have finished my statement I shall be glad to yield. Now, we all recognize, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this bill covers a very broad field and that no one individual can begin to compass a discussion that should be given upon all the phases of it in the limited time. This idea was recognized by the committee, and so various sections of the bill were given to each Member for discussion. To me there was assigned the discussion in reference to the influence of this legislation upon the cooperative movements. Now, I would like to have this distinction very clearly kept in mind. The thought was presented in the very brilliant and able presentation of the distinguished leader of the minority on our Committee on Agriculture [Mr. ASWELL] when he indicated that it would be wise for us to substitute some legislation with reference to cooperative marketing in place of this bill.

So far as I am personally concerned, and I think that is the mind of the committee, we are agreed that cooperative marketing when it can finally be fully organized in a nation-wide manner will be a proper step to be taken, but the very best and the most hopeful view that can be taken of the situation is that cooperative marketing can not be brought into full operation within a considerable period of years. In the meantime the American farmer is in the situation which has been so well depicted before you this afternoon. As a friend of cooperation, I shall be glad to do everything I can to work out a plan for cooperative marketing, but I say again that this measure is not intended in any way to affect adversely the work of cooperation. I think I shall be able to show in the next few moments that it is not intended in any way to endanger, as has been held up before you this afternoon, the success of this great movement. The Curtis-Aswell bill and the Capper-Williams bill, two constructive efforts, have been worked out by distinguished Members of this House and the other body in order that a nation-wide system of cooperation may be considered. One has had no hearings, and one but a few hours, so that a substitution is absolutely out of the question. The great difficulty to-day in our marketing system, so far as the farmers are concerned, is this: That wide fluctuations in prices sometimes occur during the marketing seasons, and these wide fluctuations in price——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. KETCHAM. These wide fluctuations in price are the things which particularly cause the difficulties in the agricultural situation. We must devise a plan that will provide for a seasonal flow, for a normal rate at which products shall be placed upon the market. We must avoid those great gluts at certain seasons when tremendous quantities of farm products are put upon the market. Some plan must be devised for accomplishing that particular thing. Now, I maintain the McNary-Haugen bill will contribute to that very end.

Why? Because the wide fluctuations in prices will not occur under the operation of the McNary-Haugen bill; and therefore the farmer will not need to worry, as he does to-day, about the uncertainty in price. He may give his time to the other proposition, namely, that of feeding his stock to the best advantage. He can then so arrange his feeding operations that his stock will come to proper maturity and will be marketed in an orderly fashion. The same may be said in reference to wheat. There will be no inducement to rush it in at certain times, particularly when there is a full market. This will be greatly to his advantage and will accomplish what we desire to accomplish ultimately by cooperative marketing.

Some opponents of the McNary-Haugen bill profess to see in it elements detrimental to the continuation and growth of cooperative marketing. In answer it can be said that the progress the McNary-Haugen bill has made before the people is largely through the activities of cooperative-marketing associations themselves, whose members have instructed their associations to use every legitimate effort possible to secure enactment of this legislation.

Let us analyze and study the cooperative-marketing situation and see just what there is to the argument that the McNary-Haugen bill endangers it. There are mainly three types of cooperative-marketing organizations now handling the commodities specified in the McNary-Haugen bill, namely: First, the cooperative-shipping associations, handling livestock; second, the cooperative elevators, acting as primary marketing agencies and handlers of grains for the farmers of their respective communities; third, the cooperative wheat-marketing associations, organized on the so-called commodity plan or pooling plan and acting solely in behalf of their members in marketing in an orderly way the wheat their membership produces.

Livestock-shipping associations would not come in contact with the operations of the McNary-Haugen bill until their activities reached the terminal market. At that time the only effect that would be apparent would be that they would find in that terminal market an additional and powerful buyer ready to buy their product at a price that would reestablish its pre-war purchasing power. They would not be compelled to sell to this new buyer unless it was found advantageous to do so; therefore it is quite obvious to the fair-thinking person that the bill provides a real and substantial benefit to this class of cooperative-marketing associations.

The second class, the local cooperative elevator and cooperative-marketing organizations of this type, have never done more, nor have ever attempted to do more, with but few exceptions, than purchase the grain of their community and deliver it to a commission house at the terminal market for sale to the large terminal grain dealers or the millers themselves. Inasmuch as the activities of the McNary-Haugen bill do not propose to extend beyond a few basic markets, again it is quite obvious that their activities would only be the providing of an additional buyer at the rate price. This would assure the country elevator of a substantial market and obviate to a very high degree the necessity for hedging.

Under the McNary-Haugen bill the country elevator will be able to operate without the expensive and uncertain hedge, which will permit it to operate to a much better advantage than heretofore and on a very small margin of profit. By giving a large net return to members the cooperatives will be strengthened.

In my own State of Michigan I believe we have one of the most successful cooperative organizations that the United States knows, namely, our Michigan Potato Growers' Association. Before our committee there came officials of that organization who said that cooperative marketing was a fine system so far as it had to do with collecting, with standardizing, and with the grading of the products, possibly collecting them in as large an organization as a state-wide organization; but that when you went across State boundary lines, then you ran into difficulty. The McNary-Haugen bill would obviate that difficulty by making the market the same for all cooperative organizations the country over. It would obviate the jealousies which sometimes develop between cooperative organizations when their products get into interstate commerce and come into competition.

Mr. VOIGT. Will the gentleman yield? I will yield the gentleman some time if he will answer a few questions.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will be glad to do that if the gentleman will just allow me to finish these paragraphs.

The third type of cooperatives enumerated, the pooling associations, have been in operation four years, and they will handle from the 1923 crop less than 4 per cent of the total production. The purpose of a pool is orderly marketing that a better price level may be sustained. When the price is made in Liverpool, the impossibility to develop a pool sufficient in volume and cohesiveness materially to affect that price is readily apparent. This fact is well understood by the farmers themselves, and therefore they have been unable to see the full advantage of the pooling movement and have not joined in any considerable number.

It is the pooling organizations that have first realized this and have therefore interested themselves in legislation such as the McNary-Haugen bill provides, with the hope that there might be a segregation of the surplus from the domestic supply and thereby an opportunity provided for beneficial operation, which is the one thing that will bring about their required growth.

There are 14 State pooling associations handling wheat. Nine of these are members of the American Wheat Growers' Association, and these nine have devoted their attention for the past six months in a very material way to the enactment of the legislation the McNary-Haugen bill provides. Of the remaining five the officers of one and the farm organization that sponsors it, namely, the Kansas State Farmers' Union, are devoting their attention to the furtherance of this legislation. Two others, namely, the Kansas Wheat Growers' Association and the Oklahoma Wheat Growers' Association are favorable to the bill. It is further known that the present board of directors of the Oklahoma Wheat Growers' Association refused to acquiesce in the action of their predecessors in opposing the bill. It is further interesting to note that, at 20 meetings held in Oklahoma attended by farmers, many of whom were members of the Oklahoma Wheat Growers' Association, in 18 of the meetings the bill was indorsed and in 16 of the 18 without a dissenting vote. The two remaining associations, the Texas Wheat Growers' Association and the New Mexico Wheat Growers' Association, have to-day indorsed the bill.

Cooperative marketing operates in a field aside from that in which the corporation created by the McNary-Haugen bill would operate. The principal function for cooperative marketing, in its present state of organization and for the five-year period at least, is to provide more direct and more economical distribution from the farm to the terminal markets, and therefore, inasmuch as operation of the McNary-Haugen bill would extend beyond terminal markets, there is no conflict with cooperative marketing. The opportunities for beneficial service with the surplus taken care of through an export corporation would be much greater than at present, and it would cause cooperative marketing associations to prosper and grow in a way that they have never been able to heretofore.

It is unholy argument to say that distress must prevail to make the farmer interested in cooperation. It is unjust and highly erroneous to state that low prices must prevail to permit cooperative marketing to develop. The facts are the financially independent farmer is the only one who can develop the cooperative movement.

The cooperative marketing associations themselves handling the commodities specified in the bill are the ones who are largely responsible for the bill and the ones who are giving it the greatest support. They understand and fully realize that they can best succeed through the aid of this legislation, and therefore it seems foolish to give heed to those who would oppose it on the ground that it might retard the growth of cooperative marketing.

Another thing which cooperative marketing associations have discovered is that farmers who are in financial distress are poor cooperators, not because they do not want to cooperate, but because they find it impossible to do so. Their crops are mortgaged; therefore they must be sold in accordance with the requirements of the mortgage. Their creditors are pressing them for the payment of obligations, necessitating dumping of their product on the market for any price available. Farmers in this condition, which at present is the condition of the majority, find it impossible to support their cooperative marketing associations in the manner that they must be supported if their associations are to succeed and bring about beneficial results.

At this point I desire to call your attention to the report of the committee in reference to the effect of this bill upon cooperative marketing organizations: On pages 42 and 43 you will find the following:

EFFECT UPON COOPERATIVE MARKETING ORGANIZATIONS

Only two truly cooperative organizations have opposed the McNary-Haugen bill. Officers of those organizations are now taking steps toward rescinding their former action, which was based upon misunderstanding of the bill, both as to facts involved and as to the methods and character of operation.

This bill is a stimulant and complement for cooperative marketing and not by any means a deterrent. It reaches directly at the surplus difficulties of American farming, an undertaking which marketing associations are not now in a position to accomplish. Without such governmental assistance as is provided by this measure, cooperative marketing associations for export surplus crops must eventually fail to secure that which is vitally necessary for their membership—legitimate prices for these crops. With assistance such as is provided by the bill commodity organizations will develop and thrive. Their membership will be recruited from producers whose financial affairs are in a healthy condition and whose knowledge of the benefits of organization will have been broadened through participation in the results obtained by the export corporation.

The bill does not oppose cooperation in the least. It fosters, encourages, and makes cooperation genuinely possible. It enables it to produce the necessary results. It affords a machine around which marketing associations can be constructed and developed until, with greatly increased membership, they can carry on when the temporary emergency conditions, to be tided over by the bill, have ended. These facts are recognized by the leaders of the cooperative marketing movement. They are also recognized by that element of the grain trade that opposes cooperation both in season and out and are an important reason for its opposition to the McNary-Haugen bill. General farm organizations and marketing associations in large numbers are found listed among the supporters of the measure.

Now, may I conclude my statement with one observation which comes from my own personal experience? It was my privilege for a number of years to be very actively identified with one of the leading farm organizations of the country, and in that connection to have the responsibility of organizing cooperatives in the very early days of the movement in Michigan. The great problem which confronts all those organizations is the problem of the ultimate market. How anyone can picture any danger to these cooperative organizations by having a steady market at a better price as the ultimate end of their own cooperative movements is more than I am able to understand. It seems to me that it would in a very large measure encourage the men who have been rather negligent about joining these cooperative organizations. They will say, "When we get together and have our local associations attend to the local collecting, grading, and processing, thus saving one commission to be paid to somebody else and sharing the result of that among ourselves, then we know we have this ultimate market at a better price than we had before." It seems to me that every encouragement should be given to the men for a more complete understanding and a more widely extended organization of cooperatives, and I believe this bill will do this very thing. To go back to the best answer of all, it is not what you may think about it, nor what I may think about it, but it is what the folks who are members of these organizations themselves think about it. So in conclusion I do want to present just this little statement. I have here in my hand—and I will not take time to read it—a statement signed by two men representing the two largest cooperative movements in the United States at this moment, both of whom give their hearty and enthusiastic indorsement to the McNary-Haugen bill, believing that it shows the way out. The first—and I am glad to present their names—is Mr. John G. Brown, president of the National Livestock Producers' Association, the largest cooperative livestock marketing organization in the country.

This organization, together with the other cooperative livestock marketing organizations that were represented before the Agricultural Committee in behalf of the McNary-Haugen bill, handled over $200,000,000 worth of livestock for their members during the year 1923. The other signature is that of a gentleman who has been referred to several times this afternoon, Mr. George C. Jewett, general manager of the American Wheat Growers, Associated, representing the Cooperative Wheat Marketing Association in the States of the Northwest. Their indorsement is substantial and enthusiastic, and speaks the last word, in my opinion, as to whether or not cooperative organizations will be harmed by the enactment of the McNary-Haugen bill. [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. I will yield the gentleman two minutes if he will consent to answer a few questions.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will be glad to have the opportunity to undertake to answer them. I will certainly answer them if I can, but if I can not I will frankly say so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for two additional minutes.

Mr. VOIGT. The gentleman has made a very interesting argument as to how this bill will affect the cooperative movement. Will the gentleman concede that the ultimate purpose of cooperation among farmers is to secure a better price?

Mr. KETCHAM. I should say there are two aims, as I see it. The first, of course, and the most important, is the ultimate price. Second, the cutting down of the operations that start with the taking of the grain to the first man who handles it, doing away with every possible expense, and bringing back to those who participate a larger share of the net return. I should say that the aim is both to secure a higher price and to reduce expenses. The combined result will be more money coming back into the pockets of the men who unite in the cooperative organization.

Mr. VOIGT. The second purpose the gentleman speaks about, of narrowing the spread between the producer and the consumer, so far as the farmer is concerned is to get a better price, is it not?

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman say that again?

Mr. VOIGT. I say that the gentleman names two purposes for which cooperatives exist. Now, it seems to me that the second purpose which he names—he says the prime purpose is to get a better price, and the second purpose he says is to narrow the spread between the producer and the consumer. Now, the purpose of that is to get a better price for the producer, is it not?

Mr. KETCHAM. Well, if the gentleman will just pardon me, I may say to the Members of the House that the gentleman from Wisconsin is a very astute lawyer and direct answers to his questions sometimes lead one to admissions he did not intend to make, and so I am simply going to answer his question in my own way.

Mr. VOIGT. Of course, if the gentleman does not want to answer the question——

Mr. KETCHAM. I just want to answer your question in my own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will simply say again that one object of cooperatives, as I see it, is to lessen the cost of gathering together in a local way and in the local communities all the products that are marketed by that association.

Mr. VOIGT. And the object of that, in turn, is to give the farmer a greater share of the spread.

Mr. KETCHAM. To get more money back into his pockets; yes, sir.

Mr. VOIGT. Now, then, are we not back at this point: The prime object of the farm cooperatives is to get the farmer a better price.

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOIGT. That being true, what is the object of a farmer participating in the cooperative organization if there is only one Government price?

Mr. KETCHAM. For the simple reason that if he does not have his cooperative organization and it is handled by some other man than himself—inasmuch as the price is not fixed that the farmer shall receive—he will not have an opportunity to get the largest return possible. He still needs the cooperative to lessen the expense of local handling.

Mr. VOIGT. If the Government corporation fixes an absolute price, what would be the object of the farmer cooperating in an endeavor to get a better price?

Mr. KETCHAM. Simply to get the largest possible share of the ratio price back into his own pocket, just as he does now in his cooperative organizations.

Mr. VOIGT. He could not do it if there was only one Government price.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. PURNELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KETCHAM. So far as I am concerned.

Mr. PURNELL. Let us assume there is just one Government price. Through cooperation, according to the gentleman's own theory and according to my own theory, you would get a greater portion of that Government price.

Mr. VOIGT. The gentleman has already said that the object of cooperation was to narrow the spread between the producer and consumer; but if you have a Government corporation which stands ready to pay a price, and there is only one price, how can the farmer cooperate to get a better price? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman two minutes more. Does the gentleman know of any labor organization which has indorsed the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. KETCHAM. I have simply the statements and the indorsement which I read just a few moments ago. I do not know whether the gentleman heard them or not. They were from representatives of labor organizations.

Mr. VOIGT. Has any labor organization whatever taken any official action indorsing this bill that the gentleman knows of?

Mr. KETCHAM. I can only state that my recollection is that one of the representatives stated that by definite action of their executive committee——

Mr. VOIGT. Does the gentleman know whether the American Federation of Labor has indorsed this bill?

Mr. KETCHAM. I can not say whether in their national organization they have taken formal action, but they gave this measure their indorsement through their legislative representative.

Mr. VOIGT. Is it not a fact that some of these labor organizations, through their officers, came before the committee and made the statement that they would favor any bill which would give the farmer an additional price, but did not indorse any particular measure? Is not that true as to what transpired before the committee?

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Wallace, as I recall, gave his indorsement specifically to this measure, and the general statement was that they indorsed any principle that would bring to the farmer a larger return for his product, which is the aim and purpose of this bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield? I will read from Mr. Wallace's statement.

Mr. VOIGT. No; I can not yield just now.

Mr. KETCHAM. Here is a definite statement by Mr. Edgar Wallace, after referring to another bill and being in support of that, "Now, I am appearing in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill." That is Mr. Edgar Wallace, representing the American Federation of Labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman another minute, Mr. Chairman. I want to say that I understand the secretary of the American Federation of Labor a few days ago wrote a letter in which he stated that that organization had not indorsed this bill. I do not want any misunderstanding on that score.

Mr. KETCHAM. I can only quote his own testimony given in the record as it was given before the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LARSON].

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the first bill I voted for when I became a Member of this House was the agricultural emergency tariff bill. Since that time I have voted, without exception, for every agricultural relief measure. I come from the great agricultural State of Minnesota. This may have something to do with causing me to support these various farm measures. I have no apology to make for having supported them. In voting for them I thought I was promoting the general welfare of the whole Nation. I have never taken consciously a provincial view of my duties as a Congressman. I have been elected by the voters of the eighth congressional district of Minnesota, but I am here attempting, as best I can, to legislate for the entire country.

Agriculture is the Nation's basic industry. Upon it depends the prosperity of the Nation. That is so obvious that it is axiomatic. The farmer is the mainstay of the country. I am an individualist, but I believe that the Government should do what it legitimately can to promote the prosperity of the farmer. Such legislation is not, strictly speaking, class legislation for its benefits redound to the general well-being of the country at large. We all, more or less, share in the farmer's prosperity, and also, I may add, we all suffer economically when the farmer suffers. We are all, so to speak, a part of the same economic and business organism.

That is the attitude of mind with which I approach the consideration of the McNary-Haugen bill. The truth is I was more or less biased in favor of the measure because of its avowed purpose to benefit the farmer. But after I had studied it I had to come to the conclusion that it ought not to become a law. I shall not vote for it, although I come from a State that is said by the proponents of the bill to need the proposed legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Not now. My judgment is that instead of benefiting the farmers of my State it would ultimately work great injury, not only to them but to the State and to the entire Nation. I know that there are many organizations in my State that have indorsed this bill. It may be that among them is a labor organization.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Not just now. Some men who stand high in so-called big business have indicated that they favor this measure. That a bill is supported by large numbers does not always mean that it has great merit. These men may not have given the matter thorough consideration. It is not a difficult matter to secure the passage of a resolution by almost any organization of citizens for or against any legislative bill. It is easy to manufacture public sentiment by carrying on a well-directed propaganda. People are too busy, or perhaps intellectually too indolent to do their own thinking. They are glad to accept the conclusions of others on almost any subject however important. The criticism is not confined to the so-called hoi polloi. A brief explanation of the purposes of this very bill made by one of its most ardent supporters to the chief executive of one of the greatest railroads in this country, persuaded that executive to indorse this measure. Do you think it is possible for any railroad executive or any big business man or any college professor to be able in a brief period of an hour or two to grasp even the essentials of this measure so that he may be justified in recommending its passage by the Congress of the United States?

I will say that without long and deep study, thorough concentration, no man, however great as an intellectual giant he may be, can reach an intelligent judgment on the merits and demerits of this most important, most complicated, most intricate, most revolutionary legislative proposal. The proposed corporation may do a business involving a capital of hundreds of millions of dollars, and engage in the operation of complicated and world-wide business transactions.

Why, it took at least four months for the members of the Agricultural Committee of the House to come to some definite conclusion as to what kind of a measure should be presented to this House. This committee had before it a large number of witnesses, many of whom, no doubt, were competent by reason of their experience and study to give the committee valuable testimony in regard to the merits or demerits of the proposed legislation. Yet notwithstanding this committee had four months in which to consider this measure, the committee is divided as to the kind of a measure, if any, that should be presented for our consideration. I will make this statement without fear of successful contradiction that no member of this committee can stand up and honestly assert that he knows how this proposal would work in actual experience. It is a speculation; it is a wild venture that may result in a business depression from which it would take years to recover. The proponents of the McNary-Haugen bill are urging us to venture upon an uncertain and uncharted sea without rudder and without compass. Where it would land us after five years have passed God only knows. It looks to me like a shipwreck before we would get very far on the stormy and turbulent sea.

Why do I think so? Time does not permit me to enter into an exhaustive consideration of the reasons for my conclusion. I shall briefly give you some of the conclusions I have arrived at through thoughtful and unbiased consideration of the bill.

If there is a real agricultural emergency, it is not so serious as to justify the proposed revolutionary experiment. The agricultural depression is being solved by the operation of natural economic laws. There has been considerable talk about the failure of banks, and unless we read with discrimination we may reach the conclusion that nearly every bank in the Northwest is about to close its doors. If we take seriously the statements of the calamity howlers, we may think that no bank in Minnesota or the Dakotas or in Montana is safe; that the banking business in those States is shot to pieces; that a great financial collapse in the Northwest is imminent and certain. What are the facts? It is true that some banks have gone to the wall, but the fact is that they were mostly shoestring concerns that never ought to have existed at all. I say most of them were such, not all. Their banking methods were unsound. They probably tried to overreach during the period of inflation, and when the period of deflation came they could not weather the storm. The records show that before the collapse of 1920 came there were 3,875 banks in the ninth Federal reserve district, altogether too many for sound banking.

North Dakota, the State so ably represented in part by my friend, Mr. BURTNESS, who is so zealously advocating the passage of this bill, has five banks where one would have been sufficient, based on the ratio of the population per bank for the United States as a whole. South Dakota has four, Montana has three, and my own State of Minnesota has twice as many as the national average. The fact is that the region involved is overbanked. The newly established banks had to get business. That meant the offering of more liberal loans to the farmers and merchants. That in turn accelerated and increased the inflation. When the crash came in 1920 these banks had to go. That was inevitable. But the situation is becoming normal. Let me quote what Mr. John H. Rich, chairman and Federal reserve agent of the Federal reserve bank of Minneapolis, says in a very excellent and exhaustive statement on the economic position of agriculture in the northwestern grain-raising States. I ask you gentlemen to listen to this, and then say whether there is a real agricultural emergency, at least in Minnesota:

> So thoroughly has the process worked itself out that wheat acreage has already been brought back by elimination to nearly a normal basis, while in banking, in merchandising, and in the distribution of goods the volume of service has been brought in right relation to the necessities of the population.

That is the testimony of a man whose business it is to know the farming, and especially the banking, situation of the territory inhabited by those whose interests the McNary-Haugen bill advocates are pleading I am not impugning the veracity of those who are trying so hard to write the word "Failure" all over the Northwest, but personally I prefer to rely upon the testimony of Mr. Rich, because his means of acquiring accurate and reliable knowledge are more extensive and better than are the means of those who are constantly howling everywhere and on all occasions that the great Northwest is about to fail; that it is going to the demnition bow wows.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. A little later. Mind you, Mr. Rich is not seeking political office from the masses. He is in a position to give us the unvarnished, the unbiased proof regarding conditions in the Northwest.

Much has been said in regard to the failure of the farmers. It has been stated that the farmers in great numbers are voluntarily or involuntarily abandoning their farms and seeking other means of livelihood. It is true that a great many men engaged in farming have failed to make good as farmers. The number of failures has been exaggerated, however. Many of them would have failed even if no deflation had come.

Everyone can not farm successfully. Farming requires intelligence, hard work, thrift, forethought, good health, and, most of all, business ability. All men do not possess these economic virtues. Some are ignorant, some are lazy, some are shiftless, some are unhealthy, some lack ordinary business experience and business sense, and such are bound to fail sooner or later. They can not make a success. They can not become successful farmers by congressional legislation or by presidential proclamation. When the Government assures us equality of opportunity, it has done all that it can do and all that it ought to do.

Another objection to this McNary-Haugen bill is that the plan proposed would aggravate the situation by stimulating overproduction. To my mind that is as simple as a, b, c. It is as certain as the day follows the night. When a price is fixed by the Government which is sufficient to guarantee to the farmer a profit in the sale of his agricultural products, is it not reasonable to suppose that the farmer is not going to take any chances on raising something about which there is an uncertainty as to whether he will get a profit, but will rather devote his energies and his time to raising something for which he will receive a guaranteed price sufficiently high to compensate him for the expenditure of his time and energy. Ah, you say that moral persuasion will be used to prevent him from increasing his wheat acreage.

When has that moral persuasion ever succeeded? Do you know of any price-fixing scheme in history where there was not an overproduction as a result of the price fixing? Such has been the case everywhere it has been tried. It would be so if this bill should become a law. Instead of solving the problem which is created by reason of the fact that there is overproduction, you are going to aggravate the difficulty of the problem. You are going to have even more overproduction than you have now.

If this bill should pass it would increase the already too high cost of living, and thereby cause popular discontent and bring about a vicious circle which would finally end in collapse.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. In a moment. It would retard, if not entirely destroy, the present agricultural cooperative movement. Did you gentlemen get the significance of the question that was propounded to the former speaker, Mr. KETCHAM, of Michigan, regarding the purpose of these cooperative societies? The ultimate purpose, of course, is to get the highest possible price, and in order to get such a price, of course, they have to eliminate the unnecessary waste caused by the intrusion of the unnecessary middleman. But if the Government gives the farmers the highest price possible, why indulge in any cooperative movement voluntarily? They would cease to exist.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. No. That seems to me to be true beyond any question. Although I own a farm, I am not a farmer——

Mr. CLAGUE. The gentleman has proved that.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Oh, you can not always tell what a man is by looking at him, and that reminds me of a little story which I must tell on myself. A couple of years ago when I was campaigning I stopped in a small town in my district for a little time, waiting for my tin lizzie to be repaired.

I was sitting down in front of the only hotel when I was introduced to a young man of about 22 years of age. I found out in talking with him that he had lived for some years in Constantinople and it was about the time when the Near East crisis was on. I began to talk with him about what was happening over there. I found out that he was a very intelligent fellow, who had been a student at Robert College and spoke Turkish, Greek, Russian, French, German, and what not, and after we had exhausted the subject he said casually, "I can tell by looking at a man just what he is." I said, "Is that so? Can you tell me what I am?" "Yes." Then I sort of spruced up and made myself appear as much as I could like a real statesman, and I said, "You take a good look at me and tell me what I am." He said, "It is not necessary, I have been talking with you for a half hour." "What am I?" He said, "You are a barber." [Laughter.] I may have demonstrated to the satisfaction of my friend from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS] that I am not a farmer nor an agricultural economist, but only a barber who has attempted to express some ideas on this complicated McNary-Haugen bill. Now, to return to my subject. It would not only utterly destroy the present agricultural cooperative movement, it would probably wreck the present machinery evolved as a result of years of experience for the economical and efficient distribution of marketing our agricultural products.

For a time it might destroy our foreign markets for our agricultural products, especially our market for wheat, by causing the European governments to invoke countervailing, antidumping laws. I know it has been denied, but it seems to me just as inevitable as night follows day that if we undertake to dump our surplus products on the European market, Canada is going to object, Australia is going to object, India is going to object, and England, which desires to be on friendly terms with her colonies, is going to invoke her antidumping law, and then we will be in a position with an enormous surplus of wheat that we can not dispose of. In addition to that it might lead to international strife and discord.

It is a price-fixing scheme; you can call it what you please. History shows——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. May I have two additional minutes?

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. History shows that never has a government price-fixing scheme worked successfully. You can appeal to ancient history or modern history, wherever government price fixing has been tried it has collapsed, to the serious detriment of the nation which undertook to try it. They have all ended that way. It never has been done, and it never will be done. The natural law of economics can not be long frustrated by government edict.

I do not, Mr. Chairman, impugn the motives of those who advocate the passage of this bill. They are sincere. I do not question their sincerity. For some of them I have a very high personal regard, but so were those who tried price fixing before. They, too, were sincere. So were the greenbackers who tried to cure the economic ills which followed the Civil War. They were sincere. So were the free silverites in 1896. So were Lenin and his disciples, who almost have ruined Russia economically by government intrusion in business. They were sincere. The proponents of the McNary-Haugen bill are sincere, but that fact, if it becomes a law, would not lessen one bit the damage that would result therefrom to American agriculture or American business generally. [Applause.] We have become the greatest and the richest and the most powerful nation in the world by encouraging individual initiative and private enterprise and by keeping wide open the door of equality and opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, let Russia experiment with government intrusion in business, but let us follow the safe and tried course that has brought our Nation to its acknowledged position of preeminence among the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Does the gentleman think the door of equal opportunity is kept open in this country when we maintain a tariff bill such as we have now and decline to do anything for the agricultural interests?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. In the first place, we have not declined to do anything for the farmers. As I said in the opening of my remarks, the first bill I voted for was the agricultural emergency tariff bill. Since then I have voted for a dozen or more bills, the object——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. The object of which was to benefit agriculture, and all these measures, as I recall it, have been enacted. I do not claim and nobody claims that there is perfect equality of opportunity in this land. There can not be; our Government is human made; it is therefore not perfect; but we have more equality and opportunity in the United States of America and under the American flag than under any other government in the world. That is what I maintain.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. There is no question about that.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD].

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take the floor at this time, but I feel that somebody from the State of Minnesota ought to say a few words right now. My good friend from Minnesota [Mr. LARSON], who has, during the last two sessions of Congress, so ably been representing the eighth district of Minnesota, in which is situated the city of Duluth, I am quite sure would not have delivered—I will say it was an able discussion from his standpoint—but I will say he would not have delivered that kind of a speech had he been a candidate for reelection. [Applause.]

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. The gentleman did not yield to me.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. But the gentleman made a personal observation.

Mr. WEFALD. I made it in all kindness and in all candor. In the city of Duluth I am sure there is no agricultural crisis. The city of Duluth is where most of the grain that is raised in the Dakotas and Montana passes through the terminal elevators. I remember the time that I was a member of the State Legislature of Minnesota, and some of these bolshevistic farmers that the gentleman from Minnesota has so ably and vividly pictured to you demanded an investigation of the grain business, and we found that out of the millions and millions of bushels of grain—wheat especially—that passed through the elevators at Duluth—and those elevators, I am quite confident in my own mind, are owned, controlled, and operated by the close, personal, and intimate friends of Mr. LARSON—we found that it was the most profitable place in the United States to raise wheat.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a statement?

Mr. WEFALD. The gentleman did not yield to me.

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Well, I did not make any personal observations.

Mr. WEFALD. This is not personal; this is the truth. [Laughter.] We found that there were going through the elevators in Duluth——

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. I rise to ask that the gentleman now addressing the House permit me to make a statement.

Mr. WEFALD. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WEFALD. There were twice as many bushels of No. 1 wheat passing out of the elevators, that was shipped out to Europe, as went into them. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Minnesota does not take the same view of this question that I and the other Representatives from the agricultural districts of Minnesota and the Dakotas and Montana take. The gentleman referred to some of the northwestern Representatives as calamity howlers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEFALD. Give me five minutes more.

Mr. RUBEY. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. WEFALD. I want to ask—I will not ask the gentleman from Minnesota, because I did not yield to him—if, as I was told in a letter by some constituent of mine who wrote me lately in regard to a rural-mail route, that upon that mail route five years ago there were 150 names and there are now only 50 names, whether in that part of the country there is an agricultural crisis? Is there a man within the sound of my voice who will say there is not? Oh, I never dreamed that I should at this day and age and in this place hear the Bourbon spirit speak like it has spoken here when the gentleman from Minnesota told us that the trouble with bank failures in Minnesota was that there were three times as many banks as the State ought to have. Such speaks only the voice of Wall Street. He says they were shoestring banks and went bankrupt. The gentleman has not been out in the agricultural districts of Minnesota and I do not believe he is very well informed on what has happened there during this last year. I can tell him of some banks in Minnesota that had a capital stock of several hundred thousand dollars and deposits that ran up into the figures of millions that have gone bankrupt. They were not shoestring banks at all. The gentleman told us a very funny story about being once mistaken for a barber. Yes; I do not wonder that he was at one time mistaken for a barber. Ah, I wonder whether there is a person within the sound of my voice who, after listening to his speech, did not think that every farmer in Minnesota was such that at this time he needed a shave and a haircut. The gentleman from Minnesota can give them both. Ah, it reminds me of the glorious days of old Senator Nelson, when he came out and talked to the wild-eyed and woolly hayseed farmers. That is what he called them. That was all the sympathy the farmers got from him when they complained. There was agricultural distress at that time also. Yes; I have heard something about Russia. It has been the stock in trade of the new school of politician in Minnesota to talk about Russia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I agreed to yield the gentleman several minutes, I believe. I will yield the gentleman three or four minutes, if he wishes them.

Mr. WEFALD. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for four additional minutes.

Mr. WEFALD. Russia does not scare any man in Minnesota any more. We have a governor in our State who, in his first campaign for the governorship, went before the people, and there was agricultural unrest at that time. What did he say? He spoke about Russia; he said practically the same things that the gentleman said upon this floor to-day, and what did they do to him? He was elected in his first election by a majority of 140,000; in the next election that was cut down to 14,000; and last year, in the senatorial election, he was defeated by a plain dirt farmer to the tune of 95,000 votes. Ah, yes; there is an agricultural crisis in the State of Minnesota, my friends. Any Member of Congress from that State that does not know that will be told so in the next election.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEFALD. The gentleman always gets at least five minutes, and I suppose I have only a minute or so left.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman a very pertinent question.

Mr. WEFALD. Well, go ahead.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is a distinguished representative of the Farm-Labor Party?

Mr. WEFALD. Not very distinguished.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know that his party has denounced this bill?

Mr. WEFALD. My party?

Mr. BLANTON. Through the president of the Farm-Labor Party, Mr. Fitzpatrick?

Mr. WEFALD. Fitzpatrick lives in Texas, I think. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Fitzwater?

Mr. WEFALD. He lives in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is he not your president?

Mr. WEFALD. No. I will tell the gentleman that I am glad he asked that question. My party is a political party; it will reach Texas in time.

Mr. BLANTON. He is the president of the Farmer-Labor Party, is he not?

Mr. WEFALD. Just give me time to answer. I met the gentleman you speak of last winter in a meeting here at which we discussed these farm-relief questions, and he told me that the gentleman from Texas had not seen the light, but they were going to make him see the light by the next election. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Somebody made me see the light, because I always see it.

Mr. WEFALD. I am glad the gentleman asked me the question. I have here in my pocket a prepared speech that it would take me nearly an hour to deliver and I can not get the time now, but if I can get the time to deliver it, I shall show the gentleman what the Democratic Party ought to do and what their pledges were in the last campaign, and what the Republican Party's pledges were in the last campaign, and I can prove to this House that the Republican majority in this House in their platform in the last campaign stands pledged to pass a bill of this kind and nature. I do not support the bill because it is proposed by my party. I am not a slave to party. I do what I think is right. I am not against the bill because the men I have been affiliated with here have not suggested it. I am proud of the fact that my insurgent friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] has delivered the ablest argument against the bill, because that shows that in the insurgency in this House there are some brains attached to it. It shows that we insurgents differ at times and can not be driven like sheep. But I am for this bill in spite of the fact that it is a Republican measure proposed by Republicans, and I think that a Republican President ought to sign it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill and for that reason will vote against it. I regret that I have to vote against a bill that is said to be in the interests of agriculturists—the farmers of the land. I have a sympathy for the men who till the soil, but in that respect I suppose I am no different from millions of city dwellers who realize that we in America who live in great towns and cities are at the longest period but a few generations removed from an ancestry that in all probability tilled the soil in European countries and other lands for several thousands of years. I regret that I have to vote against the measure that is said to be in the interest of the yeomanry of our land who form the real foundation on which is constructed and built up all of our greatness and glory, or to phrase it in the language of our own immortal poet, a greatness and a glory that surpasses "the glory that was of Greece and the grandeur that was of Rome." Over the main archway of the Union Station, one of the Capital's architectural wonders, may be seen an inscription selected by President Eliot, of Harvard University, the first three lines of which should ever be in the minds of the statesmen, though the balance of that inscription is also worth remembering:

> The farm, best home of the family, main > Source of national wealth, foundation of > Civilized society, the natural Providence.
> The old mechanic arts, controlling new > Forces, build new highways for goods
> And men, override the ocean, and make
> The very ether carry human thought.
> The desert shall rejoice and blossom
> As the rose.

Both in the legislature of my native State, where I served the people among whom I was born and reared for 12 years, and in this the Congress of the United States I have unfailingly and sympathetically supported every measure that I thought might afford some relief to the agriculturists of our country. I will continue to do so as long as I serve in a public capacity or live in private life. But I can not support this bill. I can not vote for it, because I am convinced from the annihilating analysis made of it by my colleague Doctor ASWELL, wherein he has demonstrated beyond all cavil and doubt that it will not do the farmer himself any good but will lead to his complete destruction after it has burdened his city wage-earning brethren to the point where their backs will be broken, benefiting only the packers and a few giant holders of agricultural commodities; that it is totally at variance with economic truth and is the last word in governmental fallacy and absurdity. I am convinced by his masterly, forceful, logical speech on this subject that this measure, if enacted into law, will ultimately lead to the unspeakable poverty of the tiller of the soil and the wage earner in the city, adding to the wealth only of those who are presently rich beyond the dreams of avarice. It is a measure that, without being offensive in my statement of the case, is the acme of folly in that it ignores completely the law of demand and supply, a law as ruthless in its operation and as unceasing, inexorable, and unsubduable and unpreventable as the tides of the sea or the seasons of the year. Things perhaps ought to be, but, however sad it may be to come to such a conclusion, things are; and we do not prevent the operation of law by closing our eyes to the situation or ignoring that law.

I would not, if it were not for the persuasion of my friend Doctor ASWELL, address the house on this bill. I am a city dweller, city born and city reared, and that fact might appear to make it impossible for me to understand and appreciate the condition of the poor countryman, farmer or agriculturist, as you will, who is striving to make his humble lot a little brighter and his country a little better for any effort that he may put forth; but my colleague knows that I possess, in common with all of my countrymen, an affection for the man with the hoe, who toils from sunrise to sunset, who earns a pittance, and whose only consolation is that he is still a free man except for his financial burdens, is a son of great nature, free from the artificial restraints that afflict his city brethren, has the open spaces for his breathing spots, and at night the broad canopy of the heavens, star studded, to suggest to him the wonders of the universe and the omnipotence of his God. I wish I could offer some remedy for the financial embarrassment that besets the path of the farmer. He was the first man on earth, and he will be the last man on earth. He was our first kinsman, and he will be the last one of our line when this old earth is speeding on to its final destruction. Altering the lines of a celebrated sentence in a great speech delivered in Congress years ago: If I could be instrumental in lifting his burdens and solving his problems, I would not exchange the proud satisfaction that I would enjoy for all the triumphs that ever decreed to the most successful conqueror.

Then, inasmuch as I know that no statute of any legislative assembly, no resolution of any lawmaker can alter or amend the immutable law of supply and demand, what have I to offer to my toiling countrymen in the fields of the land? Just a few observations from which he may draw a lesson that will in itself suggest a thought that may ripen into other thoughts and carry to other minds that which may result in something that will bring about the betterment of his unhappy financial lot. But before I reach my suggestion, let me repeat, reiterate that any attempt to control, subdue, or prevent the operation of the great law of exchange and trade will be as idle, as foolish, and as barren of results as the pose of Ajax in the fabulous story of his defying the lightning, as the command of Canute to the ocean to stay her proud waves on the shores of his dominion, as the order of Joshua to the sun to stand still, which was tantamount to the ordering of the earth to stop revolving on its axis. No artificial restraint imposed by man can even for a moment prevent the operation of any natural law, or the operation of a law springing into being as the result of conditions that were brought into existence by the operation of some other law. The universal scheme of things is dependent upon law, and that law is in operation unceasingly, though we see it not, understand it not, know it not. In the fullness of time we make the discovery and give its principle an application that works for our individual advancement and promotes the general welfare. Even our great transportation problem, subject to the immutable law that governs all things, will solve itself by a unification of waterways, highways, railways, and airways, inescapable, unavoidable, inevitable as the result of the general growth that will make unerringly and irresistibly for that unification. No; we can not make men rich by congressional resolution or legislative enactment, so far as they will affect the operation of economic laws.

Why, gentlemen, if we could solve the problems that afflict the agriculturalists of this country to-day with a price-fixing measure—and this is a price-fixing measure, soften the term as you will—the problems of the world would be settled for all time to come. I am absolutely convinced, I repeat, that it is utterly at variance with economic truth to think you can do so, and that you are attempting to accomplish the impossible—that is, by resolution of the lawmaker to undo that economic law which has been operating unceasingly night and day from the beginning of time, and like all law will continue to operate until time is no more. You can not do it, gentlemen, as much as I would like to see you do it, and the fact that some of the ablest proponents of this measure to-day have reluctantly conceded that it is not a perfect piece of legislative mechanism, that it is subject to criticism, means nothing more or less than if you were to attempt to put it into operation it would mean unthinkable poverty for nine-tenths of the agricultural masses and for the vast and overwhelming majority of the city dwellers.

The only people who would reap benefits from this bill, I repeat, and I can not repeat it too often, are the packers and the gigantic holders of commodities who would be subject to its provisions, or, rather, the beneficiaries of its provisions. The title has passed from the hands of the men whom you would aid and assist, and God knows I would like to see you in a position to aid and assist them. I know you are sincere; I know you are honest in your endeavor; but that does not render that effort the less susceptible to criticism or less erroneous.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. No; I can not yield now, I regret to say.

Mr. Chairman, I am not severely analytical in my attitude to human existence. The lesson of life has been learned by me by actual observation, and it is that experience that I usually bring to bear in trying to solve the problems that confront me.

Probably, in no other city in the United States of America are the inhabitants so closely related to the people of the surrounding country as we are in the city of New Orleans, where we are blood of their blood and bone of their bone and sinew of their sinew.

That romantic old city, situated at the foot of the river near the Gulf of Mexico, is dependent for her prosperity if not for her existence on cotton, sugar, and rice, so that the people of our city are really within the cousin degree of the people who live around us. In other words, we of New Orleans are of the country and for the country. Now, to the suggestion I referred a short while ago. Years ago when I was stenographer for a cotton house, I learned one of the great lessons, which I will endeavor to indicate to you in hopes that it will fall on fertile ground and bear some results, if not now, at some other day.

For years the South had been obsessed by the slogan or high-sounding expression "cotton is king." The humblest white man in the South swayed by that alluring and appealing announcement refused to make any other crop than a crop of cotton. In fact, he did not think of the matter from any other standpoint or in any other light.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Louisiana 10 minutes from my time.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I learned in those days that there is more danger in a slogan than in a dynamite bomb. I learned that a blind attachment to a tradition, that worshipful reverence almost of the expression "cotton is king," prevented for years the progress of diversification and retarded the new development and prosperity of our section to an immeasurable extent. As a result of our failure to hearken to the cry of a few John the Baptists who were preaching in the wilderness, as it were, the necessity of diversification, cotton hit bottom in 1895, when middling sold for a little above 5 cents per pound. It was a fearful time. But we learned through the stress of that never-to-be-forgotten period the bitter lesson, though we have not learned it entirely. "God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform," and it is through saddening experiences that we learn the law and move to a higher and better knowledge of the things that control us, if we do not control them. During those clerkship days I was in a position to know first hand the trials, the tribulations, the disappointments, and the woes and burdens of the cotton planters, high and low, the merchants and the tenants of the country who raised and shipped their product to the city for sale—for the pittance that it brought in those unhappy days. Yes, I can and do sympathize with the afflictions of the northwestern farmer, for I witnessed the privations and the suffering that our farmers in the South underwent and endured while endeavoring to restore their section of our common country during and after the reconstruction period, when we felt that all was not lost as long as we had honor and the faith of our fathers left.

It was during those dark, terrifying days that there came among us to lift us in a measure from the slough of despond, as it were, a gallant soul from New England, a man who played out magnificently the grand part allotted to him in the drama of life. He was indeed a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to us of Louisiana. He preached day in and day out, week after week, year in and year out, in season and out of season, "Diversification, multiplication of products, diversify, diversify." He realized that such was the only way out of our deplorable situation and that a reasonable application of the doctrine he preached continuously was only the acknowledgment, the meeting, the acquiescence in the living up to the law of production and that economy which teaches that you can not spend more than you make, that you can not have your cake and eat it, too.

We are a very conservative people, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, as you who have observed and studied our dispositions, tendencies, and reactions know. We are extremely reluctant to break old habits or depart from established customs, violate precedents, or change an attitude that might even spell economic vassalage. Notwithstanding the zeal of a few, Peter the Hermit, leading a new crusade, the crusade for diversification, we made little progress in that direction. Our preachments, our sermons, fell to a large extent upon deaf ears, until a terrible day when we awakened to the fact that we were face to face with a calamity that whitened faces and stilled the beatings of our hearts, for a situation suddenly confronted us that had no parallel in history. The boll weevil, insignificantly small in size, but making up an army numbered by millions and millions, cut across the Mexican border and in the twinkling of an eye the prosperity of a vast section was changed to adversity little short of prostration.

I had often read of the desolation of India under the misrule of Warren Hastings and the misery of Oude as depicted by Burke and Sheridan, but never had a grasp of what agricultural ruin meant until I crossed the once fertile fields of north Louisiana, from the Mississippi to the Red River, during the first year of the destruction wrought by the weevil. I shall never forget that trip. Abandoned farms, deserted cabins, making for a solitude so vast that one felt as if he were under the influence of some evil wilderness spirit. The once inspiring slogan "cotton is king" was forgotten, and the boll weevil had apparently conquered. We had not diversified to any extent. We were still a "condensed-milk country with cows running wild." We are learning the great truths of human existence, of the orderly and the wise way, slowly but surely, my friends. That is the only consolation that disaster brings to us, Mr. Chairman, in its wake, and that is that it teaches us some valuable lessons through its chastening rod.

Our people had fled from their fertile fields where they raised cotton only—because cotton was king—as if from a plague-stricken land, for that is what it was after all. Fields that whitened with cotton one day were a waste the next, the boll ravaged by the weevil, against whose advance and depredation we were powerless, which suggests the thought that the human race will be vanquished by an invisible germ against which our guns and high explosives will be useless.

But the longing for home is irrepressible and generally resistless. Our disheartened and discouraged but brave men and women returned to their old homes resolved to do and dare again, and to struggle to hold the old homesteads for their children. Slowly they journeyed back and began life anew and knowing they could not depend upon cotton learned the value of diversification. But I do not think that north Louisiana has yet risen from the position into which she fell then as a cotton-producing section of this country. However, they learned a great though severe lesson. They learned diversification, they learned to avoid the cost of goods bought in the cities and freight costs by making on their farms what they formerly bought. And by the way that is another factor that some day will enter into the calculations, the conversations, the discussions of able men in this country, the tremendous saving that can be effected by avoiding unnecessary freight charges. Economists will ascertain that transportation is overdone in our land. We can not go on shipping raw material practically across the continent to have it put into the finished product, and back again across the continent for consumption, as such a freight charge adds enormously to the sale price of every article sold and consumed. Transportation plays too important a part in the affairs of this country, to the extent that by location of factory near the raw material we can avoid considerable freightage. But only time and a logical development of our great resources can cure the ills that are afflicting us recently, industrially, commercially, and agriculturally.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I wish to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] and my good friend from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] for the time they have allowed me. I know that I have not contributed very much to the value of this discussion. Some one once said that some men can talk half a minute and keep the world guessing for half a century while others can talk for half a century and not keep the world guessing for half a minute. I know that I do not belong in the first class, and I hope that I do not belong in the latter. I have endeavored to carry to your minds the fact that you can not by resolution, by legislative enactment, alter the great laws that have been constantly working from time immemorial to use the solemnity of a legalist. Otherwise you would have the millenium or, more than that, you would have the law that governs all things subservient and controlled by the legislative fiat of mere man. [Applause.]

Let me conclude; but before I do so permit me to say that the majority Members have not labored in vain. They have labored long, earnestly, and industriously with a problem that has puzzled philosophers and students since the sunrise of civilization in hopes of bringing to us a solution. Inexhaustible zeal, indefatigable enterprise, untiring activity have marked their course in the consideration and the reporting of this bill to the House. They have not failed, though the measure do not pass. They have aroused discussion, and it is upon the anvil of discussion that the spark of truth will fly. Though they lack the victors, they shall not want the toiler's pay.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I represent an agricultural district. My constituents are principally farmers and stockmen. They are now suffering great distress due to deflation following the war. Many stock raisers who owned considerable properties before the war are now bankrupt. I am deeply concerned about their welfare. I am very anxious, indeed, to help them. They deserve help. All will admit that agriculture must be put back on its feet. Farm life and farm profits must be made so attractive that the boys who have left the farms will return to them and be satisfied there.

But what is it possible for a Congress through legislation to do that will help and assist agriculture? It would not be a sound policy to give money to farmers. And they do not want their Government to give them anything. All they want is a fair, square deal. They want the Government to stop discriminating against them. They want a fair show. They want a fair market. They want only one middleman, not a dozen, making profits between them and the consumers.

I would vote for any bill that offers any sure relief for agriculture. But I will not fool the farmers and stockmen. When they ask for bread I will not give them a stone. I will not help to appropriate $200,000,000 in their name out of the Public Treasury and then make it possible for this stupendous sum of money to be squandered by others, and then tax the farmers and stockmen to make it good. I will not hold out make-believes and then rob them. During the eight years I have been here I have seen the Congress appropriate about $70,000,000 each year in the name of the farmers and turn it over to the Department of Agriculture, and then watched the most of it expended in salaries and traveling expenses for swivel-chair employees; and when the overhead is compared with the small benefit bestowed upon the farmers and stockmen, it reminds me of when the little boy said he would rather have the bite than the apple.

Calling this McNary-Haugen bill a "farmers' relief measure" does not make it so. I have found that titles to bills are very misleading. I have found that all of them deserve close scrutiny. This bill will cause to be appropriated $200,000,000 of money out of the Public Treasury, and to get it the people of the United States—farmers and stockmen—will have to be taxed. And this money will be turned over to a Government corporation presided over by five directors, the chairman of it drawing $12,000 and the other four $10,000 each per year, and from the minority report we glean that we will probably have about 50,000 extra employees put on the pay roll to administer this act. Is not that too many employees? Is not that going it pretty strong on increased expenses? Have the farmers asked that we thus spend their money? No! For in that petition, signed by 350,000 actual dirt farmers of the United States, which they sent to us Congressmen through one of the leaders of the Republican steering committee, published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, they demanded of Congress that we must not create any more boards, that we must not create any more commissions, that we must not create any more high-salaried positions, but that we must stop waste and that we must stop extravagance. And Congress has not yet paid any attention to them.

When the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] was discussing this bill he was asked why the consumers now had to pay just as much for pork when farmers are getting only 7 cents per pound, as they did when the farmers received almost double that price, and why all this profit between the producer and consumer was permitted. His reply substantially was that there was no provision in this bill designed to remedy that situation. Why is there no provision in this bill to stop these unconscionable profits of middlemen between the producers and consumers? That is the only thing the producers are asking of Congress. Even if this bill were workable—which it is not—and even if it would cause farmers now to receive 11 cents per pound for their hogs instead of 7—which it will not—there is not one paragraph in the bill to prevent these same numerous middlemen collecting their profits over and over again above this 11 cents before the consumer is able to put the pork on his table.

It would be a very easy matter, indeed, for Congress to limit these intermediate profits if it wanted to do so, but seemingly it does not want to do so, for it does not. President Wilson recommended that Congress do so. But it did not. Why does it not do so? Is it a fact that these middlemen have so much influence that they are able to prevent Congress from passing such a law? If this is not so, then why is it that Congress does not pass a law that will stop it?

There are many cattle and sheep in my district. My constituents are vitally interested in the price of beef, mutton, and wool. But even the proponents of this measure must admit that this bill will not benefit these products one penny. Why? Simply because the bill does not operate on any product until there is declared an exportable surplus of that product in the United States. And every posted Member of this House knows that we import more beef, and more mutton, and more wool than we export, hence there could not be declared an exportable surplus on any of these three commodities, hence it is clearly apparent that this bill will not benefit any cattle raiser or sheep raiser one penny's worth.

Mr. Chairman, we are witnessing a most peculiar situation. We have here a bill before us called a farmers' relief bill. The initial appropriation to come out of the Treasury authorized by this bill and which is to help the farmers is the great sum of $200,000,000, and yet all of the cotton farmers all over the United States—and cotton is the main crop in my State—think so little of the bill, however much they want relief, that they have come in and demanded that they be left out of it, and they were left out. Hence no cotton farmer in the United States will get any relief whatever from this bill. Is not that a wonderful situation? We have a farmers' relief bill that is to take an initial appropriation of $200,000,000 out of the Treasury, with cotton farmers and cattle raisers and sheep raisers all needing relief, and we find that the bill offers none of them any relief whatever, and we see the Representative of a farmers' district, our friend from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] on the committee, yet fighting it. We have a farmers' relief bill to appropriate $200,000,000, and we find another strong Representative of a farmers' district, our friend from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] on the committee, yet fighting it. And we find fighting it another member of the Committee on Agriculture, our colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES], who represents a farming and stock-raising district. They are fighting to keep you from placing it as a shackle around the feet of the farmers of the country. Is not that a peculiar situation?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask the gentleman to kindly excuse me as I have so little time. We see another peculiar situation. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, our friend and colleague, Mr. WEFALD, is the representative and the only representative in Congress of the Farm-Labor Party. I have the highest regard for our friend Mr. WEFALD. He is a splendid gentleman. But I have no regard whatever for his party.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to my friend because he is always courteous, and he yields to everybody.

Mr. WEFALD. I thank the gentleman. I wish to be fair always. Does the gentleman know anything about my party? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I am now going to tell the gentleman something about it, with respect to its attitude toward this bill which it condemns. I have a letter here that has just been sent to me within the last two hours. It is dated to-day, May 22, 1924, and is from the Farmers' National Council. On the letterhead it gives the names of the officials who compose this Farmers' National Council. Let me read some of them: "W. W. Fitzwater, president of Farm-Labor Union of America." He is the national president of the gentleman's great organization known as the Farm-Labor Union.

Mr. WEFALD. Where does he live?

Mr. BLANTON. It does not state here, but I happen to know that he lives at Bonham, Tex. Let me give you some others. Here is "A. M. Hilliard, president Farm-Labor Union of Texas." The other was the national president. Here is "S. P. Russell, president Oklahoma Farm-Labor Union." Here is "R. W. H. Stone, president North Carolina Farmers' Union." Here is "J. C. Thompson, president Arkansas Farm-Labor Union." Here is "J. E. Warren, president Mississippi Farm-Labor Union," and I could read a whole batch of the others, but I have not the time; but that is a sufficient recitation to show you that they are some of the leading representatives of the gentleman's party, the Farm-Labor Union, and while I do not indorse either them or their party, I want to read you their just condemnation of this vicious bill.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not the time; otherwise I would gladly yield. I must read to my distinguished friend from Minnesota [Mr. WEFALD], who represents this Farm-Labor Union in Congress, and is its only Representative here, just what this letter from this Farmers' National Council says about this bill. I want you to understand clearly, however, that I do not indorse any of these men who are members of th's council and I do not indorse their council, but however misguided they have otherwise been on political, economical, and governmental questions, they seem to have a pretty good idea about the viciousness of this bill.

Mr. WEFALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. From this letter, dated to-day, from this Farmers' National Council I quote the following excerpts:

To Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: The Haugen bill is worth many hundreds of millions of dollars a year to meat packers and millers, bakers, and other speculators by increasing the value of stocks of their products they have on hand as soon as it goes into effect and by enabling exporters to assess back upon the farmers losses which they claim with their padded accounts to have sustained on the exports of meat products, flour, etc.

The Haugen bill is admitted by its author to be so injurious to farmers that he incorporates (sec. 305, p. 27) a criminal penalty of one year in jail or a $5,000 fine, or both, on farmers who "willfully" fail to comply with its wicked and unworkable provisions.

The Haugen bill is dishonest and deceitful; it pretends that farmers are to be paid the pre-war ratio price, though they were going broke at that price, but its sponsors privately admit farmers won't get over three-fifths to four-fifths of the pre-war ratio price. That is true.

The Haugen bill, through the intermittent operation of the export corporation opens the way to such colossal fraud, waste, and loot as make Teapot Dome lease look sanctified.

The Haugen bill is sponsored by Charles J. Brand, long the meat packers' efficient tool in the Department of Agriculture, whose present job is endangered by revelations regarding the Haugen Packers' Act.

The Haugen bill has not been indorsed by a single real national general farm organization, and all clear-thinking farmers are opposed to it. * * *

The Haugen bill has not been indorsed by a single real labor organization * * *.

Chairman HAUGEN suppressed the testimony I gave before his committee against the Haugen bill in which I exposed its vicious origins and results.

The Haugen bill is indorsed by the big financiers and bankers, like Otto Kahn, who see a chance to save their speculations. Who has paid for the enormously expensive propaganda for the Haugen swindle on farmers?

The Haugen bill is indorsed by * * *. They also indorsed the Cummins-Esch robbery and the ship-subsidy steal, and are fast losing their members. The Haugen bill will increase the cost of living by at least $1,500,000,000 a year, or $64 per family, of which the farmers may not be prevented from getting $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 in cash, to have it taken away from them later in higher prices for what they buy. The profiteers will take the rest, about $1,100,000,000.

The Haugen bill is a scheme to fill the treasury of the Republican Party—the oil funds being dried up.

Chairman HAUGEN knows he is misrepresenting the position of the American Federation of Labor, whose representatives stated they are willing to pay a higher price for farm products if the farmer gets it. They certainly would not be a party, nor would any other labor organization, to any bill to rob producers and consumers for the benefit of the gamblers and bankers who, Mr. HAUGEN admits, favor his bill. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 20, pp. 9028–9029.)

The Haugen bill is part of the big meat packers' scheme to create a food monopoly. Mr. HAUGEN amended his bill to include rice. In the one year, 1917, Armour & Co. became the greatest rice merchant of the world. The Armour Grain Co., of which the Armour family owned 86.9 per cent in 1917, handled 23 per cent of all grain receipts at Chicago, the greatest market in the world. At this minute, while Mr. HAUGEN is pushing his packers' subsidy bill, Armour and Swift are fighting in the courts to have the packers' consent decree set aside so they can get Mr. HAUGEN'S subsidy on wheat and rice, as well as on all products of cattle, swine, and sheep. Not a single big packer appeared against this bill. They have their agent, Charles H. Brand, working with Mr. HAUGEN for it. Ask Mr. HAUGEN if he dares deny these facts.

The Haugen bill is a typical standpat perversion of the bounty system of embargo and bounty which pays the bounty out of the Public Treasury. The Haugen bill provides for an embargo, but instead of paying a bounty to the producers of controlled crops, it almost criminally soaks the farmers to pay a bonus to speculators in these farm products.

Mr. Dante M. Pierce, Republican, leading farm journal publisher, says in the Iowa Homestead:

> "The McNary-Haugen bill, in my opinion, is a snare and a delusion created to befog the farmers' minds, becloud real farming issues, and make political capital for a little clique of men. * * * It is an effort to devise a system which will not bother the grain gamblers, the brokers, the commission men, or the packers."

The Haugen bill is a sinister move to kill a real efficient marketing system for farm products and end real cooperation. Kill the Haugen bill, and the administration and the House and Senate majority leaders will pass a real measure for farmers instead of the fake McNary-Haugen swindle on farmers. They won't dare not to. They might as well not have an election if they do not. They know it.

Eugene Frey, formerly lecturer for the Illinois State Grange, writes:

> "I can not support the McNary-Haugen bill. To me it simply spells the death knell for genuine cooperative effort. The McNary-Haugen bill is vicious."

The present administration has deceived, robbed, flimflammed, deflated, and buncoed and broke nearly a million farmers. The Haugen bill is a climax of iniquity to this record.

I want you gentlemen to understand that the above denunciation of this bill does not come from me but from this Farmers' National Council. And while I agree that this bill is bad and should be defeated, I am almost ashamed to quote this organization and its board of directors, some of whose names I have given you.

The foregoing, however, is what an organization that I do not approve of says. I have been reading its condemnation just to show that the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota does not seem to be in accord with his party; he seems to be out of accord with these officials. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEFALD. I am glad the gentleman yielded at this time so I may set him right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Will those in charge of time kindly give me five minutes more?

Mr. VOIGT. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEFALD. I wish to say to the gentleman that I came to Congress pledged to the support of the Norris-Sinclair bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, then, did the gentleman not get behind that and help us kill the Haugen bill?

Mr. WEFALD. Just one second. At this time it seems to me that the Haugen bill is the only bill that we can have a chance to get action on. I think it is the next best to the Norris-Sinclair bill. The gentleman used names of men who indorsed the Norris-Sinclair bill. Will the gentleman from Texas support that bill if it comes before the House?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not had time yet to study it, but I am willing for the men on the committee who represent real farming districts close to me to look after that bill, and if they say it is good I would then study it to see whether I will support it.

Mr. WEFALD. That bears out what I told the gentleman, that the gentleman from Texas is going to see the light, and I think he is beginning to see the light.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I find that this letter tells the truth when it mentions Otto H. Kahn, because in another circular here is what I received in the way of the Kahn propaganda [exhibiting it] which came in another envelope, coming from a different State and post office.

I also got this circular [exhibiting another], supposed to come from Kansas, and then in another envelope from another post office I got this circular that is supposed to be an indorsement from organized labor; but when you put all three of them together you will see they are printed on the same printing press, with the same printer's ink, and with the same paper and type, if you please, all coming from the same source. Some one master mind sent all of this propaganda to us.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. Not at the moment. I regret I have not the time.

Mr. TINCHER. I always yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. If our friend from Kansas had additional time to yield me, I would gladly yield for questions. I wish I had the time, because I do think a great deal of my friend from Kansas. Let me call attention to some other serious——

Mr. BLACK of New York. Was the union label on that last union circular?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think it is on it. Look at it. I do not think the union label is on it. Well, since the label is not there, throw it away, because without the union label on it we know it is not authentic. The other night when the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] was making the best speech I have heard here in many a day he turned to the chairman [Mr. HAUGEN] and he said, "When these 80,000 hogs come on the Chicago stockyards and the Chicago stockyards can not use but 50,000 of them, and there are 30,000 to be handled by this Government corporation," he said, Mr. Chairman, "tell me what this Government corporation is going to do with those 30,000 surplus hogs"; and the chairman said, "Just send them on to another market; pass them on; send them on." How are they going to do it?

Mr. PAIGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. PAIGE. I assume that the gentleman believes that the law of supply and demand will regulate this whole matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. PAIGE. You remember three or four years——

Mr. BLANTON. You can not beat the law of supply and demand, if you prevent combinations.

Mr. PAIGE. The gentleman remembers when the slogan was "Buy a bale of cotton at 10 cents." That cotton to-day is 25 cents. If the southern cotton growers had then made a move for a bill of this kind to put cotton to 25 cents, it would have closed down every textile mill that used cotton in this country.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is right. Now I want to mention the hog proposition. Some of you gentlemen who raise hogs—I think our friend from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] ought to hear this, the hog expert on class A hogs; I think he ought to be present and hear this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. I yield to the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to use those five minutes myself, and I must decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If any of you have ever rounded up your hogs and put them in a wagon or two wagons and started to market with them, before you got there, maybe so, you would find two or three 300-pound hogs dead in the wagon. I have seen that happen. When you get a hog fat and ready for market it is a pretty risky business to handle him under certain conditions.

You are taking big chances on him; you have got to know how to handle him in order to have him reach market alive. Suppose you ship hogs from several other States to Chicago, and when they reached the stockyards the packers could not take them, and then the corporation had to rehandle them and ship them somewhere else. Do you not know that the Government is going to lose many in that bunch of hogs by reloading them on the cars and sending them elsewhere after the Government purchases them?

I want to refer to just one other matter in these five minutes in order to show you the ridiculous attitude our committee is in. Our friend from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] virtually admitted this was a price-fixing proposition.

Mr. RUBEY. I did not admit that.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to ask you to look at his remarks to-morrow and see what he did say.

Mr. RUBEY. I will tell the gentleman what I said.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, do not take this out of my time. I decline to yield.

Mr. RUBEY. I will tell the gentleman what I said.

Mr. BLANTON. Here are about the words the gentleman used. I paid close attention and the gentleman will not deny them when I say them. Here is what our friend said. He said, "We do not admit this is a price-fixing matter, but," he said, "for the sake of the argument, let us presume it is," and then he said, "What of it?"

Mr. RUBEY. Well, what of it? Tell us.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this interruption be not taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks not to be interrupted.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to tell him "what of it." I have seen this Government price-fixing machine operate. I was here during the war, and we had a southern man, if you please, as Secretary of Agriculture—Mr. David F. Houston. He had been president of my State University of Texas for several years, and he had been my professor in the State university when I was a young man attending college there in 1894 and 1895. He was supposed to have at heart the interests of the southern farmers, yet when cotton was worth 45 cents a pound we found this southern Secretary of Agriculture attempting to fix a price of only 25 cents a pound on cotton, which would have bankrupted every cotton farmer in the United States. That is an illustration of what may happen with Government price fixing.

I want to say this to you on this price-fixing proposition: It works both ways. It can be fixed up and it can be fixed down. I heard that distinguished orator from New York, the Hon. Bourke Cockran, stand on this floor and in one of the last speeches he made here say this. He said:

> I represent 5,000,000 consumers in the city of New York, and I am here to stand and fight for them to get everything they eat and everything they wear at the very lowest price possible.

Those are the words of the former distinguished Bourke Cockran, of New York. That is what we find to be the attitude of those coming from the great metropolises of this Nation. We will find the Representatives of the 5,000,000 constituents of New York voting to get what they eat and what they wear at the very lowest minimum possible, and there could come a time when, by the vote of the Representatives on this floor, the producers of this country, the producers of food, clothing in the raw materials, if you please, could have their rights jeopardized by a price-fixing machine which would run them off the farms. You have already run the boys off. It is the men and the old men, women and little girls, children who do the work there now. The boys are going to the cities. But if you should ever start a price-fixing machine there will come a time when you will run them all off the farms, and you people who live in the big cities of this Nation, in New York, Chicago, and San Francisco, will starve to death for want of food.

I am going to vote with the farmers' representatives on this committee, men like the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], men like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE], men like my colleague from Texas, MARVIN JONES, who represents not only a farming district but a stock-raising district. He has the interests of the stockmen at heart. He knows what could happen to the stockmen if this price-fixing machine is once started and put into operation. I am going to vote with those men, and I hope I shall get a chance to vote to strike out the enacting clause of this bill so that we may stop it where it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. TINCHER. I am in a position to yield to the gentleman one minute in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one additional minute.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to know who signed the letter the gentleman has read.

Mr. BLANTON. A man for whom I have neither respect nor regard, a man named Benjamin C. Marsh, managing director of this Farmers' National Council.

Mr. TINCHER. I just wanted to know [illegible] the man was.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield [illegible] the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen: There have been more misstatements of fact in the discussion of the McNary-Haugen bill than I have ever listened to in the discussion of any bill during the five years I have been a Member of this House, a part of the time, perhaps, for specious argument and at other times, no doubt, for lack of information.

Many have had something to say in regard to price-fixing. I maintain that this is not a price-fixing bill and my statement can be substantiated by the figures. If the bill had been in operation during the past year the effect on wheat prices would have been as follows, month by month. Starting with January, 1923, the price would have been, central market, highest grade wheat, $1.65; the next month, $1.66; the next month, $1.68; $1.68; $1.65; $1.62; $1.59; $1.59; $1.63; $1.62; $1.61; $1.60; and the first three months of this year, $1.60, $1.61, and $1.59.

How can anybody say that this is a price-fixing bill with a price that fluctuates practically 12 times in the year and a different price each and every month?

Now, gentlemen from New England have been very much disturbed as to the effect the enactment of this bill into law is going to have on their constituents.

I want to read to you a telegram received to-day, which tells you the effect that the agricultural depression is already having on your constituents, on your cotton mills, and you, men, in your cotton fields:

ROSALIA, WASH., May 19, 1924.

Hon. JOHN W. SUMMERS,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Cotton growers and manufacturers and wholesalers in eastern trade centers have direct interest in passage McNary-Haugen bill to restore buying powers to farmers.

Merchants in typical farm centers show remarkable decrease in merchandise purchases from New England and eastern Central States.

Six merchants of Walla Walla, Wash., purchases in 1920 aggregated $1,530,000.

The same merchants in 1923 purchased only $873,000.

Five merchants, Pendleton, Oreg., same years, reduction from $954,000 to $421,000.

Six merchants, Colfax, Wash., same years, $421,000 to $245,000.

All showing farmers' reduced buying power, $2,904,000 to $1,539,000.

F. J. WILMER,

President Whitman County National Bank.

The figures show a decrease in eastern purchases of nearly exactly 50 per cent.

That is what is the matter with your cotton mills and that is what would be the matter with your cotton prices in the South if it had not been for the boll weevil, which destroyed your crop and brought your price up to where it is to-day. I can not understand how men can gather their righteous economic robes about themselves and draw themselves off into one little section of the country and think that they and theirs are living alone. It does not happen. It can not be. We are all interdependent, interrelated one with the other. [Applause.]

All these facts show that the purchasing power of the farmer has been enormously reduced. While these figures especially reflect conditions in 9,000 towns west of the Mississippi River, they apply with almost equal force in Illinois and Indiana and several of the other states of the Union.

Are you now going to say that this is a sectional measure, that this is a class proposition? There is not a problem before the American Congress that compares with it. The tax bill, the bonus question, or any of the measures that we have had before us do not compare in their effect on American commerce, on American citizens, on American labor, and on American industry with the bill we are considering now. If I had the time

I would like to show the effect on the banks. Our friend from Duluth, Minn., spoke about 1920. Why, there have been eight times as many bank failures in the last eight months as there were in 1920, the year he cited as the worst year.

I would like to show you the figures on tax payments. I will show you that farmers in a highly productive country are paying only 5 per cent of the income taxes they paid four years ago. Does not that affect you throughout the United States? [Applause.] Gentlemen of the Southland and of the industrial East, I want you to know conditions as they are.

THE MAN BEHIND THE PLOW

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a few days ago I received this telegram:

WALLA WALLA, WASH., May 13, 1924.

JOHN W. SUMMERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Following are comparisons of purchasing power of bushel of wheat in 1913 with to-day:

Two-bottom plow cost then 80 bushel now 140.
Wagon then 80 bushel now 200.
Double harness then 40 bushel now 80.
Suit clothes then 40 bushel now 80.
Pair of shoes then 6 bushel now 12.
Machine operators per day then 8 bushel now 16.
Harvest labor per day then 3 bushel now 6¼.
All other articles in same ratio.

F. O. HAGIE, Secretary Chamber of Commerce.

These cartoons, which Allen Sousa, our courteous keeper of the west door, has enlarged at my request, forcefully illustrate the condition of the American farmer.

This one shows farm products in one end of the balances and all commodities in the other end. You will note the striking disadvantage of the farmer. Note the surprise on Uncle Sam's face as he confesses he "did not know conditions were so bad."

Our second cartoon shows the evening up of the balances under the McNary-Haugen bill.

Uncle Sam's cup of joy is full; his face is one broad smile of surprise and happiness. He wants to treat all his people fairly. "That's more like it," says Uncle Sam. "A square deal is all I want," says Uncle Reuben.

THE FARMER

The American farmer is the greatest stabilizing force in American life, American institutions, and American government to-day. So he has been since the foundations of the Republic were laid. I will go further and remind you that he furnishes the chief market for American industries, and that without him they must crumble; and in the crash American labor suffers most of all.

THE GOOD OLD DAYS

Prior to the World War the price of farm products kept pretty even pace with the products of factories, with transportation, and with labor. During the very normal 10-year period just preceding the war the price of farm products and of 404 commodities on which statistics are kept were on about the same level. We all agree that this parity was just.

Since agriculture is our great basic industry, no doubt all who hear me will agree that in common fairness agriculture of right should move up and down with all commodities.

WHY FARM PRICES LAG 30 TO 50 PER CENT

However, since the war we find the all-commodity price about 154 as compared with 100 before the war, and agriculture dragging 30 to 50 points behind. Why is agriculture lagging? For two reasons: First. Transportation, manufactured articles, and labor are high—perhaps not too high—but these enter largely into the farmer's cost of producing, and he can not escape these costs. He may work longer hours; he may strive as he will, but he can not control these high cost factors.

Second. As conditions are to-day we see the farmer carrying his surplus product to Liverpool, there to barter against the products of cheap lands, cheap labor, and lower living standards of peasants and peons in the Argentine, Australia, and India, and the new, productive lands or northwest Canada. Not only does he sell his surplus in Liverpool, but there also from day to day under those conditions is fixed the price that controls the remainder of his product in America.

HOW FARM PRICES ARE FIXED

That Liverpool does control not only the prices of our export product but of our home-consumed products, is well illustrated by the sale of wheat in my home town of Walla Walla, Wash. I speak of wheat only because I am more familiar with it and because it is typical of all major farm products.

If I go down town and offer my wheat for sale before 10 o'clock on any morning in the year the grain buyer will say, "I have not heard from Portland this morning." A little later he hears from the exporter at Portland, whose price is the Liverpool price less handling and carrying charges. If I go around the corner and offer to sell to my miller, he invariably bases his price on what the exporter is paying. So, whether my wheat goes abroad or remains at home it sells on the basis of the Liverpool price. This condition prevails throughout the country.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH FIRMS WITH INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES CONTROL IN AMERICA

As a matter of fact, the biggest exporter of American wheat is Samuel Sanday & Co., of London, England, an English partnership operating through a branch office in New York. The next largest export firm is Louis Dreyfus & Co., of Paris, France, with branch offices in London, New York, Buenos Aires, Antwerp, Bombay and Calcutta (India), Melbourne, Australia, and other points. Through these and other companies and their subsidiaries with interlocking directorates, operating at every important port on the map—shown by United States Federal Trade Commission—the grain trade of the world is absolutely controlled. Prices are moved up and down at will—but seldom up. The American farmer who produces under American standards is played against the peasants and peons of other countries. His production costs are on a stepladder; his sale price is on a footstool.

FARMERS BETWEEN TWO MILLSTONES—OTHERS ARE GROUND

American agriculture is between two great millstones: One, the 50 to 100 per cent increased cost of production since the war; the other, a manipulated world market which remains near the pre-war level.

Let us consider what these millstones are doing to the man behind the plow.

He sells for less than the cost of production. He fails to meet his obligations at the bank: he can not pay the implement dealer, the grocer, and the merchant who are also financed by the same bank.

What happens?

The Comptroller of the Currency answers the question. A statement just received from him shows as follows:

Failures of State and national banks by fiscal years

Year	State	National	Total
1920	44	5	49
1921	330	28	358
1922	363	33	396
1923	237	37	274

From June 30, 1923, to April 6, 1924, national	112
From June 30, 1923, to February 8, 1924, State (partial)	311
Incomplete returns bank failures during past eight months	423	423
Total		1,500

From 1870 to 1920 there were 3,050 bank failures in the United States.

The figures here quoted show approximately one-half as many bank failures during the past three and one-half years as during the preceding 50 years. Probably 250 failures since this Congress convened.

Millions have lost their savings. A bank failure brings general consternation to its community. These failures have occurred mostly in agricultural States, but the effects are felt in remote financial centers and by the jobbers and manufacturers throughout the country. Ten bank failures have occurred where normally there would have been but one failure. Wise observers say the crash has only begun.

Do you know there were more national-bank failures during 1923 than there were from 1863 to 1872?

Do you know there were three times as many national-bank failures in 1922 as there were in the panic of 1877?

Do you know there have been five times as many national-bank failures during the past nine months as during the panics of 1873 and 1877 combined?

THE CROSSROADS AND THE FEDERAL TREASURY

The millstones are not only grinding the man down at the crossroads, they are shifting the burdens of taxation to other shoulders. That the farmer has been almost eliminated as a Federal income-tax payer is proven by the following figures from the most productive wheat section in America and with the 1923 yield well above normal. The territory covered is 200 miles in extent and produced 100,000,000 bushels last year.

COLFAX, WASH., March 25, 1924.

Hon. JOHN W. SUMMERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

This county produced about 13,000,000 bushels of wheat last year. Decreasing incomes and losses of representative farmers show necessity for some constructive measure of relief.

Here are some cases taken at random that show Nation effect: One farmer in 1920 paid $1,900 income tax. He paid no income tax for 1922 and 1923.

Another paid $800 in 1920. No tax paid during past two years.

Another paid $1,100 in 1920, $400 for 1922, and nothing for 1923.

Another paid $1,700 in 1920 and nothing since.

Another paid $7,800 in 1920. Paid $1,900 in 1921 and no tax since.

These are not special cases, but reflect the condition and trend of the farming industry.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

WALLA WALLA, WASH., March 18, 1924.

Congressman JOHN W. SUMMERS,
Washington, D. C.:

This is one of heaviest wheat-producing areas in United States. Unusually good crop last year.

Condition of agriculture shown by following figures: Nineteen farmers paid $9,031 Federal income tax in 1920. These same farmers paid $545 tax for 1923.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
F. O. HAGIE, Managing Secretary.

PENDLETON, OREG., March 25, 1924.

Hon. JOHN W. SUMMERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Income tax paid Government four years ago by six of our big farmers aggregated $26,205.39.

One of these farmers paid $284.29 in 1923; no interest earned on his paid-up investment of half million dollars. The other five farmers show losses for 1923 aggreaging $35,000.

GEORGE C. BAER,
Secretary Commercial Club.

ROSALIA, WASH.

Hon. JOHN W. SUMMERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

One hundred and fifty farmers this community in 1920 paid $36,000 income tax. The same farmers paid $2,000 this year.

F. J. WILMER,
President Whitman County National Bank.

Taken collectively these figures show the farmer is only paying 5 per cent of the Federal income tax he was paying four years ago, while 95 per cent of his Federal tax has been shifted to the shoulders of his more prosperous industrial neighbors or perhaps it never reaches the Federal Treasury.

There are 6,500,000 farmers in the United States. If in normal times their Federal taxes average but $50, then fixing the price of American farm products in Liverpool is costing the industrial sections of the country in taxes, or else it is costing the Federal Treasury, more than $300,000,000 annually.

BUYING CAPACITY CUT IN TWO

Meanwhile the farmer has been living on his accumulated resources and buying, not what he wants, not what he needs, but only what he must have. Mortgages increase from year to year while cash and credit decrease. The effect must inevitably reach the industrial centers with increasing force with each succeeding month.

TWO MILLION FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND STARVED FROM THEIR FARMS IN TWO YEARS

The farmer does not readily yield to difficulties. However, with broken spirits and resentful of the millstones, 100,000 have been starved from their farms monthly during the past two years. Department of Agriculture figures indicate that nearly 2,500,000 of our farm population has given up the struggle during that period.

Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I ask you seriously, What does it mean and when and where will it end?

I grant you the small farmer who employs little or no labor and lives within a stone's throw of the market suffers less severely. However, the cowman, the wheat rancher, the corn and hog grower are all deeply involved. The problem is nation-wide. It challenges the best thought of every serious-minded man in America, and especially does it challenge this Congress.

HOW THE EMERGENCY CAN NOT BE MET—LIMITING PRODUCTION

The suggestion is seriously made that the farmer "limit his production to home consumption." Well, the farmer never has done that, but as to wheat he is exporting but little more now than in 1913, and less than he exported in 1914, 1915, and 1916.

Again, agricultural exports constituted more than 40 per cent of our total export trade last year. It brought to America $1,800,000,000. Would you deprive the railroad and steamship lines of that tonnage? Would you limit the farmer's purchasing power that much? In brief, would you deprive America of $1,800,000,000 wealth annually?

Someone has said, "If farming is not profitable, better abandon it." I ask, What, then, would the farmer do with his livestock, his machinery, his debts, his investments, his home? Where would several millions find jobs and places to lay their heads? The farmer has his life's savings in his farm and equipment. Would you have him abandon them? It would be as reasonable to suggest to the manufacturer that he limit his endeavor and output to domestic requirements. Were the advice followed in both instances, then we would trade dollars among ourselves and rapidly exhaust our gold on imports.

DIVERSIFICATION

Diversification is advisable under certain conditions, but diversification on multiplied millions of acres is impossible, because the lands are only suited to growing wheat. Again, to stop growing one crop at a loss and start growing another crop at a loss profits nothing.

COOPERATION

"Cooperative marketing" will solve the farmer's problems, says another. The farmer believes in cooperation, but several years will be required to organize 6,000,000 widely scattered and isolated farmers. Everyone familiar with the present crisis knows that however much cooperation may do for the future it can not meet the present emergency. The farmer knows this best of all and will hold to strict account the administration, the political party, and the individual that brings him relief two or three or five years after the sheriff's sale. Cooperation can not at this time span the 45-cent gap between the cost of growing wheat in the United States and the cost of growing wheat in Canada. The Liverpool price will still stare him in the face regardless of cooperation.

AS TO LOANS

"Since deflation started all his troubles let us loan him more money" says some wise soothsayer. But the farmer down at the crossroads has thought the thing through to the end. He knows he can not sell his crops year after year below the actual cost of production and keep in the game. He also knows his is a legitimate industry and that he is entitled to some small return on his capital investment. The farmer knows he can not borrow himself out of debt. Not more credit but more price is his only way to relief.

THE SIMON-PURE ECONOMIST

Then comes the simon-pure economist who says, "the only proper solution is to bring everything else down to the farmer's price." The economist means, repeal the Adamson law of 1916, undo the crime of speedy deflation in 1920, repeal our tariff laws, repeal the transportation act and open wide our gates to unrestricted immigration. The economist knows that what he has suggested can not be done; and if it could be done then America would be living on the same plane as the peasants and cheap labor of other countries and would have to pay her $22,000,000,000 war debt with 50-cent dollars.

The economist insists that world supply and demand shall control the price of farm products. But supply and demand do not control the price of the knife I hold in my hand. If it did my knife would cost me 30 cents instead of 75 cents and would come from Germany or Japan instead of Pennsylvania.

Supply and demand do not control the price of the clothes I wear, otherwise this suit would cost me 25 bushels of wheat instead of 50 bushels. World supply and demand do not control labor costs, otherwise a day's labor would cost the farmer 1 bushel of wheat instead of 6 bushels. World supply and demand would bring the all-commodity price level in America from the step ladder to the footstool. As a matter of fact for half a century or more we have enacted legislation for the specific purpose of interfering with supply and demand and of establishing American standards.

PROFANITY NOT A SOLUTION

One other solution is frequently offered. The pseudostatesman gets red in the face and tries to solve the problem by cursing, damning, abusing, and calling the farmer names for seeking a solution of his problems. It can not be done that way, gentlemen.

The farmer's problem is not imaginary. It is the most real thing in America and before the American Congress to-day. It is immeasurably bigger than the tax bill, the bonus bill, or the immigration bill, and I voted for them all.

Time forbids my discussion of the bill now before us, but the question which you will answer soon is: Shall the biggest industry in America, touching the lives and fortunes of a hundred million people, survive or perish?

Farmers on the verge of bankruptcy by the millions are awaiting your answer. They will penetrate any gesture at relief, however well disguised.

The farmer's attention is focused on this Congress. He already is impatient. I warn you now, promises can not deceive and will not satisfy the man behind the plow. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR].

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have given a good deal of careful thought to the question of farm relief. I have considered this bill with the other members of the committee and we have given it, I believe, the most painstaking, industrious study and dissection that any bill could have.

I take a somewhat different position from some of the other members of the committee. I do not believe that this bill is the best bill that the Congress could enact, but I will say it is the judgment of the majority of the committee that it is the best we can pass, and consequently I am for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the farmers of the United States are passing through the most serious financial crisis in the history of the country. The serious plight of the farmers is not confined to any one State but seems to affect agriculture everywhere. The worst conditions are to be found in the Great Plains region west of the Mississippi River, extending from Canada to the Gulf, heretofore one of the most prosperous sections of the Nation. There bankruptcy and failure run rampant. Over 430 bank failures have been reported out there in the past seven months. Innumerable business disasters have occurred, and practically one-fourth of the farmers have become insolvent and have lost their farms. This condition in perhaps a lesser degree prevails in all parts of the country where farming is the principal industry.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LARSON] has said that the disaster has been overstated. I wonder if any of you read in the newspapers a week ago that the Capital National Bank, of St. Paul, a $5,000,000 institution, had closed its doors. That did not seem like a shoestring institution.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I yield.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The Capital Trust Co. closed its doors——

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Capital Trust Co.; yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. And the bank sold out to another institution.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes; it was the Capital Trust Co. and not the Capital National Bank.

LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND

We are told that this condition is brought about by the natural workings of economic law. If this be true, is it not strange that the farmers should be the ones most hurt? There has been no cessation on the part of the farmers in their production. They have been quite as industrious since the war as before. In fact, the volume of food crops raised the past four years has been up to the general average. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that the wealth of the Nation has increased, the producers are getting poorer and poorer in the process. Other industries have not suffered in a like manner with agriculture, and there is a reason for this.

Economic laws work naturally when left to their free play. Supply and demand rule prices if not interfered with by tariffs and other legislative devices. But in the highly complex condition of modern civilization the natural laws have been superseded by trade rules and agreements. Highly organized business units have changed the natural basis of trade and exchange to the advantage of those strong enough to control the means of barter. The organized unit or corporation always gains over the unorganized individual.

FIXED PRICE ON WHEAT DURING WAR

The condition complained of with reference to farmers is not due solely to natural causes. We find that during the war many legislative acts contributed to put the farmer at a disadvantage. In the first place, the farmer—especially the wheat farmer—was the only one asked to deliver his product at a fixed price, in many cases far below the natural market level. At a time when wheat was selling at $3.06 in Chicago, the Grain Corporation fixed a price of $2.20. It is true that at the time the price was fixed it was supposed to represent the minimum price that would be paid for the ensuing crop. Most farmers, and I might add dealers, did not expect that that price would be the maximum price, and in fact would prevail as the only price received for wheat during the full operation of the law creating the Grain Corporation. It proved to be the fixed price for almost three crop years. While wheat was selling abroad for $4 per bushel farmers of the United States were getting but $2.20 on the Chicago market. When freight rates were increased 6 cents a bushel the price was raised to $2.26. It is conservatively estimated that during the three crop years the farmers of this country were paid at least $2,000,000,000 less for their wheat crops than they would normally have brought in the markets of the world. Nor should we forget that the Grain Corporation, through which the wheat was handled, made a profit of some $60,000,000. At the very least, Congress owes consideration to wheat farmers to that extent.

In other words, in order to prosecute the war successfully, the Government commandeered the wheat crop of the United States, and put a price on it at a level of from 70 to 100 per cent below the natural market price of that time. In fact, the Government of the United States not only furnished large sums of money in loans to the Allies, but took from the American wheat grower his wheat and delivered it to the European allies at a price from one to two dollars cheaper than the governments of Europe were paying their own wheat growers, and to the wheat raisers of other parts of the world.

In support of this, I will quote the guaranteed prices fixed by the governments of Europe which were paid to the respective farmers of each nation allied with us during the war. At the time when our maximum guaranteed price for wheat was $2.20 the following-named countries paid:

France	$3.30
Switzerland	3.18
Holland	3.70
Norway	4.09
Italy	4.80

England did not fix a guaranteed price on wheat, but permitted her farmers to sell at the full price and in addition paid them a bonus amounting to approximately $15,000,000 annually on the average for the seven years during which it was continued. Canada organized a wheat pool by the Government and assisted her farmers to get the highest market price paid. This plan was continued for two years after the war. Other governments adopted similar helpful plans. The United States alone, of all the nations engaged in the conflict, played the part of philanthropist—with her farmers bearing the burden. We not only furnished food at less than cost to the Allies, but loaned them the money with which to buy it, no part of which has been repaid. Thus the burden of farm taxation has been made heavier and the farmers further handicapped in their efforts to meet world competition.

At the time the price was fixed on wheat, labor, machinery, and freight rates were much lower than they are now. Since the guaranteed price was put into effect there have been many legislative acts to promote the welfare of other lines of industry. For instance, the Adamson law was passed, increasing the wages of railroad men. We have also the immigration laws which have kept out competitive labor and permitted the organized workers of the entire country to maintain their high standard of wages. The price of farm labor has increased from 50 to 62 per cent; railroad labor about 75 per cent; machinery from 50 to 100 per cent; freight rates from 35 to 45 per cent. The tariff law has been passed, which in turn enables the manufacturer to shut out cheap foreign competition and maintain the domestic prices for his output far above the world price. Freight rates are now, under the transportation act, maintained at a rate, especially on agricultural products, of from 30 to 45 per cent above the pre-war level. And we are told from the reports of 1923 that never in the history of American railroading has there been such a large amount of earnings as in that year.

The Federal reserve act has been an important factor in stabilizing the banking industry. The Government lends its credit to the banks, but even this additional aid has not been sufficient to save many banks which are dependent on agriculture for their support.

All of this legislation to assist various industries has been beneficial, but it seems to me that it has been at the expense of the basic industry—agriculture—from which springs all helpful commerce, and in which all new wealth of the Nation is created. It would seem, therefore, that there is ample precedent for legislation to benefit agriculture. Heretofore, the industry has flourished by reason of the great resources and the development of new fields. The time has arrived when Congress should determine whether or not our Nation will adopt a policy which will permit of a well-defined balance between industry and agriculture. The present trend will stifle agriculture and develop industry.

That will mean that in the future this great Nation will have to look to other lands for its food supply. We can not allow any such condition as that to come to pass. We must adopt a sound policy which will develop all industry, agriculture included, along equal lines. The Nation then becomes sufficient unto itself. By encouraging all lines of endeavor the greatest wealth and the greatest happiness for the people can be promoted.

SUGGESTED REMEDIES

There have been various remedies suggested in this Congress to restore normal conditions among farmers. Because of some of the practices that obtained during the war a very decided prejudice has been created against price fixing. Many Members of Congress and others who have studied the question are opposed to this. I am frank to say that under the present circumstances a definite profitable price for agricultural products is the only thing that will restore agriculture to its pre-war basis. However much we may be opposed to taking such action, in my opinion it is the only immediate means of getting the desired relief.

Several years ago I became convinced that farmers would have to have governmental aid to put them on their feet, and in 1921 I introduced a bill to give them a fair price on their products. I have had such a measure in Congress ever since that date. At that time the friends of agriculture were able to rally almost no support for the proposal that agricultural-relief legislation be enacted, as we were assured that there was no necessity for it, that conditions were improving and would soon right themselves. Since then, as we all know, they have grown steadily worse until they can no longer be ignored by the Congress. It is already too late to save thousands who could have been helped by prompt action on our part at the right time, but we can still by the enactment of legislation do much to check the course of agricultural disaster and restore national prosperity.

Some have suggested that the tariff on manufactured articles be reduced; others that there be a graduated decrease in freight rates. Reductions in the prices of farm machinery and a reduction in labor costs have been urged. Some advocate increased credits to farmers. No doubt all would be helpful, but to attempt to put them all into operation would be most disastrous to the economic welfare of the Nation. When farmers remember that 75 per cent of their market is found among our industrial workers they can readily understand that to curtail the purchasing power of city workers would reflect injury upon agriculture as well. It is very evident that the price of agricultural products must go up or all other prices must come down. Inasmuch as it is not practicable, at this time at least, to set in motion remedies which might injure the prosperity of the manufacturing industries, we must devise a means of raising agricultural prices to a plane of equal prosperity. I might add that it would not solve the problem to reduce transportation rates alone, as that would afford but a small measure of relief.

M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

Of the various relief proposals before the Committee on Agriculture during a period of many months the McNary-Haugen bill was finally reported out by a majority of the committee. The committee has worked for four months on this bill, and has been in almost daily session since last December. We have rewritten all of the measure four times, and parts of it as many as seven times, in order to perfect it and to overcome the legitimate objections raised against it. I believe it is the most carefully prepared piece of legislation ever presented to this House, and if all economic criticism is not satisfactorily met it is because of the stupendous magnitude of the problem with which we have to deal. It is, however, generally conceded by the friends of this legislation that as a result of the work put upon it by the House Committee on Agriculture it is a much better bill than when originally introduced. As a matter of fact, its sponsor in the Senate, Senator McNary, recognized this, and asked that the Senate cease from further consideration of the original bill, substituting the improved House bill therefor.

The McNary-Haugen bill, now under consideration, contemplates no changes in the marketing machinery or agencies already set up. It merely attempts to raise the domestic price by withholding or withdrawing the surplus product which seeks its market on a world level of prices, and prorates the loss that may occur from the sale of that surplus upon the domestic output equally. I do not believe that it is the best remedy suggested. I do not think that it touches at the fundamentals in the problem of marketing. The agricultural inquiry commission, which held exhaustive hearings and published a report two years ago, found, among other things, that the cost of distribution was too expensive in the United States, and was one of the chief causes of low prices to the farmer. In its report, the commission stated that out of every dollar paid by the consumer the farmer received but 36 cents, the balance being charges and profits taken by the middlemen. That in itself is a serious indictment of our present distributing machinery. No other country in the world is so extravagant in its distribution. Consumers pay enough, and too much, but the middlemen reap the profit. Expressed in other terms, it can be said that in 1922 the consumers of the Nation paid $22,500,000,000 for their food products. The farmers received for these same products but $7,500,000,000, leaving $15,000,000,000, which represented the cost of distribution. In other words, it costs $2 to distribute $1 worth of food products. Manifestly, there is something wrong with such a system, and agriculture can not be placed on a permanent paying basis until it is corrected. To finally solve the question of marketing, which has always been the problem with agriculture, we must strike at this fundamental and try to shorten the spread between producer and consumer. Never, until that service can be performed at cost, will the farmer's marketing problem be solved.

The Norris-Sinclair bill, favorably reported in the last Congress by both Senate and House Agricultural Committees, and reintroduced in the present Congress, has for its avowed object the shortening of the spread between producers and consumers by the elimination of the enormous profits of middlemen. It is the only bill before Congress which aims at a better system of marketing and distribution, and if enacted into law it would make of cooperative marketing in this country the success that it has had in other lands. I am convinced that eventually we will have to pass some such measure as this to establish agriculture upon a permanently prosperous basis. However, it is the judgment of the committee that the McNary-Haugen bill offers the most immediate remedy in the present crisis.

The McNary-Haugen bill does not attempt to solve the marketing problem. Consequently, as I said before, it is not fundamental in its operation. It is but temporary in its relief. There are those who take the view that the bill would be unworkable and that its effect would be to pyramid the cost to the consumer. In some commodities covered by the bill I believe that is true. However, I am not concerned about all the commodities mentioned therein. I am here to speak for my constituents, who are wheat growers and who depend on that product as their chief crop.

EFFECT UPON WHEAT

So far as wheat is concerned, I think that the bill will be extremely helpful. I have no doubt but that it will result in a much better price for the wheat crop of the country. I am confident that the price of wheat can be greatly increased without necessarily increasing the price of bread. Our committee has had ample testimony to show that the average 10-cent loaf of bread which is sold throughout the country contains flour for which the wheat raiser received but 1½ cents. If 50 per cent were added to the price of wheat, the flour in the average 10-cent loaf of bread would not cost more than 2 cents. That increase can be fully absorbed by the middleman, and the price to the wheat grower raised to somewhere near the cost of production. If the legislation does only this one thing—increase the price of wheat to somewhere near the cost of production—it will be well worth enactment.

I realize that there are some who say that the hog grower and cattleman are in equally hard circumstances. However, the difficulties in handling or marketing meat and meat products are a hundred times greater than those of wheat. Marketing and handling wheat is a comparatively simple process. Much of the surplus can be and is exported in the raw state. This is not true of hogs and cattle. Practically all of our livestock is slaughtered, and none of the surplus is exported except in a manufactured state. I would suggest, therefore, that the operation of the law be confined to wheat at the start until the machinery can be set up and a sufficient knowledge gained to deal successfully with other commodities.

WILL AN INCREASED PRICE RESULT IN OVERPRODUCTION?

It has been contended that if the farmer gets a fair or increased price for his wheat the result will be a greatly stimulated production. This would have the effect to negative any advantage gained by this legislation. I can not agree that there would be overproduction. During the war, despite the great patriotic urge, and with every known agency of propaganda used, the total wheat production never equaled the 1915 crop, which was over 1,000,000,000 bushels. The average pre-war acreage of wheat was approximately 50,000,000 acres for the entire country. From 1914 to 1919 the acreage planted gradually increased each year until it reached the peak, in 1919, of 76,000,000 acres. In bushels of wheat the increase was from 690,000,000 bushels, the five-year pre-war average, to 945,000,000 in 1919. Since then, because of the reduced price, a gradually decreased acreage planted has resulted. Last year, 1923, only 58,000,000 acres of wheat were sown, and the production amounted to 786,000,000 bushels. It will be seen that the increased acreage during the war was due to the great public sentiment created by Government and private agencies working together in a patriotic cause. No such conditions will obtain during the life of this bill. There will be a substantial increase in price from 30 to 50 cents per bushel, but that, under existing conditions, will not be above the cost of production, and can not result in any great stimulation of the acreage planted.

In fact, it is more than probable that the decrease in planting, because of the deplorable condition in which farmers find themselves, can not be arrested for a period of at least five years, the time provided for the operation of the law. Farmers in large numbers have been driven off the land, and thousands of acres are left vacant. The movement from farm to city has precluded the possibility of immediate increased production. In addition, the marginal wheat areas of the Central States, which planted wheat during the war, have returned to other crops, and will not be induced to venture into the raising of that cereal again for many years to come.

The slow turnover in farming will also prevent any great increase in production. The forces set in motion resulting in any trend in farming are not quickly overcome. It will take years to arrest the present tendency to decrease wheat production. Unless higher prices prevail this will continue until the danger point is reached. Cheap wheat lands are no longer readily available to come under the plow. The chief factors in bringing about a normal production, we can only hope, are improved tillage and climatic conditions. No one would want to advocate such a crop reduction brought about by disastrous economic forces that would reduce the national food supply below the normal wants of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

FARM-MORTGAGE INDEBTEDNESS AND HIGH TAXES

Mr. SINCLAIR. A further reason why farmers can not continue to operate on the pre-war level of prices is the fact that the farm-mortgage indebtedness has almost doubled since 1914. According to the United States census of January 1, 1920, the total farm-mortgage indebtedness of the Nation amounted to $7,857,700,000. Nearly one-half of this amount, or $3,199,690,000, is in the west north-central group of States—Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas—the great wheat, corn, and hog raising section of the country. There is no doubt but that this indebtedness has been augmented since 1920. Taxes upon farm lands have also increased over 100 per cent more than the pre-war period.

In 1914 the property tax of the United States amounted to about $344,000,000. In 1922 it was approximately $797,000,000. This places upon farmers a heavy additional burden of fixed charges of taxes and interest, at least 100 per cent more than they paid during the pre-war 10-year average.

The price of the wheat crop of last year is about equal in dollars to the pre-war wheat crop value. Yet the taxes and interest on the land which produced this crop have about doubled. It is absolutely unjust to expect farmers to pay off this load of debt and taxes on the basis of pre-war prices for wheat. Much of this debt, in fact all of the increased debt, has been contracted in the past five years when the dollar would not buy much more than half what it would before that time. In other words, the debts were contracted under an all-commodity index price of 100 per cent advance. The effect, under present prices, upon the farmer is that he received 50 cents for his $1 of debt, and must now pay it out at its full face value.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF LEGISLATION WILL BENEFIT ALL INDUSTRY

It has been stated that this is purely class legislation. That is, it is for the relief of farmers and agriculture alone. Even if this were true, which it is not, farmers are as much entitled to legislative aid as are other lines of industry which have already had it, as previously stated. However, while the legislation will directly give first aid to farmers it will benefit all business. It is a fact that farmers consume about 40 per cent of the manufactured products of the United States. They are the best customers of all industry. If you cripple their purchasing power, which lessens their consumptive power, you have injured all business. The prosperity of agriculture affects all workers and business men. Consequently, it should be to the interests of every branch of industry to favor any legislation that will tend to restore agriculture to a normal basis.

The American farmer has not been organized to market his product as have all other industries. The steel business, the textile business, the coal business, as well as all lines of manufacture, are highly organized and unified. They have a sales agency which controls the output and to a large extent names the price at which their product shall be sold. Agriculture alone has to ask the consumer, "What will you pay?"

The price for the farmer is set by someone else, not by him. It is not surprising, therefore, that he has to accept a proportionately lower price than anyone else. The marketing corporation set up by this legislation will form a great unified sales agency for agricultural products. It can be used as the nucleus for future development of cooperative organizations of farmers. We all realize that cooperation of producers and consumers must eventually and permanently solve the evils of our present expensive marketing system. While the proposed bill is primarily an emergency measure, its powers are broad, and the corporation established will be able to name a price on farm products which will give the farmer cost of production and a profit. With this lift he can hope to get square with the world once more, work his way out of the mire of debt now engulfing him, and again become one of the best customers of manufacture. Thus, not only farmers but manufacturers, merchants, business men, bankers, and all others will benefit. I hold it to be the most important duty this Congress can perform for the whole Nation to enact agricultural relief legislation, and to do it now.

Unless something of this kind is done we are going to see the worst times that the United States has ever experienced. This is a problem that interests everybody, and it is a problem that is going to reach out and affect New England before very long and all of the manufacturing States. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it ought not to require argument to induce Congress to grant the relief to agriculture proposed in the McNary-Haugen bill. It is difficult to demonstrate a proposition that is self-evident. But we are compelled to recognize the fact that there are those who oppose this measure, and not only do they oppose this measure; they are opposed to any legislation that will bring any substantial relief to agriculture. I regret that any Member of this House should take that attitude, but I am amazed to find that some of the opponents of this bill come from agricultural districts. I appreciate the fact that we are all more or less influenced by selfish interest and that we are frequently restricted in our views and activities to the things that affect us most intimately, and I fear that sometimes the solicitude for the purely local interest blinds us to the opportunity for larger service not only to our own localities but to the country as a whole.

Our people as a nation are so interrelated politically, socially, and economically that no class of our citizenship can be reduced to a state of abject poverty without a reaction therefrom to the detriment of the whole people. Such a condition is now being created and in a large measure already exists among the farming classes producing the staple food products of the country. It can not be possible that the membership of this House is not informed of the necessitous condition of our farmers. Shortly after the close of the war the financial powers decreed that the farmer should be deflated, and the result was that within a year and a half the value of farm products was reduced from $14,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. This deflation policy did not embrace the entire economic structure of the country, but the farmer was singled out as the arch victim of that economic crime. He was literally robbed of more than 50 per cent of the value of his crop productions. The scales of economic balance were tipped against him, and he has not been able to regain that balance. For all his crops carrying an exportable surplus his prices were suddenly reduced to the level of the demoralized European markets less the cost of transportation to those markets, and in addition to the high prices paid for labor in the production of his crops he was compelled to buy his merchandise and equipment in the protected markets of the United States. The manufacturing industries were protected, labor was protected, and transportation was protected, but agriculture was left unprotected. What is the result? Manufacturing is prosperous, transportation is prosperous, labor is receiving good wages, and agriculture is bankrupt. Everyone knows and concedes these facts. To contend that the distress of agriculture is not due to discriminations against it through the protective legislation of this Government is to impeach either one's intelligence or his sincerity.

The soul and heart of the legislation offered in this bill is the proposition to give to the farmer a square deal. Is the temper of this House such as to listen to a plea of simple justice for him? You have set up a standard of artificial economics under the protective policy of this Government for every class of industry and enterprise except that of agriculture. This Government is committed to the policy of industrial protection, in one degree or another. Any tariff policy other than that of free trade is protective. I am not advocating and do not anticipate the establishment of a free-trade policy for this Government; but I insist that in the prosecution of the policy of protection it is not fair, it is not just, and it it not honest to confer that benefit upon certain classes of industry and persons to the discrimination and disadvantage of others. The people of this Nation did not establish our Government and invest it with legislative and administrative powers with the intent or any idea that the manufacturing industries, the railroad corporations, or any class of individuals should have a preferred right to governmental economic advantage. Such an advantage is perversive of the will of the people, the power of the Government, and the spirit of the Constitution.

The policy of protection must be based on the dead level of honesty and give to agriculture the same degree of protection that other industries enjoy. Protect everybody or protect nobody. [Applause.] Give every industry and every individual a square deal with special privileges to none.

The farmer is not asking any special favor; he is merely asking to be restored to his right to an equal opportunity, the right of which he was deprived when every industry except agriculture was placed under the economic protection of the Government. He is not asking that some one else be deprived of a right that he may be favored, but is simply demanding that his own right be restored to him.

The banker has facilities for privilege and protection through the Federal reserve system; the manufacturing industries have protection through the levy of duties on importations of manufactured products; the railroads have protection through the Esch-Cummins Act; labor has protection through the Adamson law, the restriction of immigration, and through the strength of its organizations. But the farmer has no protection through governmental intervention and has been unable to effect organizations of sufficient comprehensiveness and solidarity to emulate in his own behalf the accomplishments of labor through its organization. But labor has not through organization alone been able to secure and hold the advantages it has obtained. Protective laws have been enacted in its behalf to aid and make possible of attainment the purpose of organization of labor, and it may be well to remember also that such protective laws were enacted because, and only because, labor through organization was strong enough to force such action on the part of Congress. Nor can agriculture through organization and cooperation alone secure the relief necessary to its protection. It must have legislative assistance in the form of protection.

This protection can not be afforded solely by a tariff duty on importations of agricultural products of which we produce an exportable surplus. It would be a waste of time to set forth the reasons why this can not be done, when it is universally recognized that as to such products the export markets determine the price both at home and abroad. Agriculture must have a protected domestic market to place it on the same economic basis enjoyed by other protected industries. It has never had a square deal in the law-made economic scheme of this country.

In this great Nation, founded on and to secure principles of justice and equal opportunity to all men and all classes of legitimate enterprise, the hardest thing to accomplish and maintain is industrial and economic justice.

We are face to face with the plain proposition that to secure for any class of industry or any class of individuals its economic rights the demand therefor must be supported by sufficient political strength to enforce the demand.

A great advance was made in the progress of civilization when this Government was established. It was the crystallization of the thought and spirit of the American people at the time and it is the crystallization of the thought and spirit of the American people to-day. The fault is not in the Government, but in the perversion of its powers. The powers of our Government are only such as the people as a nation delegate to it. Both the Government and its powers belong to the people and constitute a political instrumentality designed and intended to serve impartially the highest interests of all the people. The national power is the life of the Government, and its only source of life. Without this power there can be no Government.

Government, concretely stated, is but the method or means through which the power of the people is harnessed, centralized, controlled, and applied. The only proper application of this power is to the service of the public good without discrimination in favor of one class of citizens as against another. If this power were so applied, we would not find the economic system of the country out of balance as it is to-day. The whole difficulty is the result of the perversion and exploitation of the power of the people for private gain and advantage by directing such power against the people as a whole and thereby using the people's power to destroy their rights instead of preserving them. We are not to lose sight of the fact that it is the power of the people that is being used and directed at all times in the administration of the Government, regardless of whether the Government is being rightly or wrongly administered. Whatever is done through the governmental agency is done through the strength of the power of the people. There is no other governmental force.

If governmental functions are being exercised to the prejudice or destruction of the people's rights, the power that is employed for so doing is the people's own power. There can be a perversion of this power but no substitution for it in governmental affairs. The people always furnish the power, but private interests can direct the control and application of the power, and that is what is being done to-day. The power of government has been controlled in the interest of private enterprise since the early history of our Government, as a result of which there has been established in this country an artificial system of national economics founded on the protective tariff policy, which in plain language is a system of legalized robbery enabling certain classes of persons to exploit and rob the whole people. It is immoral in principle, unjust in design, and destructive of the economic freedom of the individual.

This policy was inaugurated to build up the manufacturing industries on a cost-plus basis that levies tribute on every consumer of the country for the enrichment of such protected industries. The protective tariff policy was first demanded and sought to be justified on the ground that it was necessary to enable our infant industries to gain sufficient strength to compete in manufacturing and commerce with established institutions; but when in the course of time the plea of infancy could no longer find basis in fact, the protective system was continued and sought to be justified on the ground that it was necessary in order to insure a high wage scale which our standards of living required for labor. In other words, the argument for the protective tariff abandoned the infancy plea and took for its basis the necessity of the protection of labor. Labor, however, was given no guaranties in any tariff law ever written and has always been compelled, in order to receive a just and reasonable wage, to resort to demands backed by the force of organization. The protected industries after securing protective legislation seek to employ labor in the competitive markets of the world and to pay only such wages as shall be determined by the free operation of the law of supply and demand in the labor markets. With such purpose in view, these favored industries oppose restrictions of immigration and advocate the open shop.

But labor has organized and through its organized efforts is compelling a recognition of its rights in the matter of wages, hours of labor, and conditions under which to work. Labor is thus rendering a service to the great unorganized and unprotected masses of the people by interposing the only effective obstacle to the progress of capital in its designs to fasten the yoke of economic slavery upon the necks of the plain people. But in compelling recognition of its power organized labor has received protection in the restriction of immigration, has procured the enactment of the Adamson eight-hour law, and has forced great increases in wage scales.

Here, then, are two classes that have secured protective financial advantage through a system of artificial economics, namely, the manufacturing industries and organized labor. The former, through the prestige and influence of wealth; the latter, through the sheer force of numbers and power of organization.

A third factor that has contributed to the economic disadvantage of the whole people is the governmental protection extended to transportation, whereby the railroads are placed in a favored class through the mandate of the Esch-Cummins Act directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to authorize such transportation charges as will produce revenue sufficient to pay cost of operation, interest on indebtedness, and, in addition thereto, a return of 5½ per cent on the value of the invested capital.

The wealth-producing industries of this country are agriculture, mining, and manufacturing. From these sources plus existing natural resources comes all the wealth of the Nation. Commerce begins where production ceases. The products of the farm, the mine, and the factory become the commodities of commerce. Commerce does not operate to produce wealth, but to distribute, exploit, and market it after it is produced. Industry creates wealth; commerce creates profits or losses. Transportation is an instrumentality of commerce. Labor is a factor, both in the production of wealth and in the commerce of wealth, but the wages of labor are fixed by commerce. Industry and commerce are dependent one upon the other. The various classes of industry and also the various characters or phases of the same class of industry have an interdependence that invokes the intervention of commerce.

The costs of production and the distribution and market values of the products of industry are controlled and determined by commerce and not by the producing industries.

Commerce controls the economics of the country, and commerce in turn is the institution of, and is directed by, the dominant financial powers that control the securities and credits of the country. These powerful financial interests, sometimes for convenience designated as "big business" and "Wall Street," through political subservience to their demands, have gained control of the administrative policies of the Federal reserve bank system and have perverted it to their service in their cold-blooded design to reap the profits of all industry and to bring under their economic control the producers of all wealth. These powerful financial interests either own or control, or both, the manufacturing industries and the transportation systems of the country. They are directly financially interested in the prosperity of these enterprises, and through their dominance and dictatorial powers in politics and economics they have forced the Government of the people to underwrite their financial investments and to secure them not merely against loss, but to insure them great profits through protective legislation at the expense of the whole people. They are using the people's Government to extort from the people a constant and generous flow of financial tribute into the coffers of the big interests.

These financial powers are not interested in the protection of labor and they are not interested in the protection of the agricultural industry. They are not concerned with the distress of the farmer except as to the political aspects that might develop from his desperation. They are in control of the Government policies now and are satisfied with those policies and the existing conditions. It brings no pain to their consciences or appeal to their hearts to be told of the ruin and wreck of the homes, the fortunes, and the hopes of the farmers whose progress has been blocked and whose profits have been turned into losses because of the unjust, heartless, and impossible economic conditions imposed upon them in order that the greatest possible portion of the wealth of the Nation may continue to flow unimpeded into the coffers of the masters of finance.

Is this Congress—is this administration—are the people of this Nation going to permit the farmer to be sacrificed on the altar of special privilege? If so, it will be the beginning of the end of agriculture as an industrial occupation of free men and will mark the beginning of the decadence of that great basic industry toward the depths of a servile subordination intolerable to contemplate. It will mean the reduction of landlords to tenants, or else the abandonment of farms to idleness and unproduction. It will mean that millions of homes of America's most sturdy, virile, and liberty-loving manhood will be converted into hovels of an agricultural peasantry and that the sovereigns of the soil will give place to the peons of poverty. The last vestige of economic freedom will pass from our agrarian population when the Molochs of avarice become the country's masters. It will mean the passing from reality to romance of the boasted ideals that constituted the fundamental social structure and political security upon which this Nation was established and which have sustained it to the present time.

This is the fate that impends as to agriculture and 40,000,000 of our people directly dependent upon it. Inaction on the part of Congress in this crisis will be inexcusable. The farmer can not solve his problem unaided by remedial legislation. He did not create and can not control the conditions under which he is helplessly struggling. They are, in the main, the direct results of protective legislation by Congress which left the farmer out of the protective scheme. He now appeals to the author of his undoing for a belated correction of the injustice done him. He can not continue without relief.

I speak advisedly. For 20 years I have lived in Douglas County, in the State of Washington, in the midst of rich agricultural lands and good farmers. During all that time I have been an interested observer in close contact with the agricultural industry. I know the conditions of agriculture and of the farmers generally not only in my own district but throughout the great Northwest. The conditions in my district are typical.

Nature dealt with a lavish hand in the formation of that country and endowed it with such combinations of soil, climate, and altitude as to adapt it to a wide range of agricultural pursuits, abundantly productive. But man-made economic laws are not operating to aid nature's beneficence. Wheat, apples, livestock, and hay are the principal productions in my district. A few years ago the farmers were prosperous and most of them paying income taxes to the Government. Within the past four years their prosperity has vanished; their surplus accumulations have been absorbed by deficits in operating costs; they have been forced deeper and deeper into debt in their efforts to stem the adverse conditions of high cost of transportation, of labor, of merchandise and equipment, and ruinously low prices for their products. Not only have their surpluses been exhausted, but their capital investments have been either dissipated entirely or deeply impaired and depleted. Instead of prosperity, bankruptcy now is the prevailing condition. This result has followed not because of short crops but solely because of inadequacy of prices to meet cost of production. Last year Lincoln County, which has the largest wheat-producing area of any county in my district, had a bountiful wheat crop and I think as large a yield as it can reasonably expect to produce in any single year, and yet I did not find one farmer in that whole county who exhibited the least enthusiasm over his abundant crop or that claimed he got cost of production out of it.

It is difficult for one who has not actually been on the ground and seen the situation himself to understand fully the exceedingly distressful condition of the wheat farmers. There is no inducement to exaggerate the seriousness of the situation prevailing among them, for the actual situation taxes one's faculties to adequately portray it. Farmers are daily throwing up their hands in despair and quitting their farms and mortgage-ridden personal property; many are being foreclosed, still more are making voluntary assignments and others are seeking relief from their burdens of debt through bankruptcy proceedings. Men are literally walking out and away from their farms, moneyless, scantily clad, the accumulations of a lifetime lost, with families to support and destitution to face. They are desperate; they are not in a good humor toward a Government that will permit such economic conditions to exist. Mortgage holders, the banks, and merchants who have extended credit are left the disheartening prospect of realizing little or nothing from a sale of the abandoned property or the alternative of taking it over and operating it at a loss.

This condition was distressfully acute last year. It was evident early in the year that, unless some relief that would insure a larger price for wheat than that prevailing were provided, increased losses to the wheat farmer would inevitably follow. Fully appreciating the seriousness of the situation, a number of Members of Congress and others wired and wrote and otherwise importuned the President to call an extra session of Congress to relieve temporarily the distress of the wheat farmer by legislation authorizing a guaranteed price that would cover cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

The President refused to call the extra session, and the farmer got no relief from losses on last year's crop. I thought then, and I still think, the President should have acted as he was requested and urged to do. I advocated last fall in my campaign for Congress a guaranteed fixed price of $1.75 a bushel for wheat as an emergency measure. The farmer was entitled to that relief to tide him over the emergency until Congress could work out a more satisfactory solution of his economic difficulty. This proposition of $1.75 for wheat was in line with the bill introduced by Senator GOODING, of Idaho, in the Sixty-seventh Congress and again at the present session of Congress. I did not propose such guaranty as a permanent solution of the wheat farmer's difficulty and I invariably stated in my speeches during the campaign that it was not an economically sound proposition, but that it was just as economically sound as the protective tariff and guaranteed rates to the railroads, and it is. Senator GOODING, as I understand it, is not pressing his guaranteed price bill this year, but, as I am informed, is lending his support to the McNary-Haugen bill.

I think the McNary-Haugen bill is to be much preferred over a flat price-fixing measure. I sat in conference with the framers of the export corporation measure, afterwards known as the McNary-Haugen bill, before it was put into final form and introduced. I have kept in touch with it ever since; I believe it is in economic harmony with the protective system of this Government. I have worked for its advancement incessantly since its introduction. I sincerely trust that it may pass and become law. If it should fail to pass, I say to you frankly, I hate to contemplate the fate that awaits the wheat farmers of this Nation.

If it is impossible to pass the McNary-Haugen bill, I am ready to vote and work for the next best farm-relief measure whether it be a guaranteed price for wheat, the Norris-Sinclair bill, or some other measure. I am ready to work and vote for any measure that will offer substantial relief to the farmer in this emergency, and I will not quibble over or stand back on economic ethics, theories, or policies in so doing. The crisis is grave, the country's welfare is at stake; the happiness, prospects, and hopes of my neighbors, friends, and constituents are jeopardized. The people of the fifth district of Washington are my clients in the presentation of this plea to the House of Congress for the passage of this bill, and more than that, it is my responsibility and pleasure to place at their service my every faculty and power to promote their success and prosperity.

The great burden of my heart is the distress of the farmers throughout the wheat-growing sections of the country. I have received hundreds upon hundreds of letters, resolutions, and petitions setting forth the great and pressing need for relief and appealing for quick action on the part of Congress.

I shall not burden the RECORD unduly with these communications, but I want to read the following two letters I received, which set forth graphically the conditions prevailing in my home county and which are typical of the situation throughout my district:

WATERVILLE, WASH., April 22, 1924.

Hon. SAM B. HILL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: For the past six years I have been acting as county agent for Douglas County, Wash., which comprises one of the very good wheat sections of the Big Bend region, and have had an opportunity to study farm practices, and have been brought in close touch with the circumstances of farmers.

During the period extending from 1905 to 1916 farmers of eastern Washington were relatively prosperous and built up their homes and community interests; business during this period was sound and there was every indication that healthy development would continue as a reward to the industrious efforts of our agricultural people. Beginning with 1917 farmers began to go in debt, and each year since that time has brought the farmer into more unfavorable circumstances until we now face the position of absolute bankruptcy.

That you may more fully appreciate conditions which exist throughout the Washington wheat-growing sections, I am offering for your consideration the following data applying to Douglas County:

"Five banks out of six have failed in the last two and one-half years; three banks failed during 1923.

"Mortgage foreclosure sales, 1923, $676,000, involving 26,006 acres.

"Mortgage foreclosure sales, 1924, to April 1, $152,000, involving 10,000 acres.

"Voluntary assignments, 1923, approximately $300,000.

"Delinquent taxes to date, $450,000."

During the last three years farmers have generally attempted to diversify to the extent that climatic conditions warrant, and while this tendency has been beneficial to the extent of assisting farmers in securing a large share of their living on the farm, it has been altogether insufficient to meet indebtedness incurred on their major crop. As a result of the present deplorable conditions and apparent hopelessness of the future our farmers are very much unsettled and we are rapidly approaching a condition of complete disintegration throughout a large part of the wheat-growing area.

Farmers and business men in the affected area appear to be of one mind concerning the cause of the present difficulties, namely, the unsatisfactory ratio which has existed between the prices of farm products and industrial products which are abolutely essential in the farmers' business. There seems to be complete agreement that the proposed McNary-Haugen bill, which is now receiving the attention of Congress, offers a thoroughly sound, practical, and urgently essential solution of the surplus producers' difficulty. We sincerely hope that you will give this proposed bill your earnest consideration and, in view of the serious emergency now existing, lend your hearty support toward its passage.

Yours very truly,

F. H. ZENTNER,
County Agricultural Agent.

WATERVILLE, WASH., January 25, 1924.

Hon. SAM B. HILL,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SAM: Your recent letter received and was very glad to know there is some prospect of Government help for the agricultural industry. As I see it, help must come at once or this country is bankrupt.

Up in the St. Germain country I have just had three more ranches turned back to me. Two of these were leased ranches and one I had been carrying on a sale contract for several years.

These three men are broke and are leaving the country, going, only God knows whither, they do not.

I have eight ranches on my hands that I can not rent on any terms. The country is depopulating in droves.

Yesterday I talked with Doss Gallaher, from the Buckingham country. He wants to quit and turn over everything he has as part payment on his debts, but the Seattle bank which holds most of his paper is begging him to stay.

They will throw off his interest and advance money for his taxes and living expenses, but Doss says, "What's the use?"

It will mean just more loss every year, and he is advising them to take their loss now and quit.

They are particularly urgent in his case because, as you know, he is a sort of bellwether in his section, and if he quits most of his neighbors will. His is a fair sample of this whole section.

The British at the siege of Lucknow had nothing on these poor devils. They have hung on until they can hang no longer.

Douglas County, once the banner wheat county of the State, is in a pitiable plight; farms deserted, banks broke, merchants broke, and no definite help in sight.

The price of labor is clear to the skies; sacks cost one-fifth of the price of the wheat; machinery so high no man can buy it; the old machinery about gone.

Taken up one side and down the other, it is a real pleasant prospect. Not the least serious side of the case is the fact that these conditions are breeding bitterness against the existing order and contempt for our Government and its laws. A short time ago I started after a man who had sold some of my mortgaged wheat. I told him such a report had reached me, but I could hardly credit it, and asked him if he had done so. His answer was "Yes, by God, I did. Neither my wife nor my children had any underclothes or any other clothes, nor had we proper food for winter. What are you going to do about it?"

I did just what you would have done. I told him to keep it.

Sam, a certain knowledge that wheat will bring a decent price here next fall will keep part of these men hanging on until that time; nothing else under God's heaven will.

If Congress can help us, they will be criminals if they do not.

With best regards to both of you, I am

Very truly,

M. B. HOWE.

Upon my intimate acquaintance with the men who wrote these letters, I vouch for every statement they contain.

What is the remedy to correct the troubles of agriculture? In order to prescribe a remedy, the trouble must first be diagnosed.

The difficulty under which the wheat farmer is laboring, together with the producers of livestock, is inadequacy of price to make his farming operations profitable. The cause of the inadequacy of such price lies in the fact that the principal factors which enter into the costs of farm production must be paid for at the high cost level to which they are inflated by the protection given them within the United States, and that such farm products must be sold both in the domestic and foreign markets on the basis of their export price. The export price is determined by an unprotected world market in which the surplus products of all countries are in competition.

The clear recognition of the fact that domestic price depends upon export price is one of the fundamental principles that must be faced in any attempt to give farm relief. (Report McNary-Haugen bill, p. 26.)

The remedy, then, is to place agriculture on the same basis of protection as that upon which the protected markets within the United States rest. This can only be accomplished by—separating the export surplus from the total domestic crop and selling it in the world market at the world price and by disposing of the domestic part at a domestic price on a parity with other commodities.

The McNary-Haugen bill proposes such a remedy.

The tariff protects domestic products against competition with imported products within the United States. But it can not protect a domestic product when competing in world markets with other products. The protective tariff is directed toward one problem; the McNary-Haugen bill is directed toward the other. The farmers seek, and this legislation seeks to give them, an instrumentality that will effectuate tariff protection for them just as the general schedule of tariff duties protects manufactured articles. (Report McNary-Haugen bill, p. 30.)

The specific object and result to be attained by this bill is to separate or withdraw the domestic market of certain specified agricultural products from the controlling and determinative influences thereon of the export or world market and to stabilize such domestic market on a price level which will restore to such agricultural products an exchange value approximately equal to the average of the exchange values of other commodities of commerce in the domestic market.

By segregating the exportable surplus of such products from the quantity thereof required for domestic use and consumption and by selling such surplus as a segregated entity in the export market, the domestic market can be made protective for the benefit of the remainder of such products. Such a plan presents the only method, aside from a guaranteed fixed-price plan, of bringing agricultural products under the protective policy of the Government.

The method proposed in the McNary-Haugen bill to extend to agriculture the protective policy of the Government is, briefly stated, as follows:

(1) To create a governmental corporate marketing agency, designated as the United States agricultural export corporation, with a capital stock owned exclusively by the Government.

(2) To authorize such corporation to go into the domestic market and buy quantities of any basic farm commodity as to which an emergency has been officially declared to exist, at a price which will give to such commodity an exchange value compared with other commodities equal to that which it had during a representative period prior to the World War.

(3) To sell the quantity thus purchased by the corporation, which would constitute the exportable surplus, at the best price obtainable in the world market.

(4) To assess against the producers the administrative expenses of the corporation and the loss sustained by the corporation in selling the exportable surplus at the world-price level.

(5) To protect from foreign competition the domestic price for any such basic farm commodity by an adequate import duty.

(6) To return to the Federal Treasury all funds advanced by the Government for the purchase of the capital stock of the corporation.

This Nation can not exist without agriculture. Agriculture can not survive except on a self-sustaining basis. It is not on a self-sustaining basis now. If the consuming public is not willing to extend to the food-producing industry the protection it requires to enable it to operate at its present capacity on a basis of cost plus a reasonable profit, on the theory that such protection would advance the cost of food, the consumers deserve the fate that will await them when the cruel conditions of bankruptcy shall have driven the farmers to seek other means of livelihood and food production is thereby reduced below the level required to feed the people of this Nation. The shortsightedness of selfishness supplies the only explanation for opposing relief to the farmer. The truism that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" holds good for all time. The laborer in this instance is the farmer and he is not receiving his just hire, but is demanding it. He is asking the Government to supply the machinery for the protection of his industry and to operate it at his expense. He proposes to repay the Government the money to be advanced by it and to pay all costs and losses incurred in executing the plan proposed for his protection under this measure. No such burden is imposed on other protected industries.

The Government stands to lose nothing through this proposed legislation, but it is shown the way and opportunity to rescue its basic industry from the collapse of financial ruin.

Much hostility has been voiced against the McNary-Haugen bill. A little of this has come from sincere friends of the farmer, but in the main it has come through the channels of an organized propaganda, inspired and directed by those whose profitable business has been to prey upon the production of agriculture and who are not now, and never were, favorable to any plan that would aid the farmer to reap the harvest of his labor.

Many objections have been interposed against the bill, all under the pretense of friendly criticism in the interest of the farmer. It is urged that the plan proposed is communistic, unconstitutional, unworkable, uneconomic, and otherwise numerously objectionable. But while the objectors may have deceived themselves or been deceived, they have not misled the farmer. Never before in the history of the Government have the farming classes shown such unanimity in the advocacy of a measure for the relief of agriculture as exists toward the present bill. For years they have endured their economic ills with a patience born of hope that they might be able to work out their problems through voluntary cooperative organizations, but the conditions of agriculture have steadily grown worse and their burdens greater. Patience is exhausted through hope deferred. And now the farmer has turned to Congress in his straits of desperation and demands legislative aid for his relief.

The McNary-Haugen bill presents an appeal for justice—not favoritism—for the farmer. This appeal must be heeded and decided on its merits. There can be no dodging of the issue. The farmers have been victimized through unjust legislative discriminations, and they are now demanding the correction of this economic evil. They have been crushed to the point of desperation. They are pleading for, demanding, and expecting relief from this Congress at this session. Election day next November will be fruitful of disappointment to any political party or any Member of Congress that fails now to use its or his best efforts to secure the relief demanded in the interest of agriculture. It is not a partisan question from the standpoint of the farmer and it is not a partisan question from the standpoint of Congress. Any effort to make it such or to so regard it, and any circumstances which would tend to lend a partisan color thereto, will be readily sensed and resented by the farmer, as they should be. The farmer knows the difficulties that beset him and he knows the remedy for those difficulties, and that remedy lies in the enactment of the McNary-Haugen bill. Will you give it to him? That is what he wants to know and that is all he wants to know at this time. He wants an answer now in the form of legislation. Too long and in vain has he waited for Congress to find and initiate a basic remedy to correct the artificial economic disadvantages imposed upon him, which measured by every moral test constitute an economic crime against him. The farmer, through the strong incentive of self-preservation, has surveyed the broad field of political and industrial economics and has found his location and status therein. He found that agriculture, with a few exceptions, is still operating under the natural law of supply and demand, with the prices of its products controlled and determined by the open and unprotected world markets, while the costs of its products are artificially inflated, controlled, and determined by domestic legislative protection. In other words, the farmer buys and produces on the basis of a noncompetitive, protected domestic market, and sells his products on the basis of a competitive, unprotected world market. The economic discrimination against him is obvious. It is also artificial, having its origin and creation in discriminating protective legislation. The remedy the farmer seeks is the correction of this inequity, and the remedy is presented in the McNary-Haugen bill.

The farmer knows what he wants and the remedy that will meet his needs, and he will not be put off by any soporific substitutes, subterfuges, or alibis. He knows that the talk about further extensions of credit, diversification, tariff on products having an exportable surplus, and so forth, is meaningless and barren, except to confuse the issue and to discourage the legislation that will afford him relief. The remedy he seeks is in economic harmony with the protective policy of this Government.

It makes no difference whether the tariff rates are unjustifiably high as they are now, or whether they be fixed on a competitive basis, as they should be, the protective plan proposed in the McNary-Haugen bill will fit into the scheme with perfect harmony and also with justness. Moreover, this plan will automatically adjust itself to harmonize with any changed or modified rates of the tariff system which affect the level of commodity prices. This measure invokes the same principle of protection for agriculture as is applied to other industries and the same degree of protection.

Any tariff schedule, whether it be fixed on the basis for revenue only, a competitive basis, or whether it be primarily designed for protection or monopoly, operates pro tanto as a protection to the industry to which it applies. In one form or another, upon one theory or another, every political party of this country stands for and advocates a tariff policy that protects all domestic industries except the basic industry of agriculture. It is true, then, that this Government is committed to a protective policy and that, too, without regard to the particular political party which may be in control of the Government. Is such a protective policy economically sound? It must be deemed either economically sound or economically necessary, else there can be no justification for the policy and all of our political parties should be condemned for incompetency or unfitness. In any event, we have the protective policy and it operates to the disadvantage and detriment of agriculture. The McNary-Haugen bill would correct this inequity and place agriculture on the same basis with other protected industries. Is there anything unfair, unjust, or unsound in such a scheme? There is not, if agriculture be entitled to the same consideration as other industries. Can anyone deny that it is entitled to such consideration?

It is doubtful whether in the history of our country the agricultural industry has been depressed to such dire straits as now, and that, too, in the midst of conditions of prosperity in all other lines of industry and commerce. We have had so-called panics that have been nation-wide in their paralyzing effects on commerce and industry, affecting impartially all industries, but in such crises it may be said that all manufacturing, producing, financial, and commercial interests shared in the misfortunes of such depression, perhaps not equally or to the same extent, but all were seriously and detrimentally affected.

The equalizing principle of supply and demand artificially uncontrolled is the natural law of economics. Under the operation of this law the labor wage would tend toward and approximate a world level; manufactured commodities and agricultural products of every country would compete in the markets of all countries on a basis of parity considering, of course, differences in quality and costs of transportation, so that the world supply and the world demand would determine the domestic prices in each individual country and would work an equitable adjustment on such basis of the prices of all commodities, whether of manufacture or agriculture, relative to each other.

I am arguing neither for nor against such a free-trade world policy, but endeavoring simply to call attention to conditions that would prevail in the markets everywhere should the natural principle of supply and demand be permitted to operate universally. But if the natural law of supply and demand is to be supplanted by an artificial law of economics under a protective policy, such policy, to be just, must embrace all industries and confer upon all industries alike the benefits of protection.

There are two prime factors that interfere with and prevent the determination of prices by the natural law of supply and demand, namely, governmental protection and private commercial price-fixing combinations, commonly called trusts. We have in this country both governmental protection and price-fixing combinations, and one or both of these factors are operating in this country to increase the prices of practically all of the manufactured products of commerce in our domestic markets above that of the world markets thereof. But neither of these factors, except in a few instances, is operating to increase the price of farm products in our domestic markets above that of such products in the world markets.

Furthermore, the manufacturing plants of this country which have more than a local status in our Nation's commerce are operated under a centralized control of large aggregations of capital, and they can and do so regulate their output or the supply of their manufactured products as to keep them within the limits of the demands therefor. But not so with agriculture. It is an individualized industry, and every natural economic tendency is toward its decentralization, making it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to centralize its control through voluntary cooperation. The enactment of the McNary-Haugen bill will overcome this handicap and disadvantage inhering in the farming industry.

The well-being and perpetuity of a nation depends upon the preservation and maintenance of economic conditions that will secure to all its people the opportunity to reap the just rewards and fruits of their labor and industry. Every citizen and every class of citizens in this country has the God-given and constitutional right to have this Government so administered as to guarantee equal opportunity to all men. The great basic industry of agriculture must be preserved and must be given equal consideration with other industries in the economic policy of governmental protection. The 40,000,000 of our people employed in agriculture must be secured a living return for their labor and enterprise. This country must continue as the home of both political and economic freedom. Sovereignty must not descend to serfdom.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 7 o'clock having arrived, the committee will automatically rise.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9033, the McNary-Haugen bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, we have a lot of committee meetings going on, and we can not be in two places at the same time. We want to hear this debate.

Mr. HAUGEN. And we want to get through with the debate to-morrow, if possible.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will not object; I am the farmer's friend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair may not be able to be here at 11 o'clock to-morrow; and in case he should not be present, he designates the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. TILSON, to act as Speaker pro tempore.

WILLIAM E. BAKER

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged matter and ask for the adoption of the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 325

Whereas certain charges against William E. Baker, United States district judge for the Northern District of West Virginia, have been transmitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Judiciary Committee: Be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they hereby are, authorized and directed to inquire into the official conduct of William E. Baker, United States district judge for the Northern District of West Virginia, and to report to the House whether in their opinion the said William E. Baker has been guilty of any acts which in contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes or misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of this House; and that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to administer the customary oaths to witnesses, and to sit during the sessions of the House until adjournment and thereafter until said inquiry is completed and report to the next session of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that this is a unanimous report.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes. We appointed a subcommittee to examine the papers referred to us. They were quite voluminous. Each one of the subcommittee read them through, and after a conference they thought that the committee ought to take action to further investigate. That is the unanimous action of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Why the necessity for carrying this matter over during the vacation?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Because there will be no opportunity to get it consummated. The examination will go on. The House will not be in session to act upon it.

Mr. BLANTON. Under this resolution this committee can meet anywhere it wants to in the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. It certainly could, but it is not likely that it will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows how some such resolutions have been executed in the past during the vacation of six or seven months.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This involves the investigation of charges against a Federal judge that may or may not constitute the basis of impeachment. I have looked into the matter somewhat, and I think the resolution should pass.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think this investigation ought to be here in Washington?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the only thing I am thinking about.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think that is necessarily true as a matter of economy, even.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought not to be in Seattle.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. There is no likelihood of that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is scarcely possible that the Committee on the Judiciary investigating the charges against a judge in West Virginia would go to Seattle.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, this week—to-morrow, I understand, and the next day—there will be a committee sitting in New York City, the special committee investigating the Shipping Board.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It may be economy for them to do so. It may save money by doing that rather than by summoning witnesses here.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee thinks it is necessary, I will withdraw any objection that I have.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. McSWAIN, for two days, May 23 and 24, on account of public business, the annual visitation to the United States Military Academy.

CAMP JACKSON MILITARY RESERVATION

Mr. McSWAIN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein the following brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the House was considering H. R. 9124 and I proposed an amendment relating to the disposition of a part of the Camp Jackson reservation, at page 9128 of the RECORD, the following colloquy took place:

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on this amendment for the purpose of asking the gentleman if this is not the same bill that was on the Private Calendar on last Friday night, to which objection was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; that is the same bill that was under consideration at that time. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] stated that he wanted more information in respect to it. I am informed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] that he has talked the matter over with the gentleman from Michigan and that he is satisfied.

Mr. FULMER. It is in line with the same bill that passed a few moments ago, having in mind identically the same purpose.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

I am now informed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] that he had not become satisfied about the provisions of the proposed amendment and that I was in error in my statement. He feels, and justly so, that he has been misrepresented. He and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] and myself have talked over the facts and I am now convinced that I drew a conclusion from my conversations with them at different times that now appears was not justified. I regret this exceedingly, and have so expressed myself to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] and to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. ROSENBLOOM, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6357. An act for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6207. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice all that portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation which lies in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8262. An act to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government.

HAUGEN-M'NARY BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a letter from representatives of farm organizations addressed to Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, when one of the St. Louis newspapers came in this morning I was surprised to note in the most conspicuous position on the front page an open letter signed by the representatives of the various farm organizations here in Washington and issued last Monday.

As soon as I read it I called up one of the signers and asked why so important a letter had not been released to the Washington papers. He said it was not only sent to the Washington papers but that they were repeatedly importuned to publish it, and notwithstanding these personal appeals they declined to give it space or even, refer to it.

This letter is a statement signed by the official representatives of the farmers of America, a class comprising one-third of the people of the United States and operating our largest and most indispensable industry, and it outlines their views on one of the most important pieces of legislation which has come before this or any other Congress. They are entitled to be heard. They have the right to present their side of the question, and to have their day in court, and the action of the Washington newspapers in refusing to give them that opportunity is a violation of the ethics of journalism and a reflection on that high calling.

This policy of the Washington newspapers is not merely a matter of local concern. It assumes the proportion of a national menace when the Congress and the President must legislate in an atmosphere devitalized by the deliberate suppression of the news and poisoned by the insidious miasma of propaganda. And if the interests which control these newspapers will permit an observation, I would suggest that they are defeating their own purpose and militating against their own cause by such obtuse and unsportsmanlike partizanship.

This letter merits the careful consideration of the Members of the House. It is authoritative. The official representatives of the farming interests of the Nation announce that after long and exhaustive consideration of all pending and proposed farm legislation they consider the McNary-Haugen bill as best suited to promote the interests of the farmers and the interests of the country at large. They state in emphatic and unmistakable terms that they desire no substitutes; that so far as the farm organizations are concerned they desire the McNary-Haugen bill or nothing.

They speak not only from a technical knowledge of the bill and the conditions which prompt it but as the representatives of 30,000,000 people, those who are most at interest. And for the convenience of Members who desire to read their presentation of the case I ask unanimous consent to insert it as a part of my remarks.

The following letter has been sent to Members of the House and Senate by representatives of farm organizations who are in Washington supporting the McNary-Haugen export corporation bill. In addition to the men and organizations signatory to this letter over 300 other farm organizations, as well as many hundreds of commercial and professional associations, have indorsed the measure:

During the recent press comment on the McNary-Haugen bill, the statement has frequently been made that the present Congress will not adjourn without passing some kind of farm legislation, and the only inference which can be drawn from such statements is that if Congress can not see its way clear to give the farmer what he wants then it will give him something it thinks he ought to have. And we, the undersigned, who represent the largest and the most representative farm organizations of the country, believe that the time has come when we should make our position in these premises clear to Congress and to the whole Nation, and, therefore, without the slightest semblance of threat, but with an overwhelming conviction of the gravity of the situation which now confronts the farmer, we want to make it perfectly plain that no mere legislative palliative can save agriculture from the collapse which now impends, which has already forced tens of thousands of the best farmers in the land into bankruptcy and which at this hour menaces tens of thousands of other farmers with the same catastrophe.

The single and solitary purpose of the McNary-Haugen bill is to give to the farmer as big a dollar for the products of his toil during the next five years as the dollar that he is forced to pay to industry under the Fordney-McCumber Act and to labor under the existing generous wage scales, and in all candor we desire to ask of Congress and of the country, is there anything unfair about this proposal? Can the farmer be expected, on the one hand, to bear a large share of the burdens imposed by industry and labor who have created living conditions of their own liking, and then, on the other hand, accept a price for his wheat, hogs, cattle, and other surplus farm commodities, at home and abroad, established in competition with the peasant and peon farmers of the whole world? If the American manufacturer is unwilling to meet the foreign manufacturer on an even footing, and if labor believes that the time for absolute exclusion, with reference to immigration, has come, then should they ask the six and a half million farmers of this country to do what they themselves refuse to do?

Through the McNary-Haugen bill we have approached this situation as best we knew how. For four long, weary months this measure has stood the fire of the opposition before the House and Senate committees and during this time we have sought to cure every fair and valid objection made against its various provisions. Therefore we have a firm conviction that the measure as it now stands is legally sound, practical, and workable. Nevertheless, if any Member of Congress can, in good faith, propose any further amendment that will make it more so and yet subserve the full purpose which the act has in view, then we shall most cordially welcome such assistance, for, certainly, we want it to be sound and workable, and, certainly, also, we do not want to take a penny out of the Federal Treasury that is not returned, for we are asking Congress to help us save agriculture from impending ruin. We are not asking for charity. But if, after placing ourselves in this friendly and conciliatory attitude, Congress should still see fit to deny our petitions, then we shall go back home and save as much out of the wreck as we can.

In the meantime let Congress and the whole country understand that the day of soft-soaping agriculture is past; that in this hour, when the average farmer is struggling for his very existence, it would be an insult to offer him a mere legislative nostrum that does not honestly and fairly seek to relieve him of the tremendous handicap under which he is laboring. In all kindness, but nevertheless with profound firmness, we therefore say, Give us the McNary-Haugen bill, for agriculture is unable to accept a substitute.

The above statement has the unqualified indorsement of the following organizations, whose representatives are on the ground in Washington:

T. C. Atkeson, Washington representative National Grange.

John G. Brown, president National Live Stock Producers' Association.

George G. Coale, Knox County, Ind., banker.

Thomas E. Cashman, president American Hereford Breeders' Association; director, Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

R. A. Cowles, treasurer Illinois Agricultural Association.

Carl Gunderson, director, South Dakota Wheat Growers' Association.

William Hirth, president Missouri Farmers' Association.

C. W. Hunt, secretary-treasurer Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

George C. Jewett, general manager American Wheat Growers' Association.

F. W. Murphy, St. Paul Association and Northwest Campaign Committee for Promotion McNary-Haugen Bill.

J. F. Reed, vice president Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.

J. R. Riggs, Producers' Commission Association of Indianapolis, Ind.

C. G. Selvig, president Minnesota Export Commission League.

Gray Silver, Washington representative American Farm Bureau Federation.

William H. Settle, president Indiana Farm Bureau Federation, Indiana Wheat Pool, Indiana Dairy and Produce Association.

L. J. Tabor, master National Grange.

John Tromble, president Kansas Farmers' Union.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 23, 1924, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

502. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Felix Davis; to the Committee on Claims.

503. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, to pay salaries and expenses for the continuance of the Rent Commission from May 23, 1924, to May 22, 1925, $75,220 (H. Doc. No. 300); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

504. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, which have been submitted by the Attorney General through the Secretary of the Treasury, and require an appropriation for their payment, as follows: Under the Department of the Interior, $4,737.09; under the Navy Department, $10,178.51; under the Treasury Department, $0.59; and under the War Department, $80,098.85; in all, $95,015.04 (H. Doc. No. 301); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

505. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting record of judgment rendered against the Government by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting in admiralty, in the case of the Brovig v. The United States (steamship Babcock), $8,904.40 (H. Doc. No. 302); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

506. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States, as submitted by the Attorney General, through the Secretary of the Treasury, which require an appropriation for their payment, as follows: Under the Department of Labor, $328.75; under the Navy Department, $5,483.12; under the War Department, $412.25; in all, $6,224.12 (H. Doc. No. 303); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

507. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting schedules of claims amounting to $1,190,870.49 allowed by the various divisions of the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement, the numbers of which are shown in the first column of said schedules (H. Doc. No. 304); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

508. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting judgments rendered against the Government by the United States district courts, as submitted by the Attorney General through the Secretary of the Treasury, under the War Department, $427,511.45 (H. Doc. No. 305); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII.

Mr. McSWAIN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 9012. A bill to make available an officer of the Army of appropriate grade for service in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia and for the exercise of certain other functions; without amendment (Rept. No. 814). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McKENZIE. Committee on Military Affairs. S. 1376. An act to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 815). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MAJOR of Missouri: Committee on the Judiciary. S. 624. An act to amend the practice and procedure in Federal courts, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 816). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 3387. A bill authorizing repayment of excess amounts paid by purchasers of certain lots in the town site of Sanish, formerly Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.; without amendment (Rept. No. 824). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 7522. A bill to authorize and direct the issuance of patents to purchasers of lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 825). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEAVER: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 8083. A bill to designate the Croatan Indians of Robeson and adjoining counties in North Carolina as Cherokee Indians; without amendment (Rept. No. 826). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HICKEY: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 8906. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920; without amendment (Rept. No. 827). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 8965. A bill for the relief of the Omaha Indians of Nebraska; without amendment (Rept. No. 828). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1691. A bill for the relief of Charles F. Getchell; without amendment (Rept. No. 811). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 2421. A bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Matthew Thomas; with amendments (Rept. No. 812). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REECE: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 9354. A bill for the relief of William P. Quarles, known as Qualls; without amendment (Rept. No. 813). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1958. A bill for the relief of Frederick Sparks; without amendment (Rept. No. 817). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1962. A bill for the relief of Thomas J. Gardner; with an amendment (Rept. No. 818). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HAYDEN: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 2258. A bill for the relief of James J. McAllister; with an amendment (Rept. No. 819). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ROACH: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 7631. A bill for the relief of Charles T. Clayton and others; with amendments (Rept. No. 820). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HASTINGS: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 2526. An act providing for an allotment of land from the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, Okla., to James F. Rowell, an intermarried and enrolled member of the Kiowa Tribe; without amendment (Rept. No. 821). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WRIGHT: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2676. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to lease, or, in his discretion, to convey by quitclaim deed a certain tract of land in the military reservation of Santa Rosa Island, Fla.; with an amendment (Rept. No. 822). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HILL of Maryland: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2764. An act authorizing the President to order Leo P. Quinn before a retiring board for a rehearing of his case and upon the findings of such board either confirm his discharge or place him on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his discharge; without amendment (Rept. No. 823). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5278. A bill for the relief of Edward N. Moore; without amendment (Rept. No. 829). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 7131. A bill for the relief of Pleasant P. W. Harris; with amendments (Rept. No. 830). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WURZBACH: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 7133. A bill for the relief of James Shook; with an amendment (Rept. No. 831). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9202) for the relief of Herman Lincoln Chatkoff; Committee on Military Affairs discharged, and referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

A bill (H. R. 9265) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Black; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 9380) granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Aitkin County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ABERNETHY: A bill (H. R. 9381) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Moores Creek, N. C.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 9382) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: Resolution (H. Res. 324) for the consideration of S. 790, for the establishment of a Federal industrial institution for women, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COLE of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 9383) granting an increase of pension to Orrel Tucker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOK: A bill (H. R. 9384) granting a pension to Louisa W. Kohser; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9385) granting a pension to Eliza J. Saxon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEGG: A bill (H. R. 9386) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Nighswander; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DARROW: A bill (H. R. 9387) for the relief of Rachel Parke; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H. R. 9388) granting an increase of pension to Annie Fitzpatrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULBRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 9389) granting an increase of pension to William Huskey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 9390) granting a pension to Lydia Gault Read; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINEBERGER: A bill (H. R. 9391) granting a pension to Jessie F. Loughridge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 9392) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Hale; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 9393) granting an increase of pension to Marie Spencer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 9394) for the relief of John Milton Pew; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TAGUE: A bill (H. R. 9395) granting a pension to Isadore J. Rogers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 9396) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the city of Augusta, Ga., two condemned bronze or brass cannons, with their carriages and a suitable outfit of cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WINSLOW: A bill (H. R. 9397) granting an increase of pension to S. Angeline Wheeler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

2842. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the board of directors of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, favoring a carrying out of the plan of the Secretary of the Navy to modernize the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

2843. Also (by request), petition of convention of Illinois mine workers, favoring increase of salaries to postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2844. Also (by request), petition of national executive committee of the American Legion, expressing appreciation of the action of the House of Representatives in passing the adjusted compensation bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

2845. Also (by request), petition of city parliament of the Community Councils of the City of New York, N. Y., favoring a congressional investigation of telephone rates and service throughout the United States; to the Committee on Rules.

2846. By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: Petition of Soo Line Employees' Association, against Howell-Barkley bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

2847. By Mr. FULLER: Petition of 900 citizens of Peru, La Salle County, Ill., favoring the enactment of the bill H. R. 4088, known as the Upper Mississippi River or Izaak Walton League bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2848. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Boston Central Labor Union, protesting against the bill which authorizes the authorities at the Federal penitentiary, Leavenworth, to equip a portion of its institution with shoe-manufacturing machinery, which will enable convict prison labor to compete with free labor in the boot and shoe industry; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2849. Also, petition of Boston Central Labor Union, Boston, Mass., protesting against the awarding of a contract by the United States Government for 500,000 yards of khaki cloth to be manufactured by a firm in England while there are thousands of textile workers out of work or on short time in the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2850. By Mr. LEAVITT: Petitions of county officials of Fergus County, Mont.; city officials of Lewistown, Mont.; Fergus County (Mont.) Republican central committee; Fergus County (Mont.) Democratic central committee; Wright Land & Investment Co., Lewistown, Mont.; Power Mercantile Co., Lewistown, Mont.; Fergus Loan & Investment Co., Lewistown, Mont.; Carl Peterson, Fergus County agricultural agent; and Lewistown Democrat-News, Lewistown, Mont., urging passage of the McNary-Haugen bill; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2851. By Mr. RAKER: Letter from A. W. McKenzie, Bieber, Calif., protesting against increase of parcel-post rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2852. Also, petitions of C. G. Brainerd, Loomis, Calif.; Angelina M. Redstreake, Johnsville, Calif.; Huron B. Brown, Denair, Calif.; and F. E. Moore, Copperopolis, Calif., indorsing House bill 9035, increasing salaries of fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2853. Also, petitions of J. S. Hussey, Cromberg, Calif.; Belle Stevens, Igo, Calif.; F. B. Jones, Los Molinos, Calif., indorsing House bill 9035, increasing salaries of fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2854. Also, petitions of Parker & Waterman Manufacturing Co., Los Angeles, Calif., and H. R. Williar, San Francisco, Calif., protesting against passage of House bill 4123 and Senate bill 1898, providing for increase in salary for postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2855. Also, petition of A. A. Berke, jr., counsel for the Pueblo Indians, 33 West Forty-second Street, New York City, urging passage of Senate bill 2932, in re lands of Pueblo Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

2856. Also, petition of Mr. Clarence B. Yates, secretary Gold Hill Grange, No. 326, Lincoln, Calif., resolution opposing creation of a department of education; to the Committee on Education.

2857. Also, petition of Joseph T. Watson, 824 LaJolla Avenue, Los Angeles, Calif., urging support of House bill 6484, providing for retirement of disabled emergency Army officers of the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2858. Also, petition of Miss Myrtle C. Robertson, Kirkland, Wash., protesting against change in the name of Mount Rainier; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE

FRIDAY, May 23, 1924

(Legislative day of Tuesday, May 20, 1924)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The principal clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fess	Lenroot	Sheppard
Bayard	Fletcher	Lodge	Shipstead
Borah	Frazier	McKinley	Simmons
Brandegee	George	McNary	Smith
Broussard	Gerry	Mayfield	Smoot
Bruce	Glass	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Hale	Neely	Stanley
Cameron	Harreld	Norbeck	Stephens
Capper	Harris	Norris	Sterling
Caraway	Harrison	Oddie	Swanson
Copeland	Heflin	Overman	Trammell
Couzens	Howell	Owen	Wadsworth
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Curtis	Johnson, Minn.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Warren
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Ralston	Weller
Dill	Kendrick	Ransdell	Willis
Edge	King	Reed, Pa.
Ferris	Ladd	Robinson

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are attending a meeting of a special investigating committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION VETO—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to have it appear in the RECORD that my failure to be present and vote on the soldiers' bonus bill on Monday last was due to a misapprehension on my part. As I believed that I was paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] at that time, I was not present when the vote was taken. I merely wanted this statement to appear in the RECORD. Had I been present I would have voted to override the President's veto of the bill.

TAX REDUCTION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes. At this time I shall ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading and I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator if the report is unanimous?

Mr. SMOOT. The report is unanimous. I have also had copies of the report printed and I shall have a copy placed on the desk of each Senator this afternoon, together with a copy of the bill containing the exact amendments that have been made to the House text, and also the amendments as they have been agreed to in conference. To-morrow morning I desire, if it is the will of the Senate, to make a statement as to just what the principal amendments agreed to in conference are, and also showing the revenue under the present law and the estimated revenue which the Mellon plan and the bill as agreed upon in conference would provide.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6715) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 48, 53, 69, 71, 72, 76, 77, 80, 81, 82, 83, 89, 90, 92, 93, 95, 123, 127, 128, 129, 132, 136, 137, 140, 141, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 153, 157, 158, 159, 161, 162, 163, 164, 166, 167, 168, 169, 171, 172, 174, 176, 181, 183, 184, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 203, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 215, 222, 223, 224, 225, 229, 253, 254, and 260.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, 20, 24, 29, 37, 38, 40, 42, 43, 45, 46, 49, 50, 52, 54, 55, 57, 58, 59, 60, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 73, 74, 75, 78, 84, 85, 86, 87, 94, 97, 98, 99, 100, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 112, 113, 115, 116, 118, 119, 120, 121, 124, 125, 126, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 138, 139, 142, 151, 156, 160, 165, 170, 173, 175, 177, 178, 180, 182, 185, 193, 200, 201, 202, 204, 213, 214, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 226, 227, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 251, 252, 255, 256, 257, 258, and 259, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment and on page 16 of the House bill strike out all after "shall" in line 9 down to and including the comma in line 10; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 39: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(b) In the case of an individual the tax shall, in addition to the credits provided in section 222, be credited with 25 per cent of the amount of tax which would be payable if his earned net income constituted his entire net income; but in no case shall the credit allowed under this subdivision exceed 25 per cent of his tax under section 210" and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 5 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 18, strike out "Two"

and insert "2"; and on page 5 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, strike out "attributed" and insert "attributable"; and on page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 1, strike out "Four" and insert "4"; and on page 6 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 6, strike out "Six" and insert "6"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 44: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"(A) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility, prior to any division of such proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, and if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then a tax upon the net income from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such public utility for such taxable year.

"(B) If by the terms of such contract no part of the proceeds from the operation of the public utility for the taxable year would, irrespective of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then the tax upon the net income of such person from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title."

And on page 40 of the House bill, line 1, strike out the comma at the end of the line and insert a dash.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 12 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out line 11 and down to and including "continued" in line 12; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 51: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 51, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 13 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 3, strike out "or community chest" and the comma following such words; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 15 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 10, strike out all after "to" down to and including the comma in line 12, and insert "$2,500"; and on page 15 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 13, strike out "had such status" and insert "was a married person living with husband or wife or was the head of a family"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert a comma and the following: "or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals or for the establishment, acquisition, maintenance, or operation of a public cemetery not operated for profit"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 11, after "person," insert "not a beneficiary of the trust"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 16 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, after "person," insert "not a beneficiary of the trust"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 79: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 76 of the House bill, line 7, strike out "Farmers'" and insert "Benevolent life insurance associations of a purely local character, farmers'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "taxes imposed by sections 230 and 700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "taxes imposed by sections 230 and 700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment with the following changes: On page 103 of the House bill, line 16, after "Treasury," insert "for"; and on page 103 of the House bill, line 17, after "furnish," insert a comma; and on page 104 of the House bill, line 24, strike out all after "the," down to and including "district," in line 2, on page 105, and insert "name and the post-office address of each person making an income-tax return in such district, together with the amount of the income tax paid by such person"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment, and on page 113 of the House bill, line 16, strike out all after the period, down to and including the period in line 21, and insert "No part of the amount determined as a deficiency by the commissioner but disallowed as such by the board shall be assessed, but a proceeding in court may be begun, without assessment, for the collection of any part of the amount so disallowed. The court shall include in its judgment interest upon the amount thereof at the rate of 6 per centum per annum from the date prescribed for the payment of the tax to the date of the judgment" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment and on page 122 of the House bill, line 20, strike out "5 per centum" and insert "6 per centum"; and on page 123 of the House bill, line 5, strike out "5 per centum" and insert "6 per centum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 33 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 21, after "claim" insert "or, if no claim was filed, then during the four years immediately preceding the allowance of the credit or refund"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senate amendment with the following changes: On page 128 of the House bill strike out line 13 and insert the following heading in capitals: "Title III" and a period; and on page 128 of the House bill, after line 13, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Part I.—Estate Tax" and a period; and on page 128 of the House bill, line 14, after "in" insert "Part I of"; and on page 128 of the House bill, line 17, strike out "trator" and insert "trator appointed, qualified, and acting within the United States, then"; and on page 131 of the House bill, line 24, before "this" insert "Part I of"; and on page 132 of the House bill, line 10, strike out all after "held" down to and including "son" in line 12 and insert "as joint tenants by the decedent and any other person, or as tenants by the entirety by the decedent and spouse"; and on page 133 of the House bill strike out lines 2, 3, and 4 and line 5 through "thereof" and insert "by the entirety by the decedent and spouse, then to the extent of one-half of the value thereof, or, where so acquired by the decedent and any other person as joint tenants and their interests are not otherwise specified or fixed by law, then to the extent of the value of a fractional part to be determined by dividing the value of the property by the number of joint tenants"; and on page 133 of the House bill, line 20, strike out "right" and insert "rights"; and on page 134 of the House bill strike out lines 21 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 11, inclusive, on page 135, and insert: "(2) An amount equal to the value of any property (A) forming a part of the gross estate situated in the United States of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or (B) transferred to the decedent by gift within five years prior to his death, where such property can be identified as having been received by the decedent from such donor by gift or from such prior decedent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or which can be identified as having been acquired in exchange for property so received. This deduction shall be allowed only where a gift tax or an estate tax under this or any prior act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the donor or the estate of such prior decedent as the case may be, and only in the amount of the value placed by the commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gift or the gross estate of such prior decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included in the decedent's gross estate and not deducted under paragraph (1) or (3) of this subdivision" and a semicolon; and on page 135 of the House bill, line 24, strike out all after "trustee or" down to and including "and" in line 2 on page 136, and insert "trustees, or a fraternal society, order, or association operating under the lodge system, but only if such contributions or gifts are to be used by such trustee or trustees, or by such fraternal society, order, or association, exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. If the tax imposed by section 301, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes, are, either by the terms of the will, by the law of the jurisdiction under which the estate is administered, or by the law of the jurisdiction imposing the particular tax, payable in whole or in part out of the bequests, legacies, or devises otherwise deductible under this paragraph, then the amount deductible under this paragraph shall be the amount of such bequests, legacies, or devises reduced by the amount of such taxes; and"; and on page 136 of the House bill strike out lines 14 to 25, inclusive, and lines 1 to 6, inclusive, on page 137, and insert: "(2) An amount equal to the value of any property (A) forming a part of the gross estate situated in the United States of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or (B) transferred to the decedent by gift within five years prior to his death, where such property can be identified as having been received by the decedent from such donor by gift or from such prior decedent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or which can be identified as having been acquired in exchange for property so received. This deduction shall be allowed only where a gift tax or an estate tax under this or any prior act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the donor or the estate of such prior decedent as the case may be, and only in the amount of the value placed by the commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gift or the gross estate of such prior decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States and not deducted under paragraph (1) or (3) of this subdivision; and"; and on page 137 of the House bill strike out line 20 and line 21 through "States" and insert "trustees, or a fraternal society, order, or association operating under the lodge system, but only if such contributions or gifts are to be used within the United States by such trustee or trustees, or by such fraternal society, order, or association, exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals. If the tax imposed by section 301, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes, are, either by the terms of the will, by the law of the jurisdiction, under which the estate is administered, or by the law of the jurisdiction imposing the particular tax, payable in whole or in part out of the bequests, legacies, or devises otherwise deductible under this paragraph, then the amount deductible under this paragraph shall be the amount of such bequests, legacies, or devises reduced by the amount of such taxes"; and on page 138 of the House bill, line 3, after "of" insert "Part I of"; and on page 138 of the House bill, line 17, after "of" insert "Part I of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "308"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 154: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 154, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 155: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 155, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 59 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 23, strike out "315" and insert "310"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 179: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 179, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"PART II.—GIFT TAX

"SEC. 319. For the calendar year 1924 and each calendar year thereafter, a tax equal to the sum of the following is hereby imposed upon the transfer by a resident by gift during such calendar year of any property wherever situated, whether made directly or indirectly, and upon the transfer by a nonresident by gift during such calendar year of any property situated within the United States, whether made directly or indirectly:

"One per cent of the amount of the taxable gifts not in excess of $50,000;

"Two per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $50,000 and do not exceed $100,000;

"Three per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $100,000 and do not exceed $150,000;

"Four per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $150,000 and do not exceed $250,000;

"Six per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $250,000 and do not exceed $450,000;

"Nine per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $450,000 and do not exceed $750,000;

"Twelve per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $750,000 and do not exceed $1,000,000;

"Fifteen per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $1,000,000 and do not exceed $1,500,000;

"Eighteen per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $1,500,000 and do not exceed $2,000,000;

"Twenty-one per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $2,000,000 and do not exceed $3,000,000;

"Twenty-four per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $3,000,000 and do not exceed $4,000,000;

"Twenty-seven per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $4,000,000 and do not exceed $5,000,000;

"Thirty per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $5,000,000 and do not exceed $8,000,000;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $8,000,000 and do not exceed $10,000,000;

"Forty per cent of the amount by which the taxable gifts exceed $10,000,000.

"SEC. 320. If the gift is made in property, the fair market value thereof at the date of the gift shall be considered the amount of the gift. Where property is sold or exchanged for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, then the amount by which the fair market value of the property exceeded the consideration received shall, for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 319, be deemed a gift, and shall be included in computing the amount of gifts made during the calendar year.

"SEC. 321. In computing the amount of the gifts subject to the tax imposed by section 319, there shall be allowed as deductions:

"(a) In the case of a resident—

"(1) An exemption of $50,000;

"(2) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes, or to or for the use of any corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees, or fraternal society, order, or association operating under the lodge system, but only if such gifts or contributions are to be used by such trustee or trustees or by such fraternal society, order, or association, exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, and the amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year by such corporations, trustee, or fraternal society, order, or association for a religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purpose, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, and the amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

"(3) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500;

"(4) An amount equal to the value of any property transferred by gift within the calendar year, which can be identified (A) as having been received by the donor within five years prior to the time of his making such gift, either from another person by gift or from a decedent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or (B) as having been acquired in exchange for property so received. This deduction shall be allowed only where a gift tax or an estate tax under this or any prior act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the donor or the estate of such decedent, as the case may be, and only in the amount of the value placed by the commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gift or the gross estate of such decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included in the total amount of gifts made within the calendar year and not deducted under paragraph (2) or (3) of this subdivision.

"(b) In the case of a nonresident—

"(1) The amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to or for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes or to or for the use of any domestic corporation organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, including the encouragement of art and the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to a trustee or trustees, or fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system, but only if such gifts or contributions are to be used within the United States by such trustee or trustees or by such fraternal society, order, or association, exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, and the amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year by such corporation, trustee, or fraternal society, order, or association for a religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purpose, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, and the amount of all gifts or contributions made within the calendar year to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

"(2) Gifts the aggregate amount of which to any one person does not exceed $500;

"(3) An amount equal to the value of any property situated in the United States transferred by gift within the calendar year, which can be identified (A) as having been received by the donor within five years prior to the time of his making such gift, either from another person by gift or from a decedent by gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance, or (B) as having been acquired in exchange for property so received. This deduction shall be allowed only where a gift tax or an estate tax under this or any prior act of Congress was paid by or on behalf of the donor or the estate of such decedent, as the case may be, and only in the amount of the value placed by the commissioner on such property in determining the value of the gift or the gross estate of such decedent, and only to the extent that the value of such property is included within the total amount of gifts made within the calendar year of property situated in the United States and not deducted under paragraph (1) or (2) of this subdivision.

"SEC. 322. In case a tax has been imposed under section 319 upon any gift, and thereafter upon the death of the donor, the amount thereof is required by any provision of Part I of this title to be included in the gross estate of the decedent, then there shall be credited against and applied in reduction of the estate tax, which would otherwise be chargeable against the estate of the decedent under the provisions of section 301, an amount equal to the tax paid with respect to such gift; and in the event the donor has in any year paid the tax imposed by section 319 with respect to a gift or gifts which upon the death of the donor must be included in his gross estate and a gift or gifts not required to be so included, then the amount of the tax which shall be deemed to have been paid with respect to the gift or gifts required to be so included shall be that proportion of the entire tax paid on account of all such gifts which the amount of the gift or gifts required to be so included bears to the total amount of gifts in that year.

"SEC. 323. Any person who within the year 1924 or any calendar year thereafter makes any gift or gifts in excess of the deductions allowed by section 321 shall on or before the 15th day of March file with the collector a return, under oath, in duplicate, listing and setting forth therein all gifts and contributions made by him during such calendar year (other than the gifts specified in paragraph (3) of subdivision (a) and in paragraph (2) of subdivision (b) of section 321) and the fair market value thereof when made, and also all sales and exchanges of property owned by him made within such year for less than a fair consideration in money or money's worth, stating therein the fair market value of the property so sold or exchanged and that of the consideration received by him, both as of the date of such sale or exchange.

"SEC. 324. The tax imposed by section 319 shall be paid by the donor on or before the 15th day of March and shall be assessed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject in so far as applicable to the same provisions of law as the tax imposed by section 301" and a period.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 186: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 186, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 68 of the Senate engrossed amendments strike out lines 18 to 22, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof a subdivision as follows: "(3) Tires, inner tubes, parts, or accessories for any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1) or (2), sold to any person other than a manufacturer or producer of any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1) or (2), 2½ per cent. This subdivision shall not apply to chassis or bodies for automobile trucks, automobile wagons, or other automobiles" and a semicolon; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 187: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 69 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 1, strike out "10" and insert "5," and on page 69 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 4, strike out "10" and insert "5"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 194: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 194, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "$30"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 212: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 212 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 72 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 19, after "Board" insert "appointed for a term beginning after the expiration of two years after the enactment of this act"; and on page 73 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 2, strike out "313, and 317" and insert "279, 308, and 312"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 216: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 216, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "(h) Notice and an opportunity to be heard shall be given to the taxpayer and the commissioner and a decision shall be made as quickly as practicable. Hearings before the board and its divisions shall be open to the public. The proceedings of the board and its divisions shall be conducted in accordance with such rules of evidence and procedure as the board may prescribe. It shall be the duty of the board and of each division to make a report in writing of its findings of fact and decision in each case, and a copy of its report shall be entered of record and a copy furnished the taxpayer. If the amount of tax in controversy is more than $10,000 the oral testimony taken at the hearing shall be reduced to writing and the report shall contain an opinion in writing in addition to the findings of fact and decision. All reports of the board and its divisions and all evidence received by the board and its divisions (including, in cases where the oral testimony is reduced to writing, the transcript thereof) shall be public records open to the inspection of the public. The board shall provide for the publication of its reports at the Government Printing Office in such form and manner as may be best adapted for public information and use, and such authorized publication shall be competent evidence of the reports of the board therein contained in all courts of the United States and of the several States without any further proof or authentication thereof. Such reports shall be subject to sale in the same manner and upon the same terms as other public documents. The principal office of the board shall be in the District of Columbia, but the board or any of its divisions may sit at any place within the United States. The times and places of the meetings of the board, and of its divisions, shall be prescribed by the chairman with a view to securing reasonable opportunity to taxpayers to appear before the board or any of its divisions, with as little inconvenience and expense to taxpayers as is practicable" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 228: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 228, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "(b) No tax shall be levied, assessed, or collected under the provisions of Title VI of this act on any article sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, if at the time of the sale or lease there was an existing ruling, regulation, or Treasury decision holding that the sale or lease of such article was not taxable, and the manufacturer, producer, or importer parted with possession or ownership of such article, relying upon the ruling, regulation, or Treasury decision" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 230: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 240: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 240, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "(b) The exemption provided in paragraph (10) of subdivision (a) of section 11 of the revenue act of 1916, and in subdivision (10) of section 231 of the revenue act of 1918, and in subdivision (10) of section 231 of the revenue act of 1921, shall be granted to farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance companies (if otherwise exempt under such paragraphs), whether or not such organizations were of a purely local character. Any taxes assessed against such organizations shall, subject to the statutory period of limitations properly applicable thereto, be abated, credited, or refunded" and a period; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 250: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 250, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 85 of the Senate engrossed amendments, after line 5, insert the following heading in small capitals: "Special deposits" and a period; and on page 85 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 21, strike out all after "taxes" down to and including "law" in line 22, and insert "and revenues received under the provisions of this act, and collections of whatever nature received or collected by authority of any internal-revenue law"; and on page 86 of the Senate engrossed amendments, line 9, strike out "offered" and insert "offered"; and the Senate agree to the same.

W. R. GREEN,
W. C. HAWLEY,
ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
JNO. N. GARNER,
J. W. COLLIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
GEO. P. MCLEAN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
F. M. SIMMONS,
A. A. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Utah. I was not sure that I got the full import of his statement. Is it his purpose to press to a vote to-morrow the conference report which he has just submitted?

Mr. SMOOT. That is my purpose, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. Some of us will be unable to be here to-morrow and we would be very much pleased if the vote could be had on Monday or Tuesday next. Would not the Senator be willing to postpone it?

Mr. SMOOT. I would not like to have the report lie over so long.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator anticipate that there will be serious opposition to the conference report?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think there will be serious opposition to it, but some of us who can not be here to-morrow would like to have an opportunity to vote upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I suggest to the Senator that there are others who could not be here on Monday.

Mr. WILLIS. I quite understand that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Scarcely a day comes when every Senator is able to be in attendance.

Mr. WILLIS. I simply wanted to be certain about the position of the Senator from Utah in regard to the time when the report is to be considered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 4445. An act to amend section 115 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary";

H. R. 5855. An act to fix the salaries of officers and members of the Metropolitan police force and the fire department of the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 6355. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9124) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed enrolled bills of the following titles, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 6207. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to transfer to the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice all that portion of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation which lies in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6357. An act for the reorganization and improvement of the foreign service of the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8262. An act to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. SMITH presented a petition of sundry members of the Rotary Club of Union and the Izaak Walton League, all of Union, S. C., praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 4088) to establish the upper Mississippi River wild life and fish refuge, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented the memorial of the Penobscot County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Bangor, Me., remonstrating against the passage of legislation modifying the Volstead Prohibition Act so as to legalize the manufacture and sale of beers and wines, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LADD presented 144 petitions of sundry citizens in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of legislation providing an equipment maintenance allowance to rural mail carriers, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Pike County Farm Bureau, at Waverly, Ohio, favoring the passage of the bill (H. R. 8373) to amend the Federal highway act, so as to provide that after November 9, 1926, the term "State funds" as used in the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, shall be construed to mean funds derived from revenues of the State, and not from any political or other subdivision thereof, and made available for expenditure under the direct control of the State highway department, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions of the Exchange Club of Bryan, Ohio, protesting against amendment of the transportation act of 1920, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Natural Gas Association of America in annual convention assembled in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against the taxation of undistributed earnings of corporations, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DALE, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 1535) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 592) thereon.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4432) for the relief of Orville Paul, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 593) thereon.

He also from the same committee to which was referred the bill (S. 3252) referring the claim of the State of Rhode Island for expenses during the war with Spain to the Court of Claims for adjudication, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 605) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2223) for the relief of the estate of Robert M. Bryson, deceased (Rept. No. 595);

A bill (S. 2833) for the relief of Rinald Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa. (Rept. No. 596);

A bill (S. 3235) for the relief of Christina Conniff (Rept. No. 597);

A bill (H. R. 905) for the relief of Gerard E. Bess (Rept. No. 598);

A bill (H. R. 1860) for the relief of Fannie M. Higgins (Rept. No. 599);

A bill (H. R. 3009) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk (Rept. No. 600); and

A bill (H. R. 3537) for the relief of L. A. Scott (Rept. No. 601).

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1202) for the relief of the estate of Benjamin Braznell (Rept. No. 602);

A bill (S. 3066) for the relief of Albert E. Magoffin (Rept. No. 603); and

A bill (H. R. 3348) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain claim as the result of damages sustained to the marine railway of the Greenport Basin & Construction Co. (Rept. No. 604).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5967) for the relief of Grace Buxton, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 606) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 22, 1924, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2922) to authorize the President to reconsider the case of Frederic K. Long and to reappoint him a captain in the Regular Army.

AMENDMENT OF WORLD WAR ADJUSTED COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I introduce a bill to amend the World War adjusted compensation act, which I ask be referred to the Committee on Finance. It is accompanied by a brief statement which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3367) to amend the World War adjusted compensation act, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The accompanying statement was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WALSH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN REFERENCE TO THE BILL INTRODUCED BY HIM TO AMEND THE WORLD WAR ADJUSTED COMPENSATION ACT

The adjusted compensation law recently enacted by Congress has settled the question of paying additional compensation to the military forces for their services during the war. It fixes the amount of the adjusted compensation to be paid at $1 per day for military services at home in excess of 60 days, and $1.25 per day for military service abroad in excess of 60 days.

During the debate on this measure only incidental consideration was given to the method of making payments to the veterans. The contest was centered chiefly upon the recognition of the principle of adjusting compensation for military services. In my opinion, before Congress adjourns it ought to consider seriously and without partisanship two other aspects of this question, namely, which plan of payment is preferred by the veterans and which is economically best for the country.

I believe that both from the standpoint of the soldiers' preference as well as that of sound financing, the cash-option plan is infinitely better. Therefore, I am presenting to Congress a bill amending the law to ths end.

The cash-opton plan will give each veteran a choice between receiving cash or accepting a 20-year service certificate, which represents the money due him with accrued interest. Under the law as it now stands there is no preference. A veteran who has $51 due him must wait 20 years to collect it. He must accept the 20-year certificate, unless the amount due is less than $50.

The cash-option plan proposed by me will save the National Government for the next 20 years more than $1,000,000,000 and possibly as much as $2,000,000,000. How can such a saving be ignored? The plan, now the law, would not be thought of for an instant were it not for the desire to please certain financial interests by refraining from issuing Government bonds at this time, which a cash plan would necessitate. Under the law enacted only about $142,000,000 will have to be raised next year by taxation or bond issue, but a like sum must be raised annually during all of the 20 years. Under the cash-option plan which I propose it will be necessary next year to raise about $600,000,000 by a bond issue, but thereafter the annual appropriations will be comparatively small, resulting at the end of 20 years in a total cost to the Government of nearly $2,000,000,000 less than the 20-year certificate plan. Because some financiers in this country do not desire the National Government to issue securities to the amount of half a billion dollars next year, lest it slightly affect their securities, the American people must pay this vast extra sum of money within the next 20 years and deny the veterans the privilege of choosing cash or a certificate. The veterans and financiers without political prejudice will not be deceived by the attempt to make a temporarily good financial showing at the expense of the general public interest. Now that the policy of paying the war veterans' compensation has been settled, let us do it at the least possible expense to the American people and not wantonly add $2,000,000,000 to the national debt.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 3368) to cancel the additional taxes together with all penalties and other charges assessed against the estate of Charles L. Freer, deceased, and to remit any further taxes, penalties, or charges, which may hereafter be found due from the said estate; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3369) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth P. Aiken (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 3370) for the relief of Mary T. Metcalfe; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3371) to amend section 303 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1923, known as the "Agricultural credits act of 1923"; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GOODING:

A bill (S. 3372) to provide safeguards for future Federal irrigation development, and an equitable adjustment of existing accounts on Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I introduce a bill by request. I say "by request" because the opportunity has not as yet been presented to me or to the committee to examine its provisions, and therefore I make this particular reservation. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California (by request):

A bill (S. 3373) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands and to provide for the future political status of the same; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. LADD:

A bill (S. 3374) to authorize the more complete endowment of agricultural experiment stations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

AMENDMENTS TO GENERAL DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 for continued investigations and for first payment toward purchase of an interest in the Warm Springs Reservoir, Warm Springs (Vale) irrigation project, Oregon, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,250,000 for continued investigations, commencement of construction, and incidental operations of the Owyhee irrigation project, Oregon, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500,000 for continued investigations, continuation of construction, and incidental operations of the Strawberry Valley project, Utah, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on May 23, 1924, the President approved and signed the following acts:

S. 129. An act for the relief of the William D. Mullen Co.;

S. 130. An act for the relief of George T. Tobin & Son;

S. 210. An act for the relief of Peter C. Keegan and others;

S. 1572. An act for the relief of the New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co., of Bayonne, N. J.; and

S. 1698. An act granting permission to Commander Dorr F. Tozier, United States Coast Guard, retired, to accept a gift from the King of Great Britain.

STATUS OF SWAINS ISLAND (S. DOC. NO. 117)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State regarding the status of Swains Island, in the vicinity of American Samoa, in the Pacific Ocean.

I recommend that Congress take the necessary action to regularize the status of the island in accordance with the recommendations of the Secretary of State.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 23, 1924.

OPERATIONS OF FEDERAL LAND BANKS

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I rose to make some reference to the farm loan act and its administration, but I will not interfere now with the progress of the appropriation bill. I will merely mention that some reference was made in executive session yesterday, which I am not at liberty to go into even if I so desired, to the circumstances under which Title III of the intermediate credit act was adopted and put into the law. I think it has been the basis of practically all the trouble that we have encountered. Without that sort of legislation, and what took place in pursuance of it, we would probably not have had the difficulty which has been experienced with reference to the confirmation of the members of the Farm Loan Board.

Upon that subject last September I had occasion to submit an article to the New York Times, which was printed in the issue of Sunday, September 9, 1923. I ask to have that article inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, September 9, 1923]

CONGRESS BLAMED FOR TROUBLES OF THE FEDERAL LAND BANKS—SENATOR FLETCHER SEES TRAIL OF POLITICS AND LACK OF EXPERT KNOWLEDGE IN THEIR OPERATION—REAL OWNERS DEPRIVED OF CONTROL AND POWER VESTED IN GOVERNMENT

By DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, United States Senator from Florida

Despite the existence of a farm bloc of considerable influence, and despite the activities of several other combinations of varying degrees of advanced views, the last Congress did not have and certainly in the main did not deserve the reputation of being extremely radical. Yet that Congress actually in effect and to a degree confiscated a large block of private property.

This statement, plain and unadorned, is sufficient to disturb the peace of mind of those in control of certain great corporations and large combinations, who, even with little actual cause for alarm, habitually shiver and shimmy at the mere mention of Government ownership or operation. But a complete exposition of this consummated act of confiscation and the manner of its accomplishment discloses legislative tendencies and forecasts possibilities truly amazing and really alarming.

This consummated act of quasi confiscation is amazing because, despite the supposed alertness and boasted astuteness of the farm bloc, it was farmers' property which was confiscated. It is alarming because the value of the property thus confiscated represented a large amount and involved the control of a rapidly growing business, the volume of which already was approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars and gave promise of expansion to several billions within the next decade, thus indicating the possibility that Congress (a fair-sized precedent having been established) may go in for confiscation on a large scale.

It is both amazing and alarming because the property so confiscated was bank stock—not the stock of a single bank, but that of a whole line of banks, an entire system of finance; not the stock of a single individual, nor yet of a small group, but the stock holdings of 260,000 law-abiding citizens. Passing from the general to the particular, this act of quasi confiscation and the manner of its accomplishment may be described as follows:

In the closing hours of the session the last Congress amended the Federal farm loan act so as to deprive the stockholders of the 12 Federal land banks of majority representation on the boards of directors, and provided that the Government of the United States should name a majority of the directors of each of those institutions. This means, of course, that absolute control of these banks now rests with the Government; that the actual owners of the stock have no effective voice in the management; that in case of a dispute as to policy the stockholders are without the power to enforce their judgment.

One of the rights inherent in the ownership of property is the right to control that property, the right to determine its use. It has been held that the right to vote the stock of a corporation or stock company is a property right. For the Government to deprive the owners of property of its control, to curtail the voting right of stock to the point where the vote becomes ineffectual, constitutes in a measure confiscation. And it further has been held that any law which takes the property of a citizen without due process of law and just compensation is unconstitutional. This radical change in the law respecting the management of the Federal land banks raises the further constitutional question as to the violation of contracts within the meaning of the Dartmouth College case. Thus it is seen that by amending the Federal farm loan act the last Congress confiscated the voting power of a large amount of bank stock and violated the constitutional rights of 260,000 stockholders in the Federal land banks.

CONGRESSMEN NOT INFORMED

Nothing is more certain than that Congress never intended to do this enormous thing. In its final form the bill was not available to Congressmen in printed form and was not read in either House. And as most of the Members of that body do not know even yet that in voting for this amendment they in any way violated or even infringed upon the rights of the owners of these banks, it becomes important to inquire how such a thing came to pass.

The Sixty-seventh Congress not only boasted a farm bloc but it acknowledged its obligation to "do something for the farmer"; and on every possible occasion individual Members and groups and factions and even the entire administration sought to capitalize their friendly attitude toward the farmer. Indeed, the bill containing this amendment was passed by use of the slogan, "We must do something for the farmer."

How, then, did Congress fall into this amazing blunder? Any sufficient answer must involve at least a brief recital of the history of the Federal farm-loan system.

The Federal farm loan act was passed in July, 1916. The amendment under discussion was adopted in March, 1923, seven years later. In a word, there had been three elections between the enactment of the original law and the adoption of this amendment. It is not surprising, therefore, that the personnel of Congress in 1923 included only a few individuals who were thoroughly familiar with the financial machinery of the farm-loan system.

Many Members of both Houses had but hazy ideas of the relation of the Government to the system. A large number, probably a majority, honestly believed that the Federal land banks were owned by the Government and that therefore Congress was under no obligation to consult either the wishes or the judgment of the farmers who were making use of this newly created system of finance.

The fact that in the beginning the Government had made a temporary subscription to the initial capital of these banks, amounting to $8,892,130, was especially confusing to those Members who had only a superficial knowledge of the situation. The farmers have repaid all but less than $2,500,000. Some Members seemed rather perverse in their failure to understand that this stock subscription by the Government was merely temporary and clung with amazing tenacity to the assumption that these were Government-owned institutions, even after reading that section of the law which provided for the repayment of this Government loan, and even after reading the published reports of the Farm Loan Board that about two-thirds of this loan already had been repaid.

Furthermore, the 12 Federal land banks, being organized on the cooperative principle, were looked upon by other legislators as constituting a large and important experiment. True, cooperative land banks had been in successful operation in the older countries of Europe for a century and a half; but notwithstanding this long, honorable, and successful record in foreign countries, cooperation was at that time a new and untried principle in the United States. Naturally, in its anxiety for the success of this new feature of the system, Congress provided that the Government should exercise a fostering care over and should have detailed supervision of the cooperative banks.

Thus a temporary ownership of part of the capital stock and a detailed supervision by a bureau of the United States Treasury, a degree of supervision amounting almost to management, caused many Senators and Representatives to think of the Federal land banks as Government institutions.

Congress had been very proud of this bit of legislation. Literally scores of Congressmen and other statesmen and publicists have proudly proclaimed themselves as fathers of the Federal farm loan act. Many profound students of land credits contributed constructive thought to and criticism of the more important provisions of the law. It has been referred to times without number as the most complete piece of legislation enacted by Congress within half a century, and as originally passed it was a remarkably comprehensive law. It was pointed to by Democrats as one of the greatest of the achievements of the Wilson administration. On the other hand, Republicans proudly asserted that the groundwork for the law was laid under the Taft administration. The roll call shows an almost unanimous vote for the passage of the bill, regardless of party lines.

EVERYBODY FARMER'S FRIEND

The evident political advantage to be derived from identification with the drafting and passage of the Federal farm loan act and from the fostering of the farm loan system which this act created, together with the readiness with which Congressmen's relations to and connections with such wholesale benefits to farmers would lend themselves to political advertising in rural districts, made a strong appeal to many individual Members. Possibly it was because of this strong political advantage that a keen sense of fatherhood on the part of Congress has been so fully developed.

And in many instances this attitude on the part of individual Members was fully warranted. Congress has done a really big and constructive work. The general public, the farmers in particular, will not deny any Member full credit for any service he may have rendered, either in creating or fostering the Federal farm loan system.

It was the cooperative banks (Federal land banks) of which Congress was especially proud. The joint-stock land banks, organized by private capital under the same law, were thought to be capable of making their own way without any special aid from the Government. But the cooperative banks, being operated on a principle new in this country, were deemed to be objects of special care and attention on the part of Congress.

The Congress of 1916, which created the system, was morally certain that the cooperative principle as applied to land banks would prove eminently practical in the United States. This was the judgment also of the commission sent to Europe to study this subject. The findings of that commission were made the basis upon which rests this legislation. The cooperative plan had been in successful operation in the older countries of Europe since 1769. It had long ago passed the experimental stages. Therefore if carefully fostered and safeguarded this plan, so Congress thought, should succeed admirably in the United States. This kind of bank, and the cooperative principle as applied to land banking, had become, through 150 years, a stable, accepted, and highly important part of the financial machinery of all the larger nations of the world. Many South American countries had borrowed this system from Europe a number of years ago (Chile in 1855, Argentina in 1886). Such a system was introduced in Japan in 1897, and in the Philippine Islands in 1908. The Congress of the United States, therefore, was warranted in predicating the success of a cooperative system in this country upon the experience throughout the civilized world.

Now, land-bank bonds issued by cooperative institutions had become, through 150 years, among the most stable of all securities in the money markets of the world. Apparently investors in every part of the globe understood these securities and appreciated their great safety, excepting alone the investors in the United States.

ANALYSIS OF BONDS

When it came to marketing in this country and selling to the American investor the bonds of a cooperative institution, some doubt was expressed by representatives of some leading bond houses. Evidently ignorant of the high standing of the bonds of European cooperative land banks, these representatives of bond houses expressed the fear that "it would be difficult to sell the bonds of a bank where the control of the bank rests with the borrowers." They shook their heads wisely and doubtless were entirely sincere in their expression of grave fears for the success of this system. As fear is contagious, it is not surprising that the Federal Farm Loan Board, a bureau of the United States Treasury charged with the administration of this law and the supervision of these banks, should recommend in its first report to Congress that the temporary control of these institutions, which at the outset was lodged in the Government until permanent organization could be effected, should be continued for "a lengthened period." In a word, the Farm Loan Board in its first report, and in other reports since, has expressed grave doubts as to whether the securities of cooperative institutions could be successfully sold.

Evidently the board also did not know how successful similar institutions in Europe had been, else it would not have expressed the fears and doubts it so often repeated in its various reports to Congress. Perhaps the board did not understand the principles of cooperation. Perhaps it thought that a cooperative bank was a mutual bank. Color is given to this last suggestion by the fact that in its last annual report the board refers to the Federal land banks as "mutual" instead of cooperative.

Whatever reasoning the board may have followed, the fact remains that the board caused to be prepared and introduced in the last session of Congress a bill depriving the stockholders of majority representation on the directorate of each of the cooperative banks and giving to the Government the right to appoint a majority of such directors.

Now, as to the real effect of all this. Evidently, if this amendment to the law is allowed to stand, then there is an end of the cooperative principle in connection with the farm-loan system. The stockholders may subscribe to the capital stock, but, having no effective voice, they can not say to what extent, or when, the land bank shall function. They can not say even that it shall function to any extent whatsoever. They can not say what expenses shall be incurred in operation. They can not order a distribution of profits. And they can no longer obtain money at the actual cost of hiring it in the money markets. Thus they are deprived of the chief cooperative benefits intended under the law.

Thus we see that every important advantage which farmer borrowers could derive from ownership of stock in the Federal land banks, and from the operation of these institutions on the cooperative principle, was lost to the farmers the moment they were deprived of majority control in the banks.

It was the purpose of Congress in creating the cooperative Federal land banks to guarantee to the farmer that he could surely and at all times obtain a loan if he could furnish acceptable security. It was intended to provide financial machinery which could respond unfailingly to the farmer's need. By the farmer subscribing to the capital stock of the bank in an amount equal to 5 per cent of the loan asked for the bank always would be able to grant the loan. That is, the bank never could say to an applicant: "Sorry, but we are loaned up"; or, "We would like to accommodate you, but we can not get the money." As a Federal land bank, under the law, is permitted to issue bonds up to twenty times its capital, the bank would be able to issue bonds for the amount of the loan asked for, provided its capital stock had been increased by an amount equal to 5 per cent of the loan. Thus, the first step in obtaining a loan from a cooperative Federal land bank is that of subscribing to the stock of the bank. Once the stock is subscribed and paid for, the next step is for the bank to issue and sell bonds and turn the proceeds over to the applicant for the loan.

TECHNICAL SIDE OF CASE

To be sure, all this involves careful appraisal of the land, determination of the title, and obtaining of abstract and recording the mortgage. But these things are matters of routine incident to all loans on farm mortgages. The new thing, the big thing, the vital principle, was the assurance to the borrowing farmers that the bank never would deny them loans, no matter how hard the times or how tight money might be, provided the borrower could furnish satisfactory security and meet the legal requirements.

This advantage alone was sufficient to warrant the farmer's purchase of stock in the land bank. But this was not the only advantage. The law provided not only that the borrowers should own the bank but that they should control the bank, elect a majority of directors and through the directors choose the officers, select the management, and determine the policies of the institution. Such control would enable the stockholders to say to what extent the bank should function, when it should issue bonds, whether it should issue few or many bonds or no bonds whatsoever, and what rate of interest the bonds should bear, with the approval of the Farm Loan Board. Under such circumstances the farmer stockholder could control the expenses, and in so doing he could govern the earnings of the bank and require distribution of the surplus, thereby automatically reducing the cost of his loan.

In a word, when the farmer purchased stock in the Federal land bank system, he did so on the representation that he would be freed from the clutches of the mortgage shark, that he could obtain any amount (up to the bank's legal limit) that his security would warrant without unreasonable delay, that the interest charge would be reasonable, that there would be no commission paid to anyone, and that he would share in whatever profits the bank made.

It is pertinent to inquire if there is anything in the experience of these cooperative banks to indicate that the loss of control over these institutions would deprive the stockholders of any of the advantages named.

There was such an occasion in the year 1921. It was a sad experience, because not only were farmers deprived of the opportunity to borrow at these banks at a time when they were in great need and when all agriculture was prostrated, but the circumstances were such as to disclose how completely the frailty of human nature, how prejudice, how inexperience, how lack of understanding may defeat the purposes of the wisest legislation.

Well along in the year of 1921 the Federal land banks refused to receive applications for loans, assigning as the reason for this refusal the fact that they had no funds. What had happened was this: The Government, represented by the Federal Farm Loan Board, a bureau of the United States Treasury, was still in complete control of all the Federal land banks. Under the terms of the law as originally passed the permanent organization of each of these institutions should have been installed with a board of nine directors to choose the officers and select the management. But the Farm Loan Board had misgivings. In its first annual report it expressed the fear that the bonds of banks controlled by stockholders, who also were borrowers at these institutions, could not be sold in the investment market. Accordingly, the board took steps to extend the period of complete Government control. It caused to be introduced and passed through Congress an amendment to the Federal farm loan act to the effect that the temporary organizations (which were not elected but were appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board) should be continued for a time. The exact provision was that the United States Treasury should buy $200,000,000 of Federal land bank bonds and the temporary organizations should be continued so long as the Treasury held any of these bonds.

Thus it happened that in 1921 the farmers had been deprived of the control of the institutions which they owned. It was unfortunate for the borrowing farmer that the then farm loan commissioner took the position that the Federal land banks should not issue bonds in excess of $150,000,000 a year, and maintained his position by the arbitrary statement that the market would not absorb more than that amount. It was unfortunate for the commissioner that at the very time he made this public announcement Federal land bank bonds were selling in the market at a premium.

Here, then, was the situation: Investors were clamoring for the bonds of the Federal land banks and offering a premium for them; the farmers were clamoring for money; the Federal land banks were turning down the farmers' applications because they had no money; the Federal Farm Loan Board, in a position of supreme control, refused to let the Federal land banks assemble funds by the issue of bonds.

Thus, though agriculture was prostrated by the deflation following the war and sorely in need of capital, though it owned a system of land banks designed to function in times of need, this magnificent financial machinery was stopped because the men who owned it and sought to use it could not control it and had to yield to the mistaken judgment of an inexperienced, ill-informed political board at Washington.

Now that the law has been amended so that the owners of these banks never can control them, such a situation easily may arise at any time, whenever the human frailties of the personnel of the Federal Farm Loan Board at Washington are again in evidence.

The owners of these banks are wholly without any means of preventing such a condition from becoming chronic. Responsibility for depriving the owners of these banks of the right to control them rests squarely upon the recommendations of the Federal Farm Loan Board.

It is difficult to account for the attitude of the Farm Loan Board. Evidently its fear of the cooperative principle was genuine. However, granting the genuineness of this alarm, it should have been dispelled by knowledge of what had been done by the cooperative banks of Europe through 150 years of successful operation. At one time some of the members of the Farm Loan Board, the former Farm Loan Commission in particular, held that it was not to be expected that the Federal farm loan system would do a large business, but that in doing a small volume of business it would act merely as a governor on interest rates and commissions charged by old-time mortgage concerns.

It was charged by some of the excited friends of cooperation that the board had taken its stand against full and free operation of the Federal land banks merely as a means of favoring the joint-stock land banks, which were organized by private capital and operated by private initiative. This charge, of course, was ridiculous, for, indeed, the board had placed more obstructions in way of joint-stock land banks than it had in the path of Federal land banks. Individual members of the board frequently have expressed their partiality for the Federal land banks by slightingly referring to joint-stock land banks as "stepchildren" of the system. In several of its annual reports to Congress the board recommended the elimination of joint-stock land banks from the system. In this, too, I think the board's position was ill considered.

Some have charged that the Farm Loan Board was endeavoring to limit the operations of both Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks in an effort to favor the old commission-charging mortgage brokers. This charge also is unconvincing, for evidence is not wanting that, despite appearances, the members of the Farm Loan Board, individually and collectively, were very jealous of the future of the farm-loan system.

Lack of knowledge, lack of comprehension, lack of vision—and, withal, lack of experience—seem to have been the major faults through which the Farm Loan Board worked itself into its unfortunate and untenable position.

Surely Congress at its next session will repeal this obnoxious amendment to the Federal farm loan act, which, if permitted to stand, would forever deprive the owners of the Federal land banks of control.

Such a system with such a record of success should not be despoiled by a careless and ill-informed Congress.

COMPENSATION TO INJURED EMPLOYEES

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senate yesterday passed the bill (H. R. 7041) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916. The Senate adopted an amendment to the bill. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, ask for a conference with the House, and that the President pro tempore appoint the conferees on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the President pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SHORTRIDGE, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. CARAWAY.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, on yesterday a conference report was submitted on the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Chocktaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes. There has been some mistake made inadvertently in the report and it will be necessary to refer the matter to the conference committee. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to withdraw the report of the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report is withdrawn.

COTTON PRICES

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a letter from a constituent of mine dealing with some legislation now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

The letter is as follows:

MAGNOLIA, ARK., May 16, 1924.

Hon. T. H. CARAWAY,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I notice that a resolution was passed by the Senate a few days ago calling upon the United States Tariff Commission to determine the cause of unemployment and depression in the New England cotton mills. Also noticed in the papers a short time ago that the cotton factories, in a meeting at Boston, passed a resolution whereby they demanded a tariff on imported cotton goods upon the alleged ground that the foreign mills, because of cheap labor, can undersell cotton goods in America.

From my investigation and knowledge of the matter the trouble in part is, and has been, with the textile mills—their concerted attempt to depress the price of raw cotton. Last year the spinners of this country, and especially those of New England, concertedly fought the price of cotton to such an extent that they overstayed themselves. While they were fighting down the price in this country the European spinner was buying. He continued to buy cotton. The receipts of American cotton at Liverpool and their daily sales, which I noted, show conclusively that they were taking care of themselves. They bought cotton from 20 cents to 28 cents last year, while our spinners were enjoying themselves in a boycott against the price. They fought and lost.

The European spinners continued to buy cotton, while the American spinners, under the leadership of one of the greatest speculators this country has ever known, fought and depressed the price from 37½ cents to 26 cents. They sold their cotton, instead of buying it, for the purpose of depressing the price. They killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. They educated the public, by propaganda through that part of the press which is controlled by big business, that dry goods could not be sold; that the public refused to pay the price; and consequently the retail merchants of the country refused to buy upon a declining market in the face of such propaganda. They killed the trade, and, of course, the public can not be blamed, and much less can the merchants be blamed for their failure to buy, when they were drilled continuously that these factories were filled to overflowing with goods that could not be sold. The scarcity of the raw material, the depletion of stocks, conclusively convince, and did convince, anyone with any pretense to a knowledge of the facts that their propaganda was fictitious and false. It is now amusing to see them howl because of the disastrous results of their vicious propaganda.

The textile mills of this country, and especially those in New England, should learn, and the sooner the better, that a reasonable price for the raw material will be a boon to their business. They can prosper, and will prosper, if the cotton-producing world is paid a fair, reasonable price for the product. The cotton producer of this country, as all know, has never received the value of his cotton. He and his wife and children have toiled from early morn until late at night in order to produce the staple necessary to clothe the world.

It is impossible under present conditions for a man and a mule to make more, on an average, than three bales of cotton. This amount of cotton at an average of 30 cents per pound, including the seed, will bring him about $500. His farm has cost him at least $2,000. The interest on this at 8 per cent will be $160. His taxes are $30. The cost of his mule is $180, and the interest on that is $14.40. The depreciation in the value of the mule will be $20 per year. His plow gear, plows, and tools will cost him $60, and the interest on this will be $4.80. The depreciation of such gear and tools and implements will be $15. The seed for planting will cost him $20. His fertilizer will cost him $152. The depreciation in his fences and cotton houses will amount to $15 per year. At the present time he will need, in order to produce that three bales of cotton, arsenate of the value of $20. The taxes on his mule and implements will be $6. He will be compelled for ginning that cotton to pay $15. The feed for the mule will cost him $150. There will be other costs and incidental expenses, but without counting other costs we have here a total expense, reasonably calculated, of $622.50. This does not take into consideration the cost or interest thereon or depreciation of a wagon with which to haul his seed, his fertilizer, and his cotton. It does not take into consideration the clothing and food necessary to support the producers of the cotton. Anyone can see that in this present day of civilization that civilized men are going to rebel against any such slavery. The time has come for the textile mills of this country to cease fighting the cotton farmers of the United States.

I observed considerable propaganda in that same press to the fact that the whole country will be hurt unless the South raises more cotton; that other countries will proceed to raise the necessary cotton for the world. The mills are howling for fear that such a calamity will happen. In such a case these same mills will be paying to the foreigner the prices which Liverpool has been paying for American cotton, which runs on an average of about $30 per bale more than the American spinner pays for it. The only way in the world to remedy the condition will be for the American cotton farmer to receive a fair price for his cotton. The spinners of this country are enforcing an unnatural condition upon the producers of cotton. They are destroying themselves. They are not constructive, but are destructive. They have no sympathy for the cotton farmer. They grudge him every penny he receives from the sweat of his brow and that of his children. So long as this condition exists a tariff wall will not remedy the evil. Vicious propaganda will not cure the condition.

The textile mills last fall elected to fight the price of cotton; they refused to buy; they permitted the foreign spinners of the world, they permitted foreign countries, bankrupt so far as finances are concerned, to buy the choicest American cotton while they carried on their boycott. They have permitted the choicest American cotton to leave this country, and now they should be estopped from clamoring for a tariff wall. They should be estopped from howling about their present condition, due, as stated, to their concerted attempt to depress the price of cotton and to their claim of an enormous supply of cotton goods on hand which could not be sold. They have been caught, hoist by their own petard, and should stand up like a man and suffer the consequences until they reform and change their policy.

While on this matter, allow me to suggest that, among other evils, is that of the cotton exchanges. As now constituted, they serve no useful purpose to the farmer, but are detrimental to him. They serve no useful, legitimate purpose to the spinner or other user of raw cotton. The reason for this is that no spinner can buy on the exchange the cotton he wants, and therefore he does not buy. But the exchanges say they are useful for hedging cotton. Let us grant it, but the contract should specify the cotton hedged. Let the seller or buyer hedge his own cotton and not the other fellow's.

If the spinner or actual user of cotton buys on the exchange, he can not get the grade, quality, or staple he needs. The seller can deliver to him the lowest grade, quality, and staple he pleases, or any other kind within numerous classes, only one of which the user of cotton can use.

A spinner needs a certain grade, quality, and staple. Can he buy it on either of the exchanges? He can not. Of course, he may do as the exchanges say he may do, and that is as follows: If he desires 100 bales of a certain grade, quality, and staple, then let him buy 1,000 bales and pick out what he wants. If he can not get the 100 bales he needs out of the 1,000, let him buy 5,000 bales and from that pick out what he needs, if he can, or buy more, and then resell the balance which he can not use. This is the argument of the exchanges. Let him buy and buy until by chance he gets what he needs by selection.

The exchanges further try to justify such unilateral and uncertain contracts by saying that when the spinner buys in the country he buys different grades, staples, and colors from the low to the high. But the difference is that the cotton is first classed, and the buyer knows what he buys. The fact is, he generally buys uniform bales and what he has a place for.

The spinner does not say anything, because selling cotton on the exchanges helps him. He knows that there is no legitimate buying on the exchange. In other words, the spinner and actual users of cotton do not buy cotton on the exchange and then spin it. He can not afford to buy, because he does not know what he buys. A purchaser of 100 bales of cotton on the exchange can not guess in 10 miles as to what kind, grade, quality, or staple he will get. He may get strict low middling of 1 1/16-inch staple, or he may get good middling of ⅞ inch staple, or he may get 100 bales as different from each other as the colors of Joseph's coat and with as many different grades. It may be stained, gin cut, or of varying colors and of many different lengths. When sales like that fix the price, what is the result?

If a spinner or legitimate user of cotton could buy on the exchanges what he wants, then these institutions would serve a useful purpose. Gambling would be eliminated. But now it is worse than buying a "pig in a poke." What a fine thing it would be if the actual users of cotton could get what they want on the exchanges?

The Federal Trade Commission is investigating the advisability of permitting deliveries in southern warehouses of cotton sold on the exchanges. This will be disastrous unless the contract of sale permits the buyer to know what he is buying and where delivery is to be made. If the law will force the seller to designate the kind, grade, quality, and staple he sells, or reasonably so, or if the buyer can know what he is buying and where delivery is to be made, then it matters not where the warehouses are, whether in China, Texas, South Africa, or Magnolia, Ark.

Yours very truly, WADE KITCHENS.

NAVY CONTRACT FOR COTTON KHAKI CLOTH

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, for some time there has been some criticism in the New England press in reference to a cotton khaki cloth contract made some time ago by the Secretary of the Navy for uniforms for marines. I have asked an official explanation from the Secretary of the Navy as to this matter and the future policy of the Navy, and I think the country ought to have this information, and I request it be printed in the RECORD. I ask permission that with this letter there be printed in the RECORD resolutions which have been sent to me upon the subject, and that they be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter and resolutions are as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, May 19, 1924.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your letter of the 16th instant, I have to advise you that no contract has been made recently with a foreign concern for cotton khaki cloth; furthermore, there is none in contemplation. An order was placed about a year ago for some 500,000 yards of cotton khaki cloth for the Marine Corps with a concern in Manchester, England. The contract for this material, which was approved by the department, was made in July, 1923.

In brief, the history of the situation is as follows: At the time this purchase was under contemplation American mills were fully occupied on the production of staple goods. The department endeavored, by sending out specifications and invitations to bid to 55 manufacturers and dealers, by special letters to all concerns known to have fiber-dyeing apparatus, and by articles in trade papers, to obtain bids for this cloth. Bids were opened on April 9, 1923, and only one American manufacturer submitted a bid. This bid was submitted by the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. at $0.642 per yard. This was approximately 100 per cent higher than the Marine Corps had previously paid for this khaki even during war time and was considered excessive. Upon the failure to obtain satisfactory bids under the opening of April 9, and in view of the fact that the stock of khaki on hand was very low and required replacement, it became necessary to make an immediate purchase in order to continue the manufacture of clothing for the marines. A quotation received from an English firm offered khaki suiting, delivered in New York, at $0.27 per yard. Adding duty to this would bring the cost to only $0.37 per yard. The Amoskeag Manufacturing Co.'s bid, therefore, was approximately 80 per cent higher, and the Government stood to lose about $0.27 per yard if the bid of that company was accepted, or, figuring it another way, the cost if purchased from the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. would have been $321,000, whereas the cost purchased abroad, with duty, would amount to only about $185,000. However, no duty was paid, and the cost to the Marine Corps was therefore only $135,000.

The department naturally desires at all times to deal with American firms, and even at that time, with the wide differential in price, Secretary Denby did not authorize the award to the foreign firm until he had consulted with Government experts and had been advised that no hardship would result therefrom to American manufacturers and workingmen, because of the fact, as I have said before, that the American textile mills were fully occupied on the production of staple goods.

Sincerely yours,

CURTIS D. WILBUR.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF BOSTON CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
Boston, Mass., May 21, 1924.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Boston Central Labor Union Sunday, May 18, 1924, and I have been instructed to send copies of the same to you.

Respectfully yours,

P. H. JENNINGS,
Secretary-Business Representative.

Whereas the press of the country has announced the giving of a contract by the United States Government for 500,000 yards of khaki cloth to be manufactured by a firm in England, while there are thousands of textile workers out of work or on short time in this country; and

Whereas we have always been of the opinion that the United States Government was a government of the people, by the people, and for the people; and we have also been under the impression that the chief functions of our Government are the protection of our country, its institutions, and its people; and

Whereas the sending out of the country of a big contract while thousands of textile workers are in needy and destitute circumstances gives the workers a shock which tends to the conclusion that the lives and welfare of our people are of a secondary consideration, while the making or the saving of the dollar is of paramount importance; and

Whereas the present depression of business which is bringing misery and unrest to thousands of workers is, in the minds of many, a combined attack by the captains of industry to so manipulate trade and are trying to starve the workers into subjection so that when the time is ripe to reopen the mills and factories they will be forced to accept work and attend to more looms than heretofore at greatly reduced wages; and

Whereas the action of the Government seems to be in direct line in this policy by the letting of contracts to foreign competitors, thereby increasing the amount of unemployment: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the delegates of the Boston Central Labor Union in meeting assembled, enter our most emphatic protest against the action of the United States Government in sending business out of the country while thousands of American citizens and their dependents are in sore need of the necessaries of life; and be it further

Resolved, That we call upon all New England Senators and Congressmen to make an effort to protect one of the basic productions of New England from being crushed out of existence; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to each New England Senator and Congressman, and to the chamber of commerce.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate very long; but as a member of the committee which was directed to investigate the conduct of the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I think I should make a short statement regarding my conclusions and the course pursued by the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is the chairman.

Mr. President, Senators will recall that some time ago the morning newspapers published the statement that there had been an indictment found against the junior Senator from Montana alleging that he had perverted his influence as a Senator in connection with the prosecution of certain land matters pending before the Interior Department, for which he had agreed to receive and had received compensation. On the morning following that publication the junior Senator from Montana appeared in the Senate and denounced it as containing statements which were not true and stated that the attack on him was unjustified; that it was for blackmailing purposes, to prevent him from conducting the investigation of the Department of Justice in which he was then engaged. After having made his statement to the Senate, which was frank, candid, manly, and full, as any high-minded man would have done, he demanded that his colleagues in the Senate should order and conduct an investigation in order to determine whether or not he was worthy to continue as a Member of the Senate. Had he done otherwise he would have been subject to severe criticism. He did the only thing which a high-minded, conscientious, innocent man could do in order to meet his accusers and the charges against him before Members of the Senate, through a committee of the Senate, so as to determine whether or not he should continue to exercise the rights of a Senator from Montana. I wish to commend the high spirit, the manly and courageous conduct, which was then pursued by the junior Senator from Montana.

In some instances when indictments have been found or charges have been made against Senators they have delayed a demand for an investigation, but an innocent man wants to meet his accusers at once. Consequently, the junior Senator from Montana demanded an investigation, in order to determine whether or not he should continue to exercise his functions as a Senator and whether or not he was worthy to remain a Member of this honorable body. I think that demand on the part of the junior Senator from Montana was proper, was high-spirited, and was courageous. In pursuance of his demand, his colleagues concurring in the demand, an investigation was ordered.

What was the purpose of that investigation? It was not, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] seems to imagine, in order to determine whether or not the grand jury of Montana had probable cause to prefer the indictment. I am at a loss to understand why the Senator from South Dakota should arrive at such a conclusion in connection with the purposes of the investigation. Has the Senate a right to pass judgment on the action of grand juries? Under our system of government we have three coordinate branches of the Government—the judicial, the executive, and the legislative. Neither branch of Government has a right to infringe on the others. Under our Constitution the Senate is the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. So the Senate alone can determine whether or not the junior Senator from Montana was worthy to continue a Member of this body. I repeat that when this indictment was found the junior Senator from Montana promptly asked the Senate to pass upon that question. I wish again to commend the courage, the manhood, and the high sense of honor which induced him to make that demand. His action has been vastly different from the action of others in reference to accusations which have been made against them within the last few years, both in the other House and in the Senate.

The committee was appointed to investigate the facts in the case, but not the conduct of the grand jury of Montana which returned an indictment against the junior Senator from Montana. I would not serve on a committee which intended to infringe on the rights of either a grand jury or a petit jury. I would serve only on a committee whose purpose was to determine whether or not the junior Senator from Montana by any misconduct had rendered himself unworthy of membership in this body. He asked for the investigation; his colleagues demanded it; and the Senate unanimously passed the resolution, at his suggestion, providing for the investigation.

The Senator from South Dakota was present and heard the resolution read and heard the speeches which were delivered; and unless he was willing to serve on the committee to ascertain the facts in accordance with the idea and purpose of the resolution, he should at that time have declined to serve or should have let the Senate know what, in his opinion, should be the object and scope of such an investigation. I am astonished that such an excellent lawyer as the Senator from South Dakota should have had a perverted idea as to the purpose of the investigation.

Mr. President, the committee was presided over by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the committee was named by the President pro tempore of the Senate. There has been no criticism of the conduct of the committee; there has been no suggestion that there was any failure to examine any witnesses; but there has been sought to be created an impression that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee who united with him in his report were disposed to deal leniently with the Senator from Montana. As a Senator, I spurn that suggestion as false.

I wish to say, furthermore, that there is no Senator in this body who in character, in capacity, and in courage can surpass the senior Senator from Idaho. He has served in this body for many years and his colleagues realize that for capacity, for courage, for character, and for honor none can excel him. That is the impression not only in this body but also in the country. I wish to say, as a member of that committee, that the investigation was for the most part conducted by its chairman.

Now, let us see whether the Senator from Idaho is disposed to deal leniently with Senators who are accused of wrongdoing in this body. If I recall, but a few years ago there was a case pending in the Senate against Mr. Newberry, a member of the party to which the Senator from Idaho belongs, a man of great influence in the Republican Party and of great wealth. All the efforts that could be made in this body and elsewhere were made to retain him in his seat. The Senator from Idaho, with that courage, with that character, with that high sense of justice and honor which have always characterized him, concurred with many Senators that, on account of fraud and corruption in his election, Newberry should not be permitted to continue as a Member of this body. Was there a disposition evidenced by the senior Senator from Idaho at that time to deal leniently with wrongdoing by any Member of this body?

Mr. President, years back there was a case pending known as the Lorimer case, in which fraud and corruption in connection with his election by the Legislature of Illinois were charged. Lorimer was an attractive personality, a man who by his own efforts and ability had pushed his way to the front from the humblest walks of life. He was a power in the Republican Party; the absolute political master almost of Illinois and certainly the political boss of Chicago. If the Senator from Idaho could have been swayed by personal considerations, if he could have been induced to do otherwise than what he thought was honest and in accordance with the highest traditions of this body, it would have been in that case, for it was a case in which the man involved was one of the most potential members of his own party. Yet with courage and with character the Senator from Idaho stood for the expulsion of Lorimer.

I wish to repeat that the chairman of the select committee in character, in capacity, and in courage is unexcelled by any Member of this body, and I wish to resent any imputation on him as chairman of the committee which conducted the investigation as being desirous to whitewash or deal leniently with anyone.

What witnesses who knew any facts in connection with this case were not summoned? I should like the senior Senator from South Dakota to name a witness that he asked to have summoned or that anybody suggested knew anything about this transaction that was not compelled to come and testify before the committee. When Mr. Coan appeared before the committee and suggested that there were documents in the Department of Justice which might shed light on this case, I made the motion at once to have those documents produced, and all the other members of the committee concurred in it, without knowing the contents of those documents, and they were brought before the committee.

All the evidence that anyone could secure, all the evidence that Mr. Coan, who was sent by the Republican National Committee to run down certain stories in Montana was brought out, and all the witnesses that anyone knew of were summoned and cross-examined. They were cross-examined by the senior Senator from South Dakota. Therefore the Senate has all the evidence possible in this case to enable it to render a judgment.

I was astonished that the Senator from South Dakota should attack the report presented by the chairman of the committee on the ground that it might be used and distributed in Montana for the purpose of creating an impression favorable to Senator WHEELER and to that extent obstruct the administration of justice. That is the gravamen of his complaint against the committee and the reason why he refuses to exercise the functions and perform the duties imposed upon him by the Senate. I should like to ask him what does he think of his minority report being circulated under frank as a public document and distributed in Montana to prejudice the people of Montana against Senator WHEELER? In other words, according to the Senator from South Dakota, the proper course to pursue was to simply determine whether the grand jury had probable cause to consider the evidence before the grand jury, with nothing contradictory to it, with no witnesses for Senator WHEELER, and let that be used as a basis for the circulation of documents prejudicial to him in Montana. Is that the way justice is to be administered? Is that the way public opinion is to be controlled? It seems to me that if the facts stated in the majority report are true the people of Montana and the people of the United States are entitled to have them. Shall truth be suppressed to help the Government in a prosecution against the citizen? Is truth to be suppressed and ex parte affidavits circulated in order to administer justice? Tell the truth, state the facts, and let the chips fall where they may. That is the honest way for the Senate and the honest way for people to do in the conduct of affairs.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], on page 2 of his report, dismisses all the evidence of the witnesses introduced by Mr. WHEELER with a wave of the hand—

> None of the witnesses thus called at the instance of Senator WHEELER had appeared before the grand jury, and obviously their testimony can serve no useful purpose in determining the question of probable cause.

In other words, by his own statement he wanted this committee to make a report on the probable cause of the grand jury, include no consideration of the evidence introduced by Senator WHEELER, take a minority report filed by him that consists simply of ex parte evidence and affidavits, and let that be circulated in order to obtain justice in Montana.

I must say that that is wrong. The right way to do things is to tell the truth, regardless of who is hurt or who is helped. He has a misconceived idea of his Government who thinks that the Department of Justice can administer justice better by having the Senate suppress the facts and suppress the truth.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. If I heard the Senator from South Dakota correctly upon yesterday, he contended that the evidence that was submitted to the grand jury would warrant the grand jury, under the practices of grand juries, in bringing in the indictment; but when asked by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] whether all of the evidence submitted to the committee would in his opinion cause him to vote for the guilt of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], the Senator from South Dakota said "No." So it seems to me that while he contends that he has proven his case, that the grand jury, from the evidence they had, could find the indictment, he admits the case of WHEELER, on the other hand, that the rest of the evidence proves his innocence.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SWANSON. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Nevada misinterprets what I said, and draws a wrong conclusion. I said that I would not, perhaps, be willing to vote that Mr. WHEELER was guilty of the charges preferred by the grand jury, but that on the evidence submitted to the grand jury the question is one of probable cause. The other question is one of belief—a reasonable doubt. That is just the distinction between the two.

Mr. SWANSON. Here is the position the Senator took.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me answer the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall have to read from the RECORD what was said a little later, when I find the place, because the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] did not ask with regard to the evidence before the grand jury. I will read it from the RECORD. He asked if all the evidence taken before the committee led the Senator to believe that Mr. WHEELER was guilty or not guilty, and the Senator said that the evidence did not convince him that he was guilty. I will read that.

Mr. STERLING. It may be true that I said that in response to a question from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. PITTMAN. That is what I say.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but I still say that I think the evidence before the committee showed probable cause. It was sufficient to warrant the grand jury in finding the indictment. That is what I based my conclusion on—that the grand jury had sufficient evidence before it to warrant the returning of the indictment.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state the position of the Senator. The Senator states that if you will exclude every witness in this case that knew anything about the facts, exclude the testimony of Senator WHEELER introduced in his own behalf, and simply consider the ex parte affidavits and the ex parte evidence that was submitted to the grand jury, possibly they had probable cause; but if you will weigh all the evidence introduced before the committee, in the Senator's conscience he could not vote WHEELER guilty. That is his position, if I understand it.

Mr. STERLING. I might still be able to say that under the evidence submitted before the committee, and in the way in which the evidence was submitted before the committee, and all that——

Mr. SWANSON. What witness failed to appear that the Senator wanted, or failed to answer any question that the Senator wanted answered?

Mr. STERLING. I do not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. I say, what witness did the Senator desire to appear before the committee that the committee refused to send for?

Mr. STERLING. I have not charged that I desired any witness to appear before the committee that the committee refused to send for. I never have charged it for a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. Then what does the Senator mean by implying that there was a suppression of evidence?

Mr. STERLING. I have not implied that there was a suppression of evidence before the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator said "under the evidence submitted before the committee," and it carried the imputation that all the evidence was not before the committee. What evidence does the Senator know of that was not before the committee?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator need not be so fine-spun in his statements in regard to that. I have not intimated that there was a suppression of any evidence. Even if I thought there was, I have not so said in the Senate, nor have I so said to the committee, that there was any suppression of evidence.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator made the statement that on the evidence before the committee he could not say that Senator WHEELER was guilty.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. What evidence does the Senator know of that ought to have been before the committee that was not before it?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not think I should be asked to go into that question at the present time. I know what evidence was before the committee, and what evidence was before the committee that was also before the grand jury; and my statement was that if the evidence before the committee was the same as that before the grand jury it was sufficient to warrant the grand jury in returning the indictment. As to the guilt or innocence of the defendant, that will depend upon the evidence produced at the trial.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator thinks the right to occupy a seat in the Senate ought to be taken from the Senate, which is given by the Constitution the determination of that question, and decided by a petit jury?

Mr. STERLING. I do, most decidedly.

Mr. SWANSON. That is the Senator's position?

Mr. STERLING. And that has been my position from the very outset.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator's position is, then, that anybody could frame a case against a Senator, and have a corrupt jury return an indictment for any purpose, and then the Senate is not the judge of the election and qualification and expulsion of its Members. That is the way the Senator wants to defend the Constitution, is it? That is the position of this great champion defending constitutional rights, is it?

Mr. STERLING. I am defending the Constitution.

Mr. SWANSON. How?

Mr. STERLING. I am recognizing the three departments of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—and the judicial department has cognizance of this case now. It is before the district court for the State of Montana.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me get the Senator's position clearly. As a citizen, the State courts have jurisdiction. As a Senator, they have no jurisdiction. The Senate is investigating WHEELER's conduct, not as a citizen, but as a Senator, and the Senate is called on to report on his conduct as a Senator under the Constitution.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. Now the Senator, as a great defender of the Constitution, wants to leave to the grand jury and petit jury the qualification and expulsion of a Senator.

Mr. STERLING. It is not the province of the Senate, I say, to determine the guilt or innocence of a party who has been charged in a Federal court with an offense against a Federal statute.

Mr. SWANSON. But the Senator said a few minutes ago that it is the province of a grand jury and the province of a petit jury to pass on the qualification and expulsion of a Member of the Senate, and that the Senate must abide by that determination.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator understands my position.

Mr. SWANSON. I do, but I am astonished at any such position. I am astonished that the defender of the Constitution, the defender of the three coordinate branches of the Government, should come here and advocate on the floor of the Senate the doctrine that the election, qualification, and expulsion of Members of the Senate, given under the Constitution to the Senate alone, should be determined elsewhere. I agree that as a private citizen the grand jury and the petit jury have charge of the matter, and as a private citizen that verdict must stand or fall according to the courts; but the Senator comes in here and says that Senator WHEELER's qualification as a Senator must be determined by grand juries and petit juries. I say the Constitution does not give that right, and I am astonished that a Senator who has made a report and has spoken here so often in defense of the Constitution should surrender this right of the Senate anywhere when it is a coordinate branch of the Government.

If that were true, what would be the result? A Senator is indicted. It is a frame-up. There is no evidence to support the indictment. It is continued and delayed for years and years, as this case is being continued and delayed; and what must a Senator do? What must the Senate do? Must it allow a corrupt Member to vote here? Must it allow an improper Member to vote here? What is going to happen to the Senate? There is no chance then to get rid of a corrupt Member of the Senate, if the courts indict him, until the process of law has operated. That is the Senator's view of it. Corrupt men could stay here, with a delay of their cases and continuances, and serve their terms.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say——

Mr. SWANSON. Let me get through first with the other phase of this matter.

Mr. STERLING. A perfectly innocent man——

Mr. SWANSON. I do not yield now. I will yield later.

Now, let us take the other view of the matter. Here is the Department of Justice being investigated. Here is the Senate, which has selected—and the Senate made the selection—a man to conduct this investigation, and this investigation is very disagreeable to the Department of Justice.

The Department of Justice, unlike Senator WHEELER, does not want to be investigated. The minute charges were filed against Senator WHEELER he invited an investigation. As soon as they started the investigation of the Deparment of Justice it tried to avoid an investigation. It had to be forced and compelled to submit to an investigation, and did not invite it. It was forced on the Department of Justice, with much opposition on the other side of the Chamber. Now the Department of Justice desires to suppress this investigation. It is in accord with the Republican National Committee. The Republican National Committee has been denouncing this investigation, and standing by Mr. Daugherty, and abusing Senators, and abusing Republican Senators for not standing up and defending Daugherty.

Now what is done? They send Mr. Coan out there; and I will say that Mr. Coan was frank, was candid, and, as far as I can see, told the truth. He candidly admitted that he was employed to go to Montana to see if he could not find something against WHEELER, and, he implied, against the other Senator from Montana also, who were conducting investigations against this administration. He said they wanted to investigate some rumors that they had heard, and they wanted to know who this man WHEELER was.

Mr. STERLING. Stories.

Mr. SWANSON. Stories or rumors; I do not know which they were. I reckon they were stories, and they were afterwards disclosed to be absolutely false stories. I thank the Senator for making the correction. They did not even attain the dignity of rumors. Mr. Coan was employed, paid a salary, and he seems to have served his employers very well. He goes there and gets affidavits, and what does he say? He says practically that he did that because Republican Senators would not stand up and fight for Daugherty.

Now, Mr. President, look at this situation. Here is the committee of a great party—and I say "a great party" intentionally, a party with a great tradition and history—here is the organization of a great party in this country that competes for high honors and influence and power in this country, and yet it has been so perverted in its executive officers and control that that great party allows itself to be used as a means of employing a man to go and get some evidence against Senator WHEELER, who was conducting an investigation against the Department of Justice.

If the Attorney General had been a high-spirited man with a high sense of honor and refinement; if he had obtained any evidence against WHEELER he would have kept it to himself and not have preferred an indictment while this investigation was pending.

I do not believe there is a sensible and honorable Senator on the other side who, if he had been Attorney General and was being investigated, would have made himself party to a scheme to employ someone to go to the State of the Senator who was conducting the investigation to get evidence to indict him, and thus hold him up to blackmail.

Why did he do it? Senator WHEELER stated he heard rumors long before that he was to be framed up, and he did not believe it. Yet while this investigation was at its height this indictment was found. I would like to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he approves the conduct of that Republican National Committee.

Mr. STERLING. I stated yesterday—I stated to the Senator from Virginia—my position in that regard. I said by way of illustration that if the Democratic Party were the party in power, and the administration were Democratic, and stories had been circulated against a Republican candidate, the Democratic Party or its national committee would have been justified——

Mr. ROBINSON. Then the Senator does approve the action in going——

Mr. STERLING. I do not yield until I make my statement and finish it. The Democratic Party, or the national committee of that party, would have been justified in sending someone to investigate the stories against this Republican candidate for Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. If he were a candidate; but Senator WHEELER was not a candidate. He was simply conducting an investigation.

Mr. STERLING. Very well——

Mr. SWANSON. It was five or six years before he could be up for election. I might see, if a man was offering for office, and his merit was to be passed upon at the polls, why a committee should go and get some evidence as to whether people should vote for him or not; but Senator WHEELER was not a candidate. Senator WHEELER was investigating the administration of the Department of Justice.

Mr. STERLING. A candidate, or even a Senator——

Mr. SWANSON. He was not a candidate.

Mr. STERLING. Just a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Virginia yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. STERLING. Or perhaps even a Senator elect; Senator WHEELER had not yet taken his seat; no investigation of the Department of Justice had been begun at the instance of Senator WHEELER at that time. Nobody that I know of had ever anticipated for a moment that he would be active in the investigation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand that the Senator takes this position: That when a man is not a candidate for the Senate, but is a Senator discharging his duties under his oath, and representing a great State, not being a candidate for office, a national committee is justified in employing somebody to go and get evidence to indict him, and then turn it over to the Department of Justice, and have an indictment against him, provided he is conducting an investigation against the Department of Justice; and that is justified in morals? That is what occurred in this case.

Mr. STERLING. The witness, Glosser, had stated that he heard these stories, or that these stories had been heard in regard to Senator WHEELER, and that Senator WHEELER had been attacking the administration, had been attacking everybody, as he put it, in public life, and that it was thought worth while to investigate these stories which had been circulated in regard to Senator WHEELER, and therefore he went out at the instance of the National Republican Committee——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from South Dakota approve of the action of Mr Coan, prompted and inspired, as he said, by the Republican National Committee, when he sought to smear Mr. WHEELER and to stop him from the prosecution of the investigation of the Department of Justice?

Mr. STERLING. Well, he says that Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have asked the Senator from South Dakota a question which ordinary procedure would prompt him to answer "yes" or "no." The evidence before the committee of which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] is chairman and before the committee of which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is chairman discloses that Mr. Coan, at the instance of the Republican National Committee, went to a former assistant attorney general of the State of Montana and expressed a deliberate purpose to secure false testimony for the purpose of smearing Mr. WHEELER and for the purpose of stopping him in the prosecution of the investigation against the Department of Justice. I ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he approves of the action of Mr. Coan, so inspired by the Republican National Committee?

Mr. STERLING. I would not approve action of that kind——

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not ask the Senator from South Dakota what he would do; I ask him what he does.

Mr. STERLING. I am going to answer, Mr. President, in my own way, and the Senator from Arkansas can not put the words into my mouth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, when he fails to answer it "Yes" or "No"——

Mr. STERLING. If I have not yet answered the Senator, when I am through the Senate will know whether I have answered him.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate knows now that the Senator from South Dakota is declining to answer the question frankly.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, there was no such evidence before the Senate investigating committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. Wait until I get through——

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement of the Senator from South Dakota is so at variance with the record that I can not comprehend why he makes such a statement. The junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] yesterday read into the record the testimony to which I have referred, and called it to the attention of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SWANSON. I will read it to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I want to read from the testimony taken before our investigating committee——

Mr. ROBINSON. What difference does it make which committee it was before?

Mr. STERLING. It is not the same, according to the statement made by the junior Senator from Arkansas yesterday. He quoted testimony of another party taken before the Brookhart committee. I am referring to the testimony taken before our investigating committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, having gotten definitely what the views of the Senator from South Dakota are in reference to national committees——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, yes——

Mr. SWANSON. Investigating Senators when they are up for election, now I would like to ask him, if the Senator were Attorney General of the United States——

Mr. STERLING. Let me answer the other question first, that relating to Mr. Coan.

Mr. SWANSON. I will. I will read what Mr. Coan said.

Mr. STERLING. Attention was called——

Mr. SWANSON. I read:

I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER.

I asked the question which brought forth that answer. He said the national committee employed him, paid him to go there and investigate some of the stories about Senator WHEELER.

WHEELER had been attacking the administration and everybody in public life here, and nobody seemed to be willing to get up and answer him—

Why did not the Senator answer him then, and possibly we would not have had any investigation?

and they thought it was up to somebody to find out who this fellow was and what he had been doing.

He went there for that purpose because WHEELER dared to attack the administration. WHEELER was not a candidate for election. The election was five or six years off. He was discharging his duty as a Senator; no election was involved; and this national committee sent Coan out there to make an investigation, the result of which he reported to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice promptly finds an indictment against him.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator let me now refer to the testimony here?

Mr. SWANSON. I will.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, here is what Mr. Coan said in full in answer to a question by the Senator from Virginia:

Senator SWANSON. Did he tell you the purpose for which he employed you?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will not the Senator speak a little louder? We can not hear a word he is reading.

Mr. STERLING. The answer of Mr. Coan is:

Yes; I was sent out to Montana to investigate some of these stories about Senator WHEELER. WHEELER had been attacking the administration and everybody in public life here, and nobody seemed to be willing to get up and answer him, and they thought it was up to somebody to find out who this fellow was and what he had been doing.

Senator SWANSON. Who thought so?

Mr. COAN. The Republican National Committee.

Senator SWANSON. And they sent you there for that purpose?

Mr. COAN. Yes; I went out there, and, of course, I did not want any stories of dead men or train robbers, and I took affidavits where I got the stories.

And he did, and the Senator from Virginia knows to what affidavits he referred. He referred to two affidavits, the affidavits of Rhea and Glosser.

Mr. SWANSON. I will allude to those later.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator knows, further, that Rhea and Glosser were both before the investigating committee, and nothing in their oral testimony, though they were under examination and cross-examination for a long time, tended to contradict the story made in their affidavits.

Mr. SWANSON. I want to read——

Mr. STERLING. Allow me a little further. Reference was made by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and I think by the Senator from Virginia this morning, to what occurred in regard to Mr. Coan before another committee of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will just permit me a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. I can not yield for the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose the Senator from Virginia has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield further?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not yield any further. I heard the Senator on that phase of it, and his report was to the same effect. As I understand, the Senator approves of what occurred before our committee, but what was related before another investigating committee he did not approve. Does the Senator approve the national committee sending Coan to get something on WHEELER, because WHEELER was attacking the administration when there was no election pending?

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator be kind enough to inform me when the testimony was taken before the Brookhart committee——

Mr. SWANSON. He says, himself, because he was attacking the administration. Does the Senator approve that or not approve it? From the very language that is before our committee, it is very easy to see.

Mr. STERLING. I see nothing, as I said yesterday, in terms very reprehensible or objectionable, if stories have been started against a candidate or a Senator elect, I do not care whether he is a Republican or a Democrat——

Mr. SWANSON. I understand, then, that the Senator approves it?

Mr. STERLING. The national committee taking that matter in hand and investigating those stories.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the Senator approves it?

Mr. STERLING. I do not object to it.

Mr. SWANSON. If one does not object to it, he must approve it. Now, let us see the position the Senator occupies, what he thinks is an honest, fair, splendid, high, noble administration of a government; that whenever a Senator in opposition dares to attack an administration and they hear any kind of stories about them it is the duty of the Republican or Democratic committee to at once start an investigation of that Senator——

Mr. STERLING. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I am not going to yield any further.

Mr. STERLING. I did not say it was a duty; I said I saw nothing particularly objectionable about it——

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator approves it?

Mr. STERLING. Or reprehensible in it.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator approves it, practically. They will start an investigation of that Senator on any rumor and then ascertain by affidavits all they can, give it out to the papers, imply that they have more, coerce him, blackmail him, silence him, and the Senate will be subject to the coercive power of the Department of Justice or its committees.

Mr. STERLING. Now, the Senator——

Mr. SWANSON. I can not yield any more to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator should not be a catechist if he does not want me to interrupt him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia declines to yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I am sorry to see the Senator wants to apologize for this conduct. He does not seem to indorse it, but is trying to apologize for it. I think of all the reprehensible things I have ever seen is, when a Senator dares to do his duty, dares to say that the administration is not honest, the departments are not honest, dares to attack them, that he should be so treated as has Senator WHEELER. The party of opposition is for investigation to keep the party in power on the right pathway. If the Democrats are in power, it is the duty of the Republicans to keep the party on the pathway of honesty and justice. When the Republicans are in power it is the duty of everybody, both Republican and Democrat, to see that the party in power is fair and honest. What do we witness here? The administration is attacked. They hear little rumors in connection with Senator WHEELER, and they employ and pay a man to go to Montana and investigate him and get affidavits, for what purpose? Either for the purpose of besmearing him so an investigation which he is conducting will be discredited, or for the purpose of blackmailing him, which is equally discreditable.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SWANSON. No; I can not yield any further now. I say that would destroy the influence of the Senate. Is the investigation against Senator WHEELER as an individual? No. The investigation has been directed against him as a Senator and not as a citizen. If he had been guilty as a citizen of any wrong, his position as Senator should not shield him, but this effort was made to besmirch him as a Senator so as to control his senatorial conduct. I do not believe there is a high-minded, honorable Republican in the United States who wants to see party warfare conducted on high lines, who will approve of any such disreputable performance as that. That is in accord with the scheme of employing the detectives who went to the office of Senator LA FOLLETTE. Why? LA FOLLETTE dared to be courageous and honest and fearless in both Democratic and Republican administrations. Since the Republican administration has been in office he has dared to attack it. The same spirit that sent Coan to Montana sent this detective to go through the office of LA FOLLETTE to see if they could get some evidence there to besmirch him and destroy his influence or else to blackmail him. I say that is discreditable, and I regret that those in control of the national committee of a great party permitted such conduct to be done.

Now, let us see about these rumors upon which this conduct was based. What is the evidence of Glosser? All hearsay except one transaction. Glosser's evidence is that he heard Campbell had employed him about permits. In his ex parte affidavit Campbell denies it. Then he testified about a conversation that occurred when Rhea was present at a hotel in Montana, and Glosser and Rhea conferred in accord with this matter. This is all the evidence there is in the case. The Senator may search it to the fullest extent and here is all the evidence, that Glosser and Rhea testified that they had a conference and WHEELER was present in connection with a suit that was pending in the State court, and Campbell was trying to get Rhea to employ WHEELER in connection with a permit or a case that he had and told him he could be of service. WHEELER said nothing. Not a word did WHEELER say. It was the MacGowan contract that was owned by Rhea and not by Campbell, and Rhea was trying to get Campbell to employ him. Rhea himself, the chief witness, says he did not employ him, made no contract with him, and never paid him a cent, never agreed to pay him a cent, and that another lawyer represented him. Consequently by their own witness Rhea they are read out of court, and they can not contradict that. That is all the evidence in the case upon which they could base a rumor, even a suspicion, even a suggestion; and their own witness said he did not employ him and did not agree to employ him. WHEELER said nothing, and did nothing in connection with that permit.

The only other matter was a telegram of March 8, which WHEELER sent, telling him to send information in regard to the permits in connection with the Standard Oil property, so if he wanted to do so so he could present the matter intelligently to the Interior Department. Let us examine that. That is what I think the Senator from South Dakota has read a dozen times. That seems to be his rock of strength and pillar of support for the indictment. Without this, the whole fabric falls. What are the facts in that case as disclosed? The Standard Oil Co. had gotten a permit—mark me, now—from Campbell. They got a permit from Campbell and the Standard Oil Co. was interested in it, and not Campbell. WHEELER said they took him in office and talked with him about the permit the Standard Oil Co. had gotten, and the Standard Oil Co. were interested in it, and not Campbell. That is not denied. The Standard Oil Co. was interested in that permit, and they talked to WHEELER about it. The Standard Oil Co. never paid WHEELER a cent, and never promised to pay him a cent. They never agreed to pay him a cent. If he had appeared before the department he would have appeared as representing a constituent, a company that never paid him a cent, and never agreed to pay a cent, and under no circumstances could there be any violation of the statute. If we take the worst view of it, as advocated by the Senator from South Dakota, that is the situation. He knows the Standard Oil Co. never agreed to pay WHEELER a cent. He knows the Standard Oil Co. never paid him a cent.

Mr. STERLING. Has there been any contention, may I ask the Senator, that the Standard Oil Co. ever paid him a cent?

Mr. SWANSON. The Standard Oil Co. alone was interested in that permit, and if he appeared before the Interior Department when he sent the telegram it was for a company that had not paid him a cent, had not agreed to pay him a cent, and he was simply representing a constituent in doing the work, like hundreds of constituents are represented without pay or without compensation. That is all the evidence there is in the case. That is all the evidence offered, even in the form of a suggestion, taking the worst view of it.

Let us see what we have. To contradict that, the Senator from South Dakota waves it aside and says it must not be considered. I want to read his position again. In order to make any case whatever that could be used as a document to circulate in Montana to the prejudice of Senator WHEELER it was necessary to ignore all the evidence in the case and to simply get down to a little, simple proposition: Did the grand jury have probable cause? That is the only way they could get one little drop of mud to stick to WHEELER. That was the only pathway they could pursue. Where was that line of defense first suggested? Not by the Senator from South Dakota, but by Coan himself. Coan suggested that when he was before the committee. He came in after all the evidence had been disclosed and they seemed to abandon everything except was there a probable cause for the grand jury to find the indictment? Coan appeared before the committee, and the chairman of the committee asked him:

> Mr. Coan, do you know of your own knowledge from having talked with Mr. Campbell in the presence of Mr. WHEELER, or talked with Mr. WHEELER, or in any other way, of first knowledge, with reference to the employment of Mr. WHEELER as attorney for Mr. Campbell?
>
> Mr. COAN. I could not be expected to know that, Senator, because I was not there at the time.
>
> Senator STERLING. Just answer the question, Mr. Witness.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. That is true; but I thought, in view of the things being said around, that you had some knowledge that I did not know how you got.
>
> Mr. COAN. No; mine is all through affidavits.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. You have no knowledge, then, except what came to you through statements of other parties?
>
> Mr. COAN. You mean in regard to his employment?
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Yes.
>
> Mr. COAN. No. I was not subpœnaed here to testify about his employment. Will you read me, does not the subpœna say "the circumstances surrounding the finding of an indictment against Senator WHEELER?" That is what my subpœna said.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. I do not know what the subpœna said. I know what we are inquiring about.

That is the first time that anyone suggested before the committee that the inquiry was with reference to the circumstances surrounding the indictment and whether they had probable cause to return it.

The senior Senator from South Dakota had not suggested it up to that time. The first man that suggested it, the first man that had the acumen and the sense to change in this way, was Coan, a smart newspaper fellow who had been employed to besmear WHEELER, and he conceived the idea, "We will now change this investigation to the question of probable cause of the grand jury and put the grand jury on trial."

My friends, has the time come that the Senate is going to investigate grand juries? Senator WHEELER is entitled to no protection, no defense, no accusation so far as a grand jury or petit jury of the country is concerned. When a man comes before the grand juries and petit juries, he is neither Senator, governor, nor mechanic. All stand alike before the courts. We have no right to investigate whether the grand jury's finding was probable or improbable, just or unjust, or as to whether the verdict of a petit jury is just or unjust. The Constitution has given the power to the Senate to purge itself, to keep itself clean, to keep itself composed of honorable, worthy, and noble men, and when the Senate is deprived of that privilege it ceases to be one of the coordinate branches of the Government. A Member has rights in the Senate, and when he is assailed either by newspapers, indictment, or other source of attack, to rise to a question of personal privilege and have his honor either vindicated or destroyed by a committee report and vote of the Senate. All Senator WHEELER said was that his honor had been attacked, his integrity had been attacked, he had been assailed, and he came before the Senate as an honorable man, as a high-spirited and sensitive man, and said, "I do not wish to associate with Members of the Senate, I do not wish to be in this honorable body if I am guilty of this offense. I demand an immediate investigation, and that the members of the committee be named by the presiding officer of this Senate belonging to an opposite political party." I want to commend the honor, the feeling of pride that a Senator like that has.

What does the Senator from South Dakota want? Does he want the Senate to say, "We will not vindicate you. We will not have anything to do with this attack on you. You can be assaulted from all sources. You can sit here representing the great State of Montana and have your influence destroyed, your power destroyed, your reputation destroyed by whispers and rumors and by an indictment and the case continued until your term is up, and we will give you no protection." I am proud that Senators in these days feel a pride in their honor, their integrity, and their reputation. I am proud that Montana has a Senator who feels that way and who, the minute his honor, his integrity, and character are challenged, says "I meet my accusers."

Now, let us see what the evidence in this case is. The evidence against Senator WHEELER was of the flimsiest character; that is the kind of evidence that was before the grand jury; that is all that could be scraped with a fine-tooth comb against the junior Senator from Montana.

It has been stated that Mr. WHEELER made a contract to represent Gordon Campbell before the Department of the Interior in order to get permits for him in violation of the statute; in other words, he is accused of selling his influence as a Senator for money. That is the substance of the accusation. He challenged that statement. We are called on to decide, Did he sell his influence as a Senator for money?

The Senator from South Dakota has stated that the evidence does not justify the contention that he did sell his influence for money, and that if he were called on to vote on the question he would vote not guilty; but he thinks that the case ought to be continued; he finds that the grand jury had a probable cause for returning the indictment, and he is willing to have that finding circulated all through Montana and to that extent prejudice the petit jury when they come to try the case, but he thinks that no report should be made here vindicating the Senator from Montana, if he is entitled to vindication, because it might be circulated in Montana, and, if true, it would put the Government at a disadvantage.

The Government at a disadvantage with truth being circulated! The Government at a disadvantage when a citizen is on trial and the facts are officially known! That government ought to be cursed, that government ought to be driven from power, which needs protection by a suppression of the truth and facts. Such action might embarrass the enemies of WHEELER; it might embarrass the district attorney of Montana, who has venom against him; it might embarrass the Department of Justice, which started out either to blackmail him or destroy his character, to have the truth and facts known; but God knows no temple of justice was ever yet desecrated by considering the facts and the truth. This is the first time I have ever known the position to be taken that justice could be perverted by a publication of the truth. Slander is always hurt by a propagation of truth; rumors are always destroyed by the circulation of truth. It is only those who wish to thrive and succeed with slander and by false accusations and by rumors who desire to suppress the truth.

The committee felt that the junior Senator from Montana was entitled either to acquittal or conviction. We determined to get all the facts and all the truth, and I wish to say that the Senator from Montana comported himself before the committee with that same sense of honor, that same sense of integrity and delicacy which have characterized him throughout this entire case. He felt a delicacy in approaching the members of the committee in reference to any facts and matters, and, as to the witnesses, he showed that he had that sensitive pride of honor and sensitive pride of propriety which I am glad to see illuminate public life in these days. I repeat that only flimsy excuses have been presented in opposition to the majority report.

Now, let us see what the evidence is. There are facts in this case that are not dependent upon testimony sufficient absolutely to acquit the junior Senator from Montana. What are the facts? The junior Senator from Montana appeared in case after case in the Montana courts, cases involving millions of dollars; he fought vigorously, actively, energetically, in the State courts. Then his enemies tried to create the impression that the fee was so high it must have included an obligation to appear before the Department of the Interior. In view of the amount involved, the briefs filed, and the efforts made, and successfully made in the conduct of the litigation, there is no lawyer with any reputation and standing who can say that the fee was an exorbitant one. It was a small fee in comparison with fees that are frequently paid.

There is no dispute that Mr. WHEELER appeared in the State courts of Montana; there is no dispute that he filed briefs there; there is no dispute that there were 19 or 20 cases pending in the State courts which justified his employment. Those facts can not be disputed.

Now, let us go further. Let us see what the contract was. Mr. WHEELER did not know Gordon Campbell. Mr. WHEELER is a vigorous, active, fighting man. That is the reason the Department of Justice has sought either to destroy or to blackmail him. He is a valiant knight, a fighter, and consequently he must either be destroyed or suppressed. Mr. Campbell said he employed him because he had lawyers who would not fight; that he had lawyers who every time they came into court would compromise the cases involving his property, resulting in giving away something instead of winning his suit. Campbell said: "I consulted about an attorney." Stout was the editor of a newspaper and had served for four years in Congress. Mr. Campbell testified, "We talked about Mr. WHEELER, and Stout recommended that I should employ WHEELER." Campbell said, "I do not know WHEELER, but I know he is a fighting man. I want him and should like to have him." Stout himself went to see WHEELER and told him that Gordon Campbell wanted to employ him. What did he tell Stout? Stout has no interest in this case; he ran against WHEELER for the Senate, if I mistake not. Stout said that WHEELER asked him the character and nature of the litigation. Then he testified—and it can not be controverted, that WHEELER told him he would agree to represent Campbell in this litigation but would not—now, I desire Senators to listen to this—would not represent him in any matters before the Interior Department. That was the beginning of the employment of Mr. WHEELER by Mr. Campbell. That fact is testified to by a man who served four years in Congress, a man whom Members of the Senate know as a man of high character and standing, and who has no interest in this matter at all.

Campbell testified that WHEELER distinctly told him he would confine his activities to litigation in the State courts of Montana. The only witnesses who knew directly about the contract testified exactly to the same effect.

Then Mr. WHEELER'S partner, Mr. Baldwin, was called to the stand. Mr. Baldwin impressed me as an able, splendid, fine lawyer. He could look you in the eye without a quiver. He is one of those men of whom, by looking in his face, it may be said he is a man of integrity and character and worthiness. He testified—and his testimony is not controverted—that the agreement was just as Campbell stated, and that nothing was done before the Interior Department by Mr. WHEELER.

Mr. Campbell had an attorney of his own to attend to all his land matters and permits, a lawyer by the name of Beaulieu. Mr. Beaulieu testified that the agreement was as has been indicated, and that Baldwin and WHEELER had nothing whatever to do with the permits or any matters before the Interior Department.

That, it would seem, ought to be conclusive evidence on that point, but there is evidence more conclusive than that. The contract, when made, affected property which was in the hands of trustees, and the contract could not be valid until it was ratified by those trustees. The contract, as the Senators know, was for a retainer of $10,000 a year, and there were three trustees who had to approve the contract before it could be valid and WHEELER could get the money. Mr. Harvey, one of the trustees, testified that at a meeting of the trustees the question of WHEELER'S employment came up and they agreed to pay $10,000, but it was distinctly understood that the employment of WHEELER did not extend beyond the carrying on of litigation in the State courts. So Mr. Campbell, the active manager, one of the trustees, in fact, all of the men who knew anything about the contract, have testified explicitly as to the terms of the contract. What more evidence could be desired than that?

But suppose the contract did include more than has been proven and required Mr. WHEELER to appear before the Interior Department. Governor Spry, Commissioner of the General Land Office, in the Interior Department, testified that Mr. WHEELER did not appear before that office in the case of any permit; he did not try to secure any permit for Campbell, and that nothing whatever was done by Mr. WHEELER before the Interior Department contrary to the statute in the effort in any way to secure a permit for Campbell or his companies. I should like for some one with ingenuity to tell me how a case could be more completely and more thoroughly proven than this case has been. Where is there anything left on which rumor and suspicion may hang?

Mr. President, with this state of facts, is or is not the junior Senator from Montana entitled to vindication? He has asked the Senate to pass judgment on him. The minute that his integrity and honor as a Senator were challenged, he accepted the challenge and asked the Senate to pass on the question. The suggestion is now made that the Senate should not pass on it. Why was not the objection raised when the resolution was submitted, considered, and adopted? Senator WHEELER was attacked in the newspapers, and it was said, "A court will try him; he will not be tried by a committee of the Senate." However, he met the challenge, and he said, "I want the Senate to try me, and if I am not worthy to be a Member of the Senate, I want my colleagues to say so. Let everyone come and testify against me as to anything that may be wrong; hear them; and then pass a verdict on me." I think that was the manly course to follow; that was the honest way to proceed; that was a high-spirited way for a Senator to act. When he confronts the Senate in this way there is but one thing for the Senate to do, and that is to face the issue squarely and fairly and not to dodge it and leave him subject to rumor and suspicion. All the junior Senator from Montana asks in this case is that the Senate pass upon the question whether he is guilty of the charges set forth in the indictment.

As I have already said, the investigation in this case was conducted almost entirely by the Senator from Idaho, and the Senator from South Dakota was there with all his acumen and activity. I wish to say that I have never known a man who tried to hold the scales of justice more fairly than did the Senator from Idaho. If anyone can find a single decision he made that was not just, both to the Senate and to the junior Senator from Montana, I should like to have it pointed out, and I will ask the Senator from South Dakota, who was present nearly all the time, to point it out. If there ever was a man who was impartial, who was fair and just and tried to ascertain the facts, it was the Senator from Idaho. He wrote the majority report. I felt a delicacy in obtruding myself too much into the matter, because it might be said that as a Democratic Senator I was trying to be easy with another Democratic Senator. But everybody who knows the Senator from Idaho knows his character, his courage, and his disposition to keep the Senate clean and pure whatever the result may be and without favoritism to anyone.

As for myself, after hearing the evidence and carefully examining it, I am satisfied that the junior Senator from Montana is entitled to a vote of confidence and to the adoption of the majority report.

POSTMASTERS AND POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, if I may have my daily five minutes on the unfinished business, I should like to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement which I am hopeful will meet the approval of the Senate for a definite hour at which to vote upon the unfinished business, so that we can go on with other business.

I send the proposed agreement to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, May 26, 1924, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I was interrupted and did not hear the day. What day is suggested?

Mr. EDGE. Monday at 5 p. m.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just been reminded that a quorum must be called. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Foss	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	Fletcher	Lodge	Robinson
Borah	Frazier	McKinley	Sheppard
Brandegee	George	McNary	Shipstead
Broussard	Gerry	Mayfield	Simmons
Bruce	Glass	Moses	Smith
Bursum	Hale	Neely	Spencer
Cameron	Harris	Norbeck	Stephens
Capper	Harrison	Norris	Sterling
Copeland	Heflin	Oddie	Swanson
Curtis	Howell	Overman	Trammell
Dale	Johnson, Calif.	Owen	Wadsworth
Dial	Johnson, Minn.	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Dill	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kendrick	Ralston	Warren
Ferris	King	Ransdell	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday, May 26, 1924, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters, etc.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will not the Senator in charge of the bill be willing to move up the time an hour, and give us 10 minutes on amendments, or something like that?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, for the convenience of some Senators who can not be here Monday, who favor the bill and desire to vote for it, I want to suggest that the vote be fixed for an early hour on Tuesday, say 12.30 Tuesday; and I have no objection to a modification of the agreement so as to provide for a limitation on debate after a certain hour.

Mr. EDGE. I will try to meet the request of both Senators; and, if it meets the desire of the Senate, I will change the hour to 1 o'clock on Tuesday, adding the paragraph, if the clerk will do it, permitting debate on amendments from 11 to 1, if that is satisfactory to Senators.

Mr. BORAH. Say 10 minutes, without fixing a specific hour. I do not know that I shall want to occupy a single minute with regard to the matter; but the measure is an important one, and I do not want to vote on amendments without some opportunity of hearing them explained.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I suggest then, that after the hour of 5 o'clock on Monday all debate be so limited that no Senator shall speak oftener than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or any amendment that may be pending or that may be offered, and that at the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. EDGE. That is satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the modified proposal.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, May 27, 1924, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 1898) to adjust compensation, etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. on Monday, May 26, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest making the hour 4 o'clock on Monday, so that the rule will not take effect just as we are adjourning.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to changing the hour to 4 o'clock?

Mr. EDGE. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request as modified? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

The agreement, as entered into, is as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, that not later than 1 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, May 27, 1924, the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate on any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (S. 1898) to readjust the compensation of postmasters and reclassify and readjust the salaries and compensation of employees in the Postal Service, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Monday next no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or upon any amendment offered thereto.

THE NAVY

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask that Senators will please not interrupt me during the course of my remarks. When I have concluded I shall be glad to answer any questions that any Senator may see fit to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has control of his own time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, during the debate on the naval appropriation bill the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked me to place in the RECORD tables showing the relative strength of the navies of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan. I have had tables prepared by the Navy Department showing the principal combatant ships of the first line of the three navies built, building, and projected. The statistics in regard to the British Navy and our own Navy are, I believe, accurate. The information in regard to the Japanese Navy is not as reliable. I ask that the tables be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan

CAPITAL SHIPS

United States					British Empire					Japan
Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery
			Knots					Knots					Knots
1. West Virginia	1923	32,600	21	8 16-inch 45-caliber guns.	1. Royal Sovereign	1916	25,750	23	8 15-inch 42-caliber guns.	1. Mutsu	1921	33,800	23	8 16-inch 45-caliber guns.
2. Colorado	1923	32,600	21	do	2. Royal Oak	1916	25,750	23	do	2. Nagato	1920	33,800	23	Do.
3. Maryland	1921	32,600	21.76	do	3. Revenge	1916	25,750	23	do	3. Huiga	1918	31,260	23	12 14-inch 45-caliber guns.
4. California	1921	32,300	21.46	12 14-inch 50-caliber guns.	4. Resolution	1916	25,750	23	do	4. Ise	1917	31,260	23	Do.
5. Tennessee	1920	32,300	21.01	do	5. Ramillies	1917	25,750	23	do	5. Yamashiro	1917	30,600	22.5	Do.
6. Idaho	1919	32,000	21.29	do	6. Malaya	1916	27,500	25	do	6. Fu-So	1915	30,600	22.5	Do.
7. New Mexico	1918	32,000	21.08	do	7. Valiant	1916	27,500	25	do	7. Kirishima [1]	1915	27,500	27.5	8 14-inch 45-caliber guns.
8. Mississippi	1917	32,000	21.09	do	8. Barham	1915	27,500	25	do
9. Arizona	1916	31,400	21.00	12 14-inch 45-caliber guns.	9. Queen Elizabeth	1915	27,500	25	do	8. Haruna [1]	1915	27,500	27.5	Do.
					10. Warspite	1915	27,500	25	do	9. Hiyei [1]	1914	27,500	27.5	Do.
10. Pennsylvania	1916	31,400	21.05	do	11. Benbow	1914	25,000	21	10 13.5-inch 45-caliber guns.	10. Kongo [1]	1913	27,500	27.5	Do.
11. Oklahoma	1916	27,500	20.58	10 14-inch 45-caliber guns.
					12. Emperor of India	1914	25,000	21	do
12. Nevada	1916	27,500	20.53	do
13. New York	1914	27,000	21.47	do	13. Iron Duke	1914	25,000	21	do
14. Texas	1914	27,000	21.05	do	14. Marlborough	1914	25,000	21	do
15. Arkansas	1912	26,000	21.09	12 12-inch 50-caliber guns.	15. Hood [1]	1920	41,200	31	8 15-inch 42-caliber guns.
16. Wyoming	1912	26,000	21.22	do	16. Renown [1]	1916	26,500	31.5	6 15-inch 42-caliber guns.
17. Florida	1911	21,825	22.08	10 12-inch 45-caliber guns.	17. Repulse [1]	1916	26,500	31.5	do
18. Utah	1911	21,825	21.04	do	18. Tiger [1]	1914	28,500	30	8 13.5-inch 45-caliber guns.
					19. Thunderer	1912	22,500	21	10 13.5-inch 45-caliber guns.
					20. King George V.	1912	23,000	21	do
					21. Ajax	1913	23,000	21	do
					22. Centurion	1913	23,000	21	do
		525,850					580,450					301,320

NOTES.—The United States has no battle cruisers.

On the completion in 1925 or 1926 of the two new ships, namely, Rodney and Nelson, of 35,000 tons each, the Thunderer, King George V, Ajax, and Centurion will be scrapped as provided by the agreement reached at the Conference on the Limitation of Armament. The total tonnage to be retained by the British Empire will be 558,950 tons.

LIGHT CRUISERS COMPLETED SINCE 1912

[8,000–10,000 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

					1. Hawkins	1919	9,750	30	7–7.5-inch guns
					2. Vindictive	1918	9,750	30	6–7.5-inch guns
							19,500

[7,000–8,000 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

1. Omaha	1923	7,900	33.7	12 6-inch guns
2. Milwaukee	1923	7,500	33.7	do
3. Richmond	1923	7,500	33.7	do
4. Detroit	1923	7,500	33.7	do
5. Concord	1923	7,500	33.7	do
6. Cincinnati	1923	7,500	33.7	do
7. Raleigh	1924	7,500	33.7	do
8. Trenton	1924	7,500	33.7	do
		60,000

[3,000–5,600 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

					1. Dispatch	1922	4,765	29	6 6-inch	1. Yubari	1923	3,100	33	6 5.5-inch.
					2. Diomede	1922	4,765	29	do	2. Isudzu	1923	5,570	34	7 5.5-inch.
					3. Delhi	1919	4,650	29	6 6.5-inch	3. Nagara	1922	5,570	34	Do.
					4. Dunedin	1919	4,650	29	do	4. Natori	1922	5,570	34	Do.
					5. Durban	1921	4,650	29	do	5. Yura	1923	5,570	34	Do.
					6. Danae	1918	4,650	29	do	6. Kinu	1923	5,570	34	Do.
					7. Dauntless	1918	4,650	29	do	7. Kuma	1920	5,500	[2] 33	Do.
					8. Dragon	1918	4,650	29	do	8. Tama	1921	5,500	[2] 33	Do.
					9. Calro	1919	4,190	29	5 6-inch	9. Oi	1921	5,500	[2] 33	Do.
					10. Calcutta	1919	4,190	29	do	10. Kitakami	1921	5,500	[2] 33	Do.
					11. Carlisle	1918	4,190	29	do	11. Kiso	1921	5,500	[2] 33	Do.
					12. Capetown	1923	4,190	29	do	12. Tatsuta	1919	3,500	31	4–5.5 inch
					13. Colombo	1919	4,190	29	do	13. Tenryu	1919	3,500	31	Do.
					14. Cardiff	1917	4,190	29	do
					15. Ceres	1917	4,190	29	do
					16. Coventry	1918	4,190	29	do
					17. Curacoa	1918	4,190	29	do
					18. Curlew	1917	4,190	29	do
					19. Caledon	1917	4,120	29	do

[1] Battle cruisers.

[2] Reported to have made 36 to 36.5 on trials.

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan—Continued

LIGHT CRUISERS COMPLETED SINCE 1912—Continued

[3,000–5,600 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

United States					British Empire					Japan
Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery
			Knots					Knots					Knots
					20. Calypso	1917	4,120	29	do
					21. Caradoc	1917	4,120	29	do
					22. Centaur	1916	3,750	29	do
					23. Concord	1916	3,750	29	do
					24. Cambrian	1916	3,750	29	4 6-inch
					25. Canterbury	1916	3,750	29	do
					26. Castor	1915	3,750	29	do
					27. Constance	1916	3,750	29	do
					28. Calliope	1915	3,750	29	do
					29. Champion	1915	3,750	29	do
					30. Carysfort	1915	3,750	29	do
					31. Cleopatra	1915	3,750	29	do
					32. Comus	1915	3,750	29	do
					33. Conquest	1915	3,750	29	do
					34. Aurora	1914	3,500	29	2 6-inch
							140,190					65,450

[3,000–5,600 tons. Speed of 25–29 knots]

					1. Birmingham	1914	5,440	25.5	9 6-inch guns	1. Hirado	1912	4,950	26	8 6-inch guns.
					2. Lowestoft	1914	5,440	25.5	do	2. Yahagi	1912	4,950	26	Do.
					3. South Hampton.	1912	5,400	25.5	8 6-inch guns	3. Chikuma	1912	4,950	26	Do.
					4. Dublin	1913	5,400	25.5	do
					5. Yarmouth	1912	5,250	25	do
					6. Adelaide	1922	5,550	25	9 6-inch guns
					7. Melbourne	1913	5,400	25.5	8 6-inch guns
					8. Sydney	1913	5,400	25.3	do
					9. Brisbane	1916	5,400	25.5	do
					10. Chatham	1912	5,400	25.5	do
							54,090					14,850

There are two other light cruisers on the effective list of the British Empire which are not included in the above table, the Dartmouth and Weymouth, completed in 1911, of 5,250 tons, 8 6-inch guns, speed 25 knots.

None of the above-mentioned vessels have a speed exceeding 26 knots.

There is one light cruiser, the Tone, of 4,100 tons, completed in 1910, still on Japanese effective list not included above.

LIGHT CRUISERS BUILDING

[8,000–10,000 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

					1. Effingham		9,750	30.5	7 7.5-inch
					2. Frobisher		9,750	30.5	do
							19,500

[7,000–8,000 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

1. Marblehead [3]		7,500	33.7	12 6-inch	1. Emerald		7,550	33	7 6-inch	1. Furutaka		7,100	(5)	6 8-inch.
2. Memphis [4]		7,500	33.7	do	2. Enterprise		7,550	33	do	2. Kinugasa		7,100	(5)	Do.
										3. Aoba		7,100	(5)	Do.
										4. Kako		7,100	(5)	Do.
		15,000					15,100					28,400

[5,600–7,000 tons Speed of 29 knots plus—None]

[3,000–5,600 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

										1. Abukuma		5,570	34	7 5.5-inch.
										2. Jintsu-U		5,570	34	Do.
										3. Sendai		5,570	34	Do.
										4. Naka [6]		5,570	34	Do.
												22,280

LIGHT CRUISERS PROJECTED

[8,000–10,000 tons. Speed of 29 knots plus]

					1. Kent		10,000		8-inch guns	1. Nachi		10,000	[7] 32	6 8-inch guns. [7]
					2. Suffolk		10,000		do	2. Myoko		10,000	[7] 32	Do. [7]
					3. Cornwall		10,000		do	3. Not named		10,000	[7] 32	Do. [7]
					4. Cumberland		10,000		do	4. Not named		10,000	[7] 32	Do. [7]
					5. Berwick		10,000
							50,000					40,000

[3] Probable date of completion, Aug. 30, 1924.
[4] Probable date of completion, December, 1924.
[5] Unknown.
[6] Damaged by earthquake while on the stocks.
[7] Estimated.

Funds provided in British Navy estimates for fiscal year 1924–25. Shipbuilders now preparing bids.
It is understood that two of these Japanese ships will be laid down in October, 1924.

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan—Continued

DESTROYERS, 800 TONS PLUS, BUILT AND BUILDING OR PROJECTED

FLOTILLA LEADERS BUILT

[1,500 tons plus]

United States					British Empire					Japan
Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery	Name	Date of completion	Displacement	Speed	Main battery
			Knots					Knots					Knots
					1. Bruce	1918	1,800	36.5	5 4.7-inch guns, 6 torpedo tubes.
					2. Campbell	1918	1,800	36.5	do
					3. Douglass	1918	1,800	36.5	do
					4. Mackay	1919	1,800	36.5	do
					5. Malcolm	1919	1,800	36.5	do
					6. Montrose	1918	1,800	36.5	do
					7. Stewart	1918	1,800	36.5	do
					8. Shakespeare	1917	1,750	36	do
					9. Spenser	1917	1,750	36	do
					10. Wallace	1919	1,750	36	do
					11. Grenville	1916	1,670	34	4 4-inch guns, 4 torpedo tubes.
					12. Saumarez	1916	1,670	34	do
					13. Seymour [8]	1916	1,670	34	do
					14. Anzac	1917	1,670	34	do
					15. Abdiel [9]	1916	1,670	34	3 4-inch guns, 4 torpedo tubes.
					16. Nimrod	1915	1,610	34	4 4-inch guns, 4 torpedo tubes.
							27,810

FLOTILLA LEADERS BUILDING

					1. Keppel		1,750	36	5 4.7-inch guns, 6 torpedo tubes.
					2. Broke		1,750	36	do
							3,500

DESTROYERS 800 TONS PLUS (BUILT)

[800 to 1,500 tons]

United States						British Empire						Japan
Number in class	Class	Displacement [10] (designed)	Speed (designed) knots	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Class	Displacement	Speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Class	Displacement	Speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes
8	Cassin, No. 43–50	1,010	29+	4 4-inch	8	14	V	1,325	34	4 4.7-inch	6	1	Urakaze	955	28.00	{1 4.7-inch, 4 3-inch}	4
						5	V	1,325	34	4 4-inch	6	10	Momo	835	31.5	3 4.7-inch	6
						35	V	1,300	34	do	6	21	Momi	850	33.00	do	4
6	O'Brien, No. 51–56.	1,050	29+	do	8	4	V	1,300	34	do	5	6	Even numbered.	900	[7] 31.5	do	4
						2	Thornycroft V	1,350	35	4 4.7-inch	6	2	Umikaze	1,150	33.00	{2 4.7 inch, 5 3-inch}	4
5	Tucker, No. 57–62	1,090	29.5	do	8	4	do	1,325	35	4 4-inch	6	4	Amatsukaze	1,227	34.00	4 4.7-inch	6
						54	Admiralty V-S	1,075	36	3 4-inch	4	2	Tanikaze	1,300	34.00	3 4.7-inch	6
6	Sampson, No. 63–68.	1,110	29.5	do	12	3	Thornycroft S	1,075	36	do	4	15	Namikaze	1,345	34.00	4 4.7-inch	6
6	Caldwell, No. 69–74.	1,125	30	do	12	6	Yarrow S	980	36	do	4	4	Odd numbered	1,400	34.00	do	6
						8	Admiralty MR	1,085	36	do	4
[11] 109	Wickes No. 75–185.	{1,185–1,215}	35	do	12	34	Admiralty R	1,065	36	do	4
						6	Thornycroft R	{1,085–1,065}	35	do	4
148	Clemson, No. 186–347.	1,215	35	do	12
						6	do	900	36	do	4
						2	Thornycroft M	1,000	35	do	4
288		[10] 342,086				193		209,315				65		68,228

[7] Estimated.
[8] Seymour can be equipped as a mine layer.
[9] Abdiel is a mine layer.
[10] Displacements shown is that of name ship of class. Displacements of individual vessels in a class vary slightly.
[11] Includes 14 light mine layers of destroyer type.

NOTES.—Dates of completion of the 288 ships for the United States is as follows: 4, 1913; 4, 1914; 7, 1915; 8, 1916; 5, 1917; 50, 1918; 108, 1919; 73, 1920; 28, 1921; 3, 1922.
Dates of completion of the 183 destroyers for the British Empire are as follows: 21, 1916; 52, 1917; 62, 1918; 39, 1919; 3, 1920; 2, 1922; 1, 1923; 3, 1924.
Dates of completion of the 65 destroyers for Japan are as follows: 2, 1911; 1, 1915; 1, 1916; 7, 1917; 7, 1918; 4, 1919; 12, 1920; 11, 1921; 9, 1922; 10, 1923; 1, 1924.

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan—Continued

DESTROYERS, 800 TONS PLUS, BUILDING AND PROJECTED

United States						British Empire						Japan
Number in class	Class	Displacement (designed)	Speed (designed) knots	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Class	Displacement	Speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Class	Displacement	Speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes
						Two provided for in Navy estimates. Characteristics unknown. Displacement estimated at 1,350 tons each.						25 2	Odd numbered Even numbered.	1,400 900	34 31.5	4 4.7-inch 3 4.7-inch

SUBMARINES BUILT (485 TONS OR OVER)

[Fleet submarines, 2,000 tons plus]

United States							British Empire							Japan
Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes
							1 1	K–26 X–1	1923 1924	2,140 2,780	23 [7] 20	3 4-inch 4 5.2-inch[7]	4 [7] 6
							2			4,920

[Fleet submarines, 1,000 tons plus]

3	T	1920–21	1,106	21			5	K	1917	1,880	24	(See note)	8	2	No. 44	1924	1,200	22	Either 1 4.7-in. or 1-5.2 in.
3			3,318				5			9,400				2			2,400

NOTE.—K–2, K–6, and K–22 have 2 4-inch; K–12 has 2 4-inch and 1 3-inch; K–14 has 1 4-inch and 1 3-inch. One of the 44 class, namely, No. 51, may not have been completed.

MONITOR SUBMARINES (BUILT)

							3	M	1918–20	1,600	15.5	1 12-inch, 1 3-inch	4
							3			4,800

SUBMARINES (BUILT)

[800 to 1,000 tons]

1	S–2	1920	800	14	1 4-inch	4	8	L–1, L–8		890	17.5	1 4-inch	4	6	No. 25 to No. 30.	1920–22	900	18	1 3-pdr.
27	S–1, S–14 to S–41.	1920–24	854	14.5	do	4	5	L–9, 15, 19, 20, 33.		890	17.5	do	4	4	Nos. 46, 47, 57, 59.	1922–23	900	18	1 3-pdr., 1 3-in.
4	S–48, S–51.	1922–23	993	14.5	do	5	6	L–11, 12, 16, 18, 21, 22.		890	17.5	do	6	12	Nos. 22, 23, 24, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42.	1920–22	940	17	do
6	S–3, S–4, S–6, S–7, S–8, S–9.	1919–21	876	14.5	do	4	3	L–14, 17, 25.		890	17.5	do	[11] 4
4	S–10, S–13.	1922–23	876	14.5	do	5	3	L–52		960	17.5	2 4-inch	6	5	Nos. 45, 58, 62, 68, 69.	1921–23	960	17	1 3-in. 25-cal. A A. 1 3-in. 40-cal.
42			36,590				25			22,350				27			25,080

NOTE.—L–14, L–17, and L–25 are mine-laying submarines.

[800 to 800 tons]

														2	No. 18 and No. 21.	1920	689	18	1 3-pdr.
														2	No. 19 and No. 20.	1919	720	17	do 1 3-in. 25-cal. A.A.
														3	Nos. 31, 32, and 33.	1921	750	18	1 3-pdr. 1-3-in. 25-cal. AA.
														7			5,068

[485 to 600 tons]

6	Lake O	1918	485	14	1 3-in. 23-cal.	4
10	Holland O	1918	520	14	do	4
7	R	1919	498	14	1 3-in. 50-cal.	4
20	R	1918–19	569	13.5	do	4
43			22,961

[7] Estimated

[11] And 14 mines.

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan—Continued

SUBMARINES (485 TONS OR OVER) BUILDING OR PROJECTED

[Fleet submarines (2,000 tons plus) building or projected (classed as fleet submarines on account of size)]

United States							British Empire							Japan
Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes	Number in class	Type	Date completed	Surface displacement	Surface speed	Guns	Torpedo tubes
3	V		2,125
3			6,375
							1	O		1,480	[7] 20

[Fleet submarines (1,000 tons plus) (classed as fleet submarines on account of size)]

Twenty-three of 29,365 tons. This is an estimate based on Admiral Kato's statement in announcing post-treaty building program, to the effect that Japan would build 22 submarines of a total tonnage of 28,165 tons, the other one included is No. 52 reported to be of 1,200 tons displacement. The average displacement of the 22 submarines in the post-treaty program is 1,280 tons.

SUBMARINES (800-1,000 TONS) BUILDING OR PROJECTED

2	S-14		876		14-inch, 50-caliber.	4	3	L-23		890	17½	14-inch.	4
6	S-42 to 47		906		do	4	2	L-52		960	17½	3 4-inch.	8
8			7,144				5			4,590

Total number 10. Nos. 48, 49, 50, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67 estimated to be of 960 tons each, of a total tonnage of 9,600. Reported that work is suspended on some of these.

SUBMARINES (600-800 TONS) BUILDING OR PROJECTED—NONE

SUBMARINES (485-600 TONS) BUILDING OR PROJECTED

Four, Nos. 53, 54, 55, and 56, of 550 tons each. Exact status of these boats indefinite. Work on them is reported to be suspended.

NOTE.—Data concerning Japanese submarines is difficult to obtain. The data shown above has been obtained from various sources, and its accuracy can not be vouched for, but it is the most reliable data available.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS BUILT

1	Langley	1922	12,700	13	4 5-inch		1	Argus	1918	14,450	20	24-inch; 4 4-inch A. A.		1	Hosho	1922	9,500	25	4 5.5-inch; 2 3-inch A. A.
							1	Hermes	1924	10,950	25	6 5.5-in.; 4 4-inch A. A.
							1	Eagle[13]	1924	22,790	24	9 6-inch; 5 4-inch A. A.
1			12,700				3			48,190				1			9,500

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS BUILDING

1	Lexington.[14]		33,000				[15] 1	Furious		19,100	31	10 5.5-in.; 6 4-inch A. A.		1	Amagi[17]		27,000
1	Saratoga[14]		33,000				[15] 2	Courageous and Glorious		18,600 (each)	31	[16]		1	Kaga[18]		26,900
2			66,000				3			56,300				2			53,900

The tonnage of aircraft carriers allowed by treaty is:

United States	135,000
British Empire	135,000
Japan	81,000

RECAPITULATION

LIGHT CRUISERS BUILT AND BUILDING OR PROJECTED, LESS THAN 12 YEARS OLD

	United States								British Empire								Japan
	Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total
	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons
8,000-10,000 tons 29 knots plus									2	19,500	2	19,500	[19] 5	50,000	9	80,000					4	40,000	4	40,000
7,000-8,000 tons 29 knots plus	8	60,000	2	15,000			10	75,000			2	15,100			2	15,100			4	28,400			4	28,400
3,000-5,600 tons 29 knots plus									34	140,190					34	140,190	13	65,450	4	22,280			17	87,730
Total light cruisers 29 knots speed or greater	8	60,000	2	15,000			10	75,000	36	159,690	4	34,600	5	50,000	45	244,290	13	65,450	8	50,680	4	40,000	25	156,130
3,000-5,600 tons 25-29 knots									10	54,090					10	54,090	3	14,850					3	14,850
Total light cruisers less than 12 years old	8	60,000	2	15,000			10	75,000	46	213,780	4	34,600	[19] 5	50,000	55	298,380	16	80,300	8	50,680	4	40,000	28	170,980

[7] Estimated.
[13] Ex-battleship Almirante Cochrane.
[14] Ex-battle cruisers converting to aircraft carriers as allowed by treaty
[15] Ex-cruisers to be reconstructed as aircraft carriers.
[16] Present battery 4 15-inch, 18 4-inch, 2 3-inch A. A., 16 tubes. Battery when reconstructed unknown.
[17] Ex-battle cruiser to be completed as an aircraft carrier.
[18] Ex-battleship to be completed as an aircraft carrier.
[19] Provided for in Navy estimates for fiscal year 1924-25.

NOTE.—There are two other light cruisers on the effective list of the British Empire which are not included in above, the Dartmouth and Weymouth, completed in 1911, of 5,250 tons, 8 6-inch guns, speed 25 knots. There is one light cruiser, the Tone, of 4,100 tons, completed in 1910, still on Japanese effective list not included above. Above figures include the Naka, of 5,570 tons, which was damaged by the earthquake while on the stocks and which it is understood will be rebuilt.

Statement showing combatant ships in the navies of the United States, British Empire, and Japan—Continued

RECAPITULATION—Continued

DESTROYERS BUILT AND BUILDING OR PROJECTED

(Including all vessels of destroyer type)

	United States								British Empire								Japan
	Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total
	No.	Tons	No	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons
Flotilla leaders, 1,500 tons plus									16	27, 310	2	3, 500			18	31, 310
Destroyers first line, 800–1,500 tons	288	342, 086					288	342, 086	183	209, 315			2	2, 700	185	212, 015	65	68, 228	27	36, 800	(2)		92	105, 028
Total first line	288	342, 086					288	342, 086	199	237, 125	2	3, 500	2	2, 700	203	243, 325	65	68, 228	[1] 27	36, 800			92	105, 028
Destroyers second line, 500–800 tons	21	15, 582					21	15, 582	6	4, 200					6	4, 200							12	7, 850
Total destroyers	309	357, 668					309	357, 668	205	241, 325	2	3, 500	2	2, 700	209	247, 525	65	68, 228	[1] 27	36, 800			104	112, 878

SUBMARINES BUILT, BUILDING, AND PROJECTED (485 TONS OR OVER, SMALLER SUBMARINES EXCLUDED)

Fleet submarines, 2,000 tons plus			3	6, 375			3	6, 375	[1] 2	4, 920					2	4, 920
Fleet submarines, 1,000 tons plus	3	3, 318					3	3, 318	[4] 5	9, 400	1	1, 480			6	10, 880	2	2, 400	23	29, 365			25	31, 765
Monitor submarines, 1,600 tons, 12-inch gun									3	4, 800					3	4, 800
Submarines, 800–1,000 tons	42	36, 590	8	7, 144			50	43, 734	[5] 26	22, 350	5	4, 590			30	27, 120	27	25, 080	10	9, 600			37	34, 680
Total of submarines over 800 tons	45	39, 908	11	13, 519			56	53, 427	35	41, 850	6	6, 070			41	47, 720	29	27, 480	33	38, 965			62	66, 445
Submarines, 600–800 tons																	7	5, 088					7	5, 088
Submarines, 485–600 tons	43	22, 961					43	22, 961											4	2, 200			4	2, 200
Total first-line submarines	88	62, 869	11	13, 519			99	76, 388	35	41, 850	6	6, 070			41	47, 720	[6] 36	32, 548	[6] 37	41, 165			[6] 73	73, 713

[1] Estimated displacement.

[2] Includes those projected. Exact data as to number actually laid down not available.

[3] K–26, of 2,140 tons, and X–1, of 2,780 tons. K–26 has a speed of about 23 knots, and the X–1 is reported to have a speed of below 20 knots. K–26, on account of speed, was classed as fleet submarine, first line, in Oct. 1 tables.

[4] Includes K–2, K–6, K–12, K–14, K–22, of 1,880 tons each and speed of 24 knots. Does not include the J–7, of 1,200 tons displacement, 19½ knots speed.

[5] Includes 3 mine-laying submarines, L–14, L–17, and L–25, of 890 tons each, 17½ knots speed.

[6] The Admiralty official return showing fleets of the British Empire, United States, Japan, etc., as of Feb. 1, 1924, shows 37 submarines over 485 tons, of 29,210 tons total tonnage, completed, and 33, tonnage not shown, building and projected—a total of 70. Since then No. 43 (of 740 tons, British figure, 940 tons United States figure) has been lost. The 37 completed submarines shown in the return are divided according to tonnage as follows: 3 of 750 tons each, 15 of 740 tons each, 10 of 900 tons each, 3 of 720 tons each, 5 of 700 tons each, and 1 of 1,500 tons submerged displacement, whose surface displacement is about 1,200 tons. Part of those shown as building have not been laid down. Exact data as to the number laid down is not available.

Of smaller submarines, United States retains 27 of 10,645 tons, British Empire 26 of 11,248 tons, Japan 7 of 2,160 tons.

AIRCRAFT CARRIERS, BUILT AND BUILDING

	United States								British Empire								Japan
	Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total		Built		Building		Projected		Total
	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons	No.	Tons
9,500–15,000 tons	1	12, 700					1	12, 700	2	25, 400					2	25, 400	1	9, 500					1	9, 500
15,000 plus			2	66, 000			2	66, 000	1	22, 790	3	56, 300			4	79, 090			2	53, 900			2	53, 900
Total	1	12, 700	2	66, 000			3	78, 700	3	48, 190	3	56, 300			6	104, 490	1	9, 500	2	53, 900			3	63, 400

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, during the last few weeks statements have appeared in the newspapers of the country, some of them editorially and some in the form of signed articles conveying the impression that our Navy is in a deplorable condition and that the ratio of 5–5–3 established at the Conference on the Limitation of Armament is not being lived up to by this country. Recently Admiral Coontz's report on the naval maneuvers at Culebra was published in part in the newspapers. This report has been used to lend color and to give support to the statements that had previously appeared.

As a matter of fact, Admiral Coontz's report was the report of the annual fleet maneuvers made by the admiral commanding the fleet to the Chief of Naval Operations. The object of the maneuvers is to try out the fleet under conditions approximating what would exist in time of war, with a view to finding out and correcting any weaknesses that may exist. A report that found no weaknesses in the 200 or more ships taking part in the maneuvers would indicate either a state of perfection which could hardly be hoped for or an attempt on the part of the officer making the report to win praise for the fleet under his command. No such report has ever been made at the close of any maneuvers that our fleet has ever held and no such report is ever expected.

Except for certain structural changes in existing ships and the building of certain new types of ship, both of which will require additional appropriations from the Congress, most of the weaknesses developed by the report may, and undoubtedly will be, remedied by the department itself under the appropriation for the current year and that for the coming year.

The Conference on the Limitation of Armament established, in so far as capital ships and aircraft carriers are concerned and capital ships and aircraft carriers alone, the ratio of 5–5–3 with Great Britain and Japan. The basis of tonnage of the capital ships was arranged along these lines, Great Britain to start with a slightly larger tonnage than ourselves. No country was to be allowed to replace any capital ships with ships of over 35,000 tons and the total tonnage was not to be increased by any replacements. At the time that the conference was held we had a number of ships partially completed, including 2 battleships already launched, 7 battleships and 6 battle cruisers on the ways and building. The 2 battleships that were already launched have been recently added to our Navy to take the place of 2 of the older ships which have since been scrapped. Two of the battle cruisers are being converted into aircraft carriers and are to be added to the fleet. The remaining ships under the terms of the treaty have been or are being scrapped.

Of the 18 capital ships which under the treaty we retain in our Navy, 6 are coal-burning vessels and 12 are oil burning vessels. The speed of all of our capital ships is approximately 21 knots per hour. When in good repair all capital ships of our fleet can maintain this speed.

The officials of the Navy Department have been hoping that Congress would appropriate a sufficient sum of money to change over the coal-burning vessels to oil-burning, so that the fleet would be uniform. Having in mind this change, the boilers of the six coal-burning vessels have not received the repairs that in the ordinary course of events they would receive, for the reason that such repairs would be wasted should Congress take the action that the department desires and has recommended. Recently during the maneuvers it was found that these old boilers would not stand the steam pressure requisite to maintain the full speed of the fleet, and an order was issued to keep the steam pressure on the four oldest vessels below 160 pounds instead of 220 pounds, which is the normal high pressure of these ships; later this limit was extended to 180 pounds. With the lower pressure these vessels can not reach a speed of over 14 knots per hour. The newer of the six coal-burning vessels, the New York and Texas, are still able to keep up the full steam pressure and can therefore keep up with the rest of the fleet. Their boilers, however, will soon have to be repaired or renewed. To repair temporarily the boilers of the four older vessels will require an expenditure of $110,000. This work is now in progress on all the ships except the Florida. This will take care of them temporarily but eventually their boilers will have to be renewed. To replace the old coal-burning boilers with new coal-burning boilers would entail an expense of about $325,000 per ship. To convert these ships into oil burners would cost the Government about $850,000 per ship. In addition, the department wishes to put blisters on these ships for submarine protection and to put on additional deck armor protection against aircraft. The total cost of these changes for the four oldest battleships would be something less than $12,000,000, and to make the same changes on the New York and Texas and to install new fire control would cost $6,800,000 more. The House Committee on Naval Affairs has reported favorably to the House a bill embodying these changes, but the House has as yet taken no action on the bill.

Some question has arisen as to whether under the terms of the treaty we would have the right to change over our coal-burning vessels to oil burning. As far as I am personally concerned, I can see no reason why such a change would be in violation of the treaty, especially in view of the fact that all of our coal-burning vessels use oil to a certain extent for fuel and carry supplies of oil on board for that purpose, and I believe that the changes recommended should be made.

With the exception of the four oldest capital ships of the Navy, the reasons for the delay in the repair of which I have already explained, the capital ships of the Navy are substantially in as good condition now as they were at the time of the signing of the treaty.

Compared with the capital ships of England and Japan, we have 18 battleships of a tonnage of 525,850 to England's 18 battleships of a tonnage of 457,750 and 4 battle cruisers of a tonnage of 122,700, and to Japan's 6 battleships of a tonnage of 191,320 and 4 battle cruisers of a tonnage of 110,000. This country has no battle cruisers, and it is generally understood that the British plan is to give up battle cruisers as replacements go on and supplant them with battleships.

Under the terms of the treaty, Great Britain has two battleships now building which are expected to go into commission some time during the year 1926. They are to replace four of the older British battleships and are both vessels of 35,000 tons. They will undoubtedly be equal to if not superior to any battleships that we have in our Navy. When these ships are added to the British Navy, Great Britain will have 16 battleships and 4 battle cruisers.

Ship for ship, with the exception of our two oldest ships, our battleships are of greater tonnage, carry more or heavier guns, and are more heavily armored than the present British ships. Their speed, however, is somewhat less than that of the British ships, and the same is true to a lesser extent in comparison with the battleships of Japan. The battle cruisers of both England and Japan carry heavy guns and are much faster than our battleships; but, as they are not heavily armored, in actual battle with guns of an equal range this class of ship could not stand up against a battleship.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD at this point tables showing the present elevation and range of guns of the American and British capital ships.

The tables are as follows:

Capital ships of the United States (size, elevation, and range of guns)

Ship	Turret guns		Maximum angle of elevation	Range in yards at elevation of—
	Diameter of bore	Length in caliber		15°	20°	30°
	Inches		Degrees
West Virginia	16	45	30	22,900	27,400	34,500
Colorado	16	45	30	22,900	27,400	34,500
Maryland	16	45	30	22,900	27,400	34,500
California	14	50	30	24,000	28,400	35,500
Tennessee	14	50	30	24,000	28,400	35,700
Idaho	14	50	15	24,000	28,400	35,500
New Mexico	14	50	15	24,000	28,400	35,500
Mississippi	14	50	15	24,000	28,400	35,500
Arizona	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
Pennsylvania	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
Oklahoma	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
Nevada	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
New York	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
Texas	14	45	15	21,000	25,100	32,400
Arkansas	12	50	15	24,350	29,400	35,500
Wyoming	12	50	15	23,500	29,400	35,500
Florida	12	45	15	22,000	26,000	32,000
Utah	12	45	15	21,000	26,000	32,000

Capital ships of the British Empire (size, elevation, and range of guns)

Ship	Turret guns		Maximum angle of elevation	Range in yards at elevation of—
	Diameter of bore	Length in caliber		15° [1]	20° [1]	30° [1]
	Inches		Degrees
Royal Sovereign	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Royal Oak	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Revenge	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Resolution	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Ramillies	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Malaya	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Valiant	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Barham	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Queen Elizabeth	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Warspite	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Benbow	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Emperor of India	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Iron Duke	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Marlborough	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Hood [2]	15	42	30	19,700	24,300	30,300
Renown [2]	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Repulse [2]	15	42	20	19,700	24,300	30,300
Tiger [2]	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Thunderer	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
King George V	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Ajax	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000
Centurion	13.5	45	20	19,600	23,800	30,000

[1] Approximately only
[2] Battle cruisers

The main armament of our battleships is as follows:

We have two ships carrying ten 12-inch guns, two carrying twelve 12-inch guns, four carrying ten 14-inch guns, seven carrying twelve 14-inch guns, and three carrying eight 16-inch guns.

Against this the British have: Eight carrying ten 13½-inch guns, and ten carrying eight 15-inch guns. The battleships Rodney and Nelson are expected to carry nine 16-inch guns in three superimposed turrets, located on the forward part of the ship.

Japan has four, carrying twelve 14-inch guns; two, carrying eight 16-inch guns.

Of the British battle cruisers one carries eight 13½-inch guns, two carry six 15-inch guns, and one carries eight 15-inch guns.

The Japanese battle cruisers each carry eight 14-inch guns.

The elevation of the guns of 13 of our ships is 15 degrees and of the remaining five, 30 degrees.

The elevation of the guns of all of the British battleships is 20 degrees, and likewise of all her battle cruisers except one, which is 30 degrees.

Six of our battleships, with an elevation of 15 degrees, have a range of 21,000 yards, and seven have a range of 21,600 to 24,000 yards. The remaining five, with an elevation of 30 degrees, have a range of from 34,500 yards to 35,700 yards.

With an elevation of 20 degrees, 8 of the British battleships have a range of 23,800 yards and 10 have a range of 24,300 yards. Two of their cruisers have a range of 24,300 yards and one has a range of 23,800 yards. The Hood has a range of 30,300 yards with a gun elevation of 30 degrees.

With the elevation of the guns left as it now is we therefore have five ships that will far outrange anything that the British have either in battleships or battle cruisers, and five others have about the same range as the British ships. The remaining eight battleships are, to the extent of several thousand yards, outranged by the British battleships and battle cruisers.

It has been impossible to get accurate figures on the elevation and range of the guns of the Japanese ships, but 30 degrees being the limit of elevation that may practically be used, there is no reason to suppose that Japan can outrange our five most modern ships with any ship that she may have, and as she has but two battleships carrying 16-inch guns and her most powerful 14-inch guns have not the length of the 14-inch guns on the California and Tennessee, the latter two vessels having 14-inch guns with an elevation of 30 degrees, we manifestly are able to outrange the rest of her fleet with our five best ships. Compared with our remaining 13 battleships she may or may not outrange us.

Last year Congress authorized an appropriation of $6,500,000 to change the elevation of the guns of the battleships of the fleet and raise them all to 30 degrees. Whether this change could be made under the provisions of the treaty on the limitation of armament has not yet been made clear. The question of the interpretation of the treaty rests with the State Department.

If, under the terms of the treaty, the change may properly be made, I am firmly of the opinion that it should be made. The American plan of building slower ships with heavier armament and heavier armor is based on the theory that has always prevailed in the American Navy that battleships are to fight and not to run away, and that powerful armament and heavy armor should not be sacrificed to obtain greater speed. But heavier guns and heavier armor will not suffice for a fighting ship if her guns have not the range of her opponent's guns. To compensate for her slower speed she must have a range at the very least equal to that of her opponents. Otherwise the faster vessel with a longer range may keep just out of gunshot and attack without any danger of reprisal. At the Battle of Jutland only 3 or 4 per cent of hits were made at a range of 18,000 yards. Improvements in fire control since made would probably increase this percentage somewhat. Necessarily at a greater range the percentage of hits would decrease. Nevertheless the possibility should be guarded against. Also unless the range is equal, the lightly armored battle cruisers of an enemy with a greater range of guns and faster speed can oppose the outranged battleships without any danger of reprisal. As both Great Britain and Japan have four battle cruisers each, this is a very important item to consider.

In carriers, the United States has at the present time the Langley, a vessel of 12,700 tons, and two carriers building of 33,000 tons each, namely, the Lexington and the Saratoga. These two ships were laid down as battle cruisers and are now being converted into aircraft carriers.

Great Britain has three carriers, one of 10,950 tons, one of 14,450 tons, and one of 22,790 tons; the latter is an ex-battleship converted into an aircraft carrier. She has building two of 18,600 tons each and one of 19,100 tons. These three vessels are cruisers that are being converted into carriers.

Japan has one carrier of 9,500 tons and two building, one of 26,900 tons and one of 27,000 tons displacement. One is an ex-battle cruiser which is being converted into a carrier and the other is an ex-battleship which is also being converted into a carrier.

Therefore, at the present time we are considerably weaker in aircraft carriers than Great Britain, and a little better off than Japan. With our building program completed we shall have two aircraft carriers that will be superior to anything that either country has, although our aggregate tonnage will be somewhat less than that of Great Britain and slightly more than that of Japan. The speed of our two new carriers, however, will be greater than that of the British ships and greater than anything that Japan may have, with the possible exception of the battle cruiser which is being converted.

The data as to the cruising range of our battleships and those of other countries, for military reasons, are kept secret. Suffice it to say that, from information that the department has, five of our battleships have a greater cruising radius than any of the British ships, and the average of the others with the exception of the coal-burning ships will compare favorably with the British ships.

We have no figures on the cruising radius of the Japanese ships. There is no reason to suppose that it is greater than ours. The policy of the Navy is to increase the cruising radius of our ships in every way possible by the installation of emergency storage and fuel economy improvements. The average date of completion of our battleships is much more recent than that of either Great Britain or Japan.

Under the terms of the treaty on the limitation of armament no limitation was put on any vessels other than capital ships, and aircraft carriers, except that no new ships of a tonnage of more than 10,000 tons could be constructed, and on these vessels no guns of a caliber larger than 8 inches could be mounted.

At the time of the signing of the treaty this country had no modern cruisers of any kind. Great Britain had built 51 cruisers of an aggregate tonnage of 236,250 tons with a speed of 25 knots per hour or more. Since then seven light cruisers have been removed from the effective list and two others are not included as they are over 12 years old.

Japan had built 11 light cruisers of an aggregate tonnage of 54,850 tons.

Since the signing of the treaty the United States has completed and put in commission eight new light cruisers of 7,500 tons each and a maximum speed of 33.7 knots. By the end of the year two additional cruisers of this class are expected to be put in commission, so that by January 1, 1925, we will have 10 of the most modern and up-to-date cruisers of this class of an aggregate tonnage of 75,000 tons.

Great Britain has not laid down any light cruisers, but has completed four additional light cruisers since the signing of the treaty and the only light cruisers of more than 5,550 tons that she has are two of 9,750 tons. She is, however, building at the present time two more of these cruisers of 9,750 tons and two of 7,550 tons. She has a further building plan authorized for five new cruisers of 10,000 tons each. The rest of the British light cruisers are vessels ranging from 3,500 tons to 5,550 tons.

Of this class of fast light cruisers we have none in our Navy, neither are these vessels to be compared in any way as to armament, cruising range, or fighting capacity with our new light cruisers.

Japan has five light cruisers of more than 25-knot speed, of a tonnage of 5,500 tons each, and five of a tonnage of 5,570 tons each. She has added five light cruisers to her force since the signing of the treaty, and is now building four cruisers of 7,100 tons each and four of 5,570 tons each. Her remaining light cruiser tonnage is made up of vessels of from 3,100 to 4,950 tons each. She has projected four cruisers of 10,000 tons each and it is understood that the keels of two of them will be laid down in the latter part of this year.

From these figures it would appear that in the larger type of light cruisers we can hold our own with Great Britain and more than hold our own with Japan, as far as ships that are already in commission or building are concerned. Both of these countries, however, have projected 10,000-ton ships and if the United States is to keep up with their navies in this respect it will be necessary for us to lay down some ships of this type.

As far as the smaller type of fast cruiser is concerned, we are very deficient in such vessels. Modern naval opinion, however, tends toward the eliminating of this class of light cruisers and the building of larger and more powerful ships.

We have a number of old cruisers of varying sizes in the second line of the Navy, including certain armored cruisers of large size and carrying guns of large caliber.

These cruisers all have a listed speed of more than 20 knots per hour. They are still of use to the Navy and would be of some, though probably not great use in time of war. However, as they are not carried in the first line, they have not been included in the tables. In slower ships of this class we are stronger than either Great Britain or Japan.

In destroyers, as the tables show, we are better equipped than either of the other two powers. Our aggregate tonnage in these vessels is greater than the tonnage of both Great Britain and Japan combined.

We are lacking in destroyer leaders and at some future time it may be found advisable to add vessels of this kind to the fleet. These vessels are in the nature of superdestroyers, and, while their armament in guns and torpedoes is little more powerful than that of destroyers, they can make better headway in rough weather than can the latter. They also give an opportunity to the flotilla commanders to carry an adequate staff, which can not be housed on the smaller destroyers.

The condition of our destroyers is very good and they are outclassed by no other destroyers in the world. There is nothing in any building program of England or Japan either under way or projected that threatens our supremacy in respect to these vessels.

In submarines our aggregate tonnage of vessels in commission is greater than that of Great Britain or Japan.

In coast-defense submarines, which includes the S boats, the R boats and the O and N boats, we are fairly well equipped. Some fault has been found with the engines and general construction of vessels of these types, but these faults, in so far as they have not been corrected, have developed principally when the submarines were used for purposes other than those for which they were constructed; that is to say, for fleet and cruising submarines.

We have at the present time in commission and in serviceable condition 85 coast-defense submarines of 485 tons or over. Great Britain has 28, including 3 of monitor type, and Japan has 34. Except in speed, our submarines of this type are in no way inferior to the same class of submarines of Great Britain and Japan. This is the class of boat that the Germans used during the World War and that proved so effective in destroying shipping. We have 8 more of this class of boats building. The Germans toward the end of the war further developed a much larger type of submarine, which they used for cruising purposes. These vessels had a wide cruising range and mounted guns running as high as 6 inches in caliber.

We have attempted to produce a faster type of submarine to accompany the fleet and several years ago brought out the three submarines of the T type, which proved on account of structure and lightness of their engines to be impracticable. These boats had a speed of somewhere around 20 knots per hour.

We have building at the present time three submarines of the V type, one of which is expected to be put in commission late in the present year. These three submarines are constructed to develop a speed of between 20 and 21 knots per hour, and it is expected that they will be used to accompany the fleet.

Great Britain has six fleet submarines of the K type, which are still in commission. These submarines are steam driven, whereas all of our submarines have Diesel oil engines.

Great Britain has further brought out a fleet submarine of the X type from which much was expected. In a recent trial of this ship, however, I am told that she has developed a speed of less than 20 knots per hour. The six K submarines and the one X submarine are the only fleet submarines which Great Britain has in commission. Up to date these vessels have not proved very successful.

Japan has two submarines of the fleet type in commission. They are, however, smaller submarines, being very little larger than our S boats, and no information is available as to their speed or their general characteristics. As a matter of fact, at the present time no country has successfully solved the problem of building fleet submarines.

We have no mine-laying submarines. Congress has just authorized the building of a mine-laying submarine of 2,700 tons.

Great Britain has three small mine-laying submarines with a speed of 17½ knots.

No information is available showing that Japan has any.

Great Britain has building six submarines, one a fleet submarine of 1,480 tons, and five coast defense submarines of under 1,000 tons.

Japan is reported to have building 23 fleet submarines of a tonnage of about 1,300 tons each, and 10 coast defense submarines of 960 tons each, and also four much smaller submarines.

To sum up the submarine situation, we are stronger than either Great Britain or Japan in coast defense submarines which are of the type to defend our own shores and that of our outlying possessions.

We have no mine-laying submarines, while Great Britain has three small ones and Japan, so far as is known, has none.

Our fleet submarines have up to date proved to be unsuccessful. The same may practically be said about the English and the Japanese fleet submarines. The Japanese building program, however, if successful, will give her a superiority in fleet submarines over both the British Navy and our own. We shall indoubtedly need to lay down more submarines in the future, especially mine-laying and fleet submarines.

In aviation it is difficult to make comparisons either with Great Britain or Japan. We have no accurate data as to the Japanese development of this branch of the service.

On account of her geographical situation, close to the Continent of Europe, for military purposes Great Britain is obliged to keep up a large aviation force. She has one air force covering both the army and the navy. The number of officers and men in the Royal Air Force having strictly to do with the navy is 319 officers and 1,907 men.

In this country, in naval aviation, we have 567 officers and 3,621 men. Three hundred and twenty-one of our officers are pilots. From these figures it would appear that in naval aviation we have a larger air force than Great Britain, although some of the work at shore stations done by our officers and men is done in Great Britain by officers and men of the Royal Air Force not strictly connected with the navy.

At the time of the armistice very little development had been made by either Great Britain, Japan, or this country in naval aviation as connected with the fleet. At that time we had no aircraft carrier in our Navy. Great Britain had several small carriers which had seen service during the war, and Japan like ourselves had no carrier. With the development of the aircraft carrier, however, the navies of the world are giving more attention to this branch of the service. At the present time we have 138 airplanes connected with the fleet. This includes planes attached to aircraft carriers, to battleships, cruisers, and tenders. For these airplanes we have a reserve of 50 per cent carried at the air stations on shore. The bulk of the planes attached to the fleet are modern, up-to-date planes and include fighting, scouting, observation, torpedo, and bombing planes. By the end of the next fiscal year we expect to have 183 planes with the fleet.

Great Britain has 84 planes allocated to the fleet. She keeps in reserve on shore 1 plane for every plane with the fleet, giving her in all 168 planes allocated to the fleet to our 207. Her program is to have 121 planes with the fleet by the end of next year.

From the best figures that can be obtained, Japan has 50 planes allocated to her fleet. The number of planes that she keeps in reserve is not known.

From these figures it will appear that the United States has more planes attached to the fleet than either Great Britain or Japan, and there is nothing to indicate that in efficiency or military characteristics her planes are in any way inferior to the planes of the other two countries.

In no class of combatant ships mentioned in the above tables, with the exception of the coal-burning battleships, has our Navy fallen off since the date of the signing of the treaty. On the contrary, we have replaced two old 20,000-ton battleships with two modern 32,600-ton battleships of the latest design. Upon the completion of the repairs recommended for the coal-burning ships, our battleship quota will be greatly stronger than it was at the time of the signing of the treaty.

In fast light cruisers, by the addition of the ten 7,500-ton ships, all of which are now in commission or about to be put in commission, we have increased greatly in strength.

In destroyers no changes have been made.

In submarines, beyond the ordinary wear and tear of the ships then in commission, we have kept up to the strength that we then had and in addition have added a number of submarines of the S type, and will shortly add the V boats and eight more S boats now under construction to our submarine force.

In carriers we have added the Langley and have the Lexington and Saratoga under construction.

In aviation we have more than double the number of planes attached to the fleet than we had at the time of the signing of the treaty.

Excepting as to battleships and aircraft carriers the 5-5-3 ratio with Great Britain and Japan was never in existence. In light cruisers we were far behind this ratio at the time of the treaty, and still are behind it though to a much less extent.

In destroyers we were ahead of the ratio at the time of the treaty and still are ahead of it.

In submarines, at least numerically, we are still ahead of the ratio. Whether we are actually ahead of the ratio can not be determined until the merits of the fleet and mine-laying submarines of Great Britain and Japan are more definitely determined.

In carriers we were not up to the ratio as far as Great Britain was concerned at the time of the signing of the treaty. We shall be nearly up to it when the Lexington and Saratoga go into commission, and we shall be well up to it as far as Japan is concerned.

In naval aviation in general, exclusive of the carriers, we are well above the ratio.

In general, with respect to the Navy, we are nearer the 5-5-3 ratio at the present time than we were at the time of the signing of the treaty. That we shall eventually reach that ratio throughout the Navy I believe should be our future policy.

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the report in the Wheeler case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The present occupant of the chair is advised that that matter is not now before the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think it is. I thought we were to have a vote on it. That was my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. I did not know the motion had been made to take up the report. Has it been formally made?

Mr. BORAH. It has not yet been formally made. Does the Senator from South Dakota desire to speak further on the subject?

Mr. STERLING. Not any further, except I wish to offer a substitute for the motion when it is presented.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution (S. Res. 235):

Resolved, That the report submitted by the chairman of the special committee appointed to investigate the charges against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER be adopted and approved and the special committee be discharged.

Mr. HEFLIN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following substitute for the resolution just submitted by the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute submitted by the Senator from South Dakota will be read.

The READING CLERK. In lieu of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from South Dakota proposes the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that no action be taken upon the majority and minority reports presented to the Senate in the matter of the investigation of the charges made in the indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana, and that pending the trial on such charges no question shall be made or raised as to the qualifications of Senator WHEELER or as to his right to a seat in the Senate on account of such charges.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ferris	Ladd	Smith
Ball	Fess	Lodge	Smoot
Bayard	Fletcher	McKinley	Spencer
Borah	Frazier	McNary	Stanfield
Brandegee	George	Mayfield	Stanley
Brookhart	Gerry	Moses	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	Neely	Sterling
Bruce	Gooding	Norris	Swanson
Cameron	Hale	Oddie	Trammell
Capper	Harris	Overman	Wadsworth
Caraway	Harrison	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Copeland	Heflin	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Cummins	Howell	Pittman	Warren
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Ralston	Wheeler
Dale	Johnson, Minn.	Reed, Pa.	Willis
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson
Dill	Kendrick	Sheppard
Edge	King	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no intention of discussing these resolutions, but in view of the fact that a quorum has just been called, I think it well to call the attention of the Senate to the resolution and to the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. The first resolution reads:

Resolved, That the report submitted by the chairman of the special committee appointed to investigate the charges against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER be adopted and approved and the special committee be discharged.

To that the Senator from South Dakota has offered as a substitute the following:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that no action be taken upon the majority and minority reports presented to the Senate in the matter of the investigation of the charges made in the indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States district court for the State of Montana, and that pending the trial on such charges no question shall be made or raised as to the qualifications of Senator WHEELER or as to his right to a seat in the Senate on account of such charges.

I think, Mr. President, the reading of the substitute resolution itself is, perhaps, a sufficient explanation and a sufficient comment on it. The resolution, aside from the question of refusing to deal with the work of the committee, either one way or the other, if adopted, would establish a precedent which, upon reflection, the Senate, in my opinion, would not for a moment consider establishing.

Here is a charge made against a Senator; a committee is appointed to make an investigation; the report is filed; and action upon that report is asked for. The substitute resolution is to the effect that the Senate of the United States waive, as it were, its right to pass upon the question of the fitness of a Senator until another department of the Government shall have passed upon the question, apparently, of his fitness to sit. The precedent itself would be to the effect that we are waiving the constitutional duty and the constitutional obligation of determining for ourselves who is qualified to sit in this body. As I have stated, I think that of itself is sufficient comment upon the substitute resolution.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word in regard to the matter, and that is all. The substitute resolution offered by myself carries out the theory that I have entertained in this case ever since the matter came before the committee in executive session. I have expressed myself again and again during the course of the debate on the floor to the same effect, and I have expressed the same idea in regard to Senator WHEELER's retention of his seat in the Senate pending trial that is expressed in the substitute resolution.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I assume that there can be no doubt about the full right of the Senate, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has so clearly outlined, to consider and act upon the matter which has been presented to the Senate by this resolution, but I find myself in the position of being unable to agree either with the majority report or with the minority report, and for this reason: What is the function of the Senate of the United States when a charge of any kind from any source is brought against one of its Members? We have but one function, and that is, under the constitutional provision, to determine whether we either ought to expel that Member, as we have the right to do, or whether there is any question in regard to his qualifications as a Member, into which we have the right to inquire if we so desire. Those are the only two constitutional foundations—section 5, Constitution—upon which the Senate either with propriety or with dignity may stand. We can not act as a petit jury to hear evidence and pass upon an indictment and determine whether in a given case in which a Member of the Senate has been indicted he is either innocent or guilty. That is the function of the judicial department of government.

My objection to the majority report is that, as I read it, it constitutes the Senate a petit jury and passes a verdict of absolute acquittal and exoneration. A jury can do that, but the jury alone can do it. The majority opinion, as I read, assumes to pass upon the evidence and render a verdict which only the courts of the land are equipped or entitled to do. Neither have we the right as a grand jury to determine whether the facts that are presented are sufficient to warrant an indictment. The minority report, as I read it, does precisely that thing and finds that there was sufficient evidence before the grand jury to warrant the indictment. We have no concern with the grand jury or whether the evidence before it was or was not sufficient, in their judgment, to warrant an indictment.

What have we to do? The junior Senator from Montana in a clear and moving statement announced the facts as he conceived them to be, and under those facts as he announced them, no man could have any doubt about his innocence. He was not guilty; there was not a trace of guilt from the beginning of his statement to the end of it. Then, as a result of that statement of the facts as he believed and announced them to be, the Senate appointed a committee to investigate a report the facts upon which the indictment was rendered.

The Senate adopted a resolution and appointed a committee to do—what? Not to make any finding, not to make any recommendations, but to do one thing only, and that is to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges of the indictment. There is nothing else in the resolution except to provide an investigating committee to gather what obviously the Senate could not gather, namely, the facts in the case, and report those facts to the Senate for such action as the Senate might see fit to take with reference to them. Those facts are here in the printed testimony which the committee has reported. What can we do on those facts?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Right in that connection I should like to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. SPENCER. Just a moment, if the Senator please.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to answer the Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. And I want to yield to the Senator in a moment, and I will do so.

Can the Senate do anything more under that state of facts than to say, "We have appointed our committee; we have received their report; the facts are before us; and from the facts that we have we see no reason why the right of membership in the Senate of the United States should be questioned with regard to the junior Senator from Montana." That is the fair thing to do. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] in eloquent and moving terms voiced what every one of us must respond to—that when a Senator of the United States is charged with anything anywhere, whether before a grand jury or in the public press, as he put it, or anywhere else, of course that Senator has the right to bring the charges to the notice of his colleagues and ask them whether in their judgment there is anything in the charges that affect his right to sit in the Senate of the United States.

It is our duty—a high duty, corresponding to the high privilege which belongs to the Senate—to examine into those facts and to voice our judgment as to whether or not, from those facts, there is anything which disqualifies him from membership in the Senate.

I yield now to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator declined to yield when I asked him to yield. My question was pertinent to a matter that he was then discussing. He asked what the Senate had to do with the matter—what was the right of the Senate. May I ask the Senator from Missouri this question:

Assuming that the evidence shows that a Senator, in obedience to the direction of this body, is performing a public duty, and a conspiracy is formed to interfere with him in the performance of that duty, and an effort is made to injure his reputation and to stop him in the work that he is carrying on at the direction of the Senate, does the Senator from Missouri think that all the action which the Senate should take is that it should make an investigation, take evidence, report the evidence to the Senate, and leave the public without any finding or conclusion touching the matter, and leave the Senator whose conduct is the subject-matter of investigation without either a vindication or a condemnation?

Mr. SPENCER. I certainly do not; and, without now agreeing with the correctness of the premises of the Senator, but assuming them to be true, the duty of the Senate might well be to condemn the conspiracy, to praise the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. SPENCER. Just a minute; let me finish the answer—to praise the Senator, and then, if any charges have been made against him, to continue in conclusion with our confidence in his right to membership in this body; but that does not reach what is before us in these reports.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a further question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator know that the uncontradicted evidence shows that one Mr. Coan sought to injure the reputation of Senator WHEELER by causing him to be indicted upon evidence that he knew to be untrue, for the purpose of stopping him in his investigation of the Department of Justice? Does not the Senator know that that statement is supported by the testimony of the witness, Mr. Coan himself, which testimony establishes the facts in part, and by the testimony of Mr. Grorud, who was a former attorney general of the State of Montana, and that the evidence of Mr. Grorud is practically uncontradicted?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Missouri does not know whether those facts are so or not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to read the uncontradicted evidence——

Mr. SPENCER. No; the Senator from Missouri will not at this time yield further on that phase of the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, then, does not want to know what the facts are as established by the evidence?

Mr. SPENCER. Not by way of interruption in an argument which has nothing to do with those facts.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course the Senator can decline to yield; but I submit to the Senator that my question is a fair one, pertinent to the issue now under consideration, and that, if he is unwilling to answer it, it would, anywhere else, and in the case of any other person than a Senator, impeach the integrity of his motives and the truthfulness of his statements.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Arkansas is quite welcome to his opinion; and if the facts as the Senator from Arkansas outlines them were established——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator——

Mr. SPENCER. Just let me finish, if you please.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offered to read to the Senate the uncontradicted testimony of the witness——

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator allow me, as I have the floor, to continue?

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. At the proper time I shall be glad to go into the proof in regard to the statements of the Senator from Arkansas, but not now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I am now in the process of a simple and brief argument on a constitutional question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I agree with the Senator that it is very simple.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall be glad to, at any proper time, examine into the facts of which the Senator from Arkansas speaks, and if those facts were demonstrated, I concede in passing that it would be not only the right, but it might be the duty, of the Senate to condemn severely, in language as strong as any man might want to make it, such a conspiracy, exonerate the Member of the Senate, and praise him for what he has done. That, however, is not what is before the Senate now. The one thing before the Senate is as to what action the Senate of the United States ought to take with regard to an indictment which has been found in the courts against the junior Senator from Montana.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SPENCER. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I want to correct the Senator, because that seems to be the premise from which he is proceeding with satire and logic.

We are not dealing with an indictment at all, nor with what should be done with that indictment. They will proceed to trial upon the indictment. Our proceeding here does not seek to interfere with the indictment. The chairman of the committee was very careful not to permit that to be gone into. We inquired into the facts concerning the charge against Senator WHEELER, and brought the facts here; and the question is not what we will do with the indictment but what we will do with the facts which we have brought here.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Idaho is quite right, except that the only facts which were submitted to the committee had to do with that indictment. Here is the resolution:

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. Let me read it first. Here is the resolution:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore—

To do what?

To investigate and to report to the Senate the facts—

What facts?

In relation to the charges—

What charges?

Made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States district court for the State of Montana.

Mr. BORAH. And that is precisely what we did. We investigated the facts concerning the charges which were evidenced by the indictment laid in the courts of Montana, but we secured all the facts relating to it. There are more facts in this report which were never known to the grand jury of Montana than those which were known to it. We went into all the facts, and have reported the facts here, and in our report we do not say a word about the indictment. We do not make any suggestion with regard to the indictment. We simply report the facts growing out of that charge, and those facts are here. Now, what are we going to do with them?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, here is what I think we ought to do with them, and then I am through:

Certainly I have no desire, if I know my own heart, to attempt to interfere with the exoneration of a Senator who has been unjustly charged, within the full limits of such an exoneration as the Senate can give to him; but what does the majority report do? I submit that any man who reads it can come to no other conclusion than that the result of the majority report is precisely what a petit jury might find, and what, doubtless, we hope a petit jury will find—a verdict of not guilty and consequent exoneration. That is not the function of the Senate. We do not have the machinery of cross-examination or the judicial equipment that enable us to pass such a judgment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It has often happened in the course of the history of this body that charges of a grave character were made against a Senator, in the public press or otherwise. He rises in this body to a question of personal privilege, as of course he has the right to do, calls attention to the charges, and asks an investigation. There is no indictment at all in that case. A committee is appointed to inquire into all the facts, not charged in an indictment out in Montana, but charged in a newspaper published in the city of New York or the city of Chicago. It investigates those facts. The committee comes back and reports to the Senate that there is nothing to the charges; no truth at all in them. Does the Senator mean to say that there is nothing the Senate can do in the matter?

Mr. SPENCER. Undoubtedly the Senate can pass any resolution regarding the qualification of that Member, or any resolution that even indirectly has to do with its other power of expulsion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, yes.

Mr. SPENCER. But those are the only two things the Senate can do.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But what can it do in that case? What kind of action could it take except to adopt the report of the majority finding that the facts are not as set forth in the indictment?

Mr. SPENCER. It would depend entirely upon how that report, in the hypothetical case of the Senator, was framed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Whatever it is, whether the committee finds that the facts are as charged or that they are not as charged, the Senate would either adopt or reject that report.

Mr. SPENCER. That might well be, but the Senator knows that is not the fact here.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that the only difference between that case and this case is that there is an indictment here, and there is not in the other case.

Mr. SPENCER. We are asked to usurp the functions of the trial jury in a pending case and pass the same kind of a verdict that it is hoped that jury will pass.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Just one other question. In the case that I have cited no indictment has been returned, but an indictment was returned afterwards. Now, what is the difference between the two?

Mr. SPENCER. The Senate's action came after the indictment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. My judgment is that if the Senator involved requested an expression of opinion from the Senate as to whether there was anything in the charges that affected his right to sit as a Member of the Senate, we ought at once to respond, and in as full language as you like, but nothing more.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Oh, no; in that case, when there is no indictment, the Senator tells the Senate now that the appropriate procedure upon the incoming of the report of the committee is either to adopt it or reject it.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; so that we can not either adopt or reject the report now, because there is an indictment pending. In other words, the power of the Senate depends upon whether an indictment has been or has not been returned.

Mr. SPENCER. That may be the conclusion of the Senator from Montana. It is not mine.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is why I rose. I wanted to know from the Senator what the difference is. As I understand him, if no indictment has been returned the Senate may properly adopt a motion either adopting or rejecting the report of the committee; but he is arguing now, as I understand, that because the indictment has been returned we have no such power.

Mr. SPENCER. That is not the argument I have tried to make or the position I take.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I rose so that the Senator would clarify it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand the Senator's position, it is this: That he would suspend judgment in this case. I understand that to be the purport of the substitute resolution moved by the Senator from South Dakota, that the Senate should now stop and suspend judgment. Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. SPENCER. It is not. I am not supporting the minority report. I do not agree with the minority report. There might be a question of a difference of opinion regarding the propriety of the Senate interfering while a judicial case was pending. I recognize there might be some difference of opinion on that question; but I assume there can be no difference of opinion about the right of the Senate to proceed irrespective of an indictment. We would have a perfect right, upon the evening that the petit jury was about to receive the case, to pass our resolution of confidence in our fellow Member, and send it broadcast to the State where he was being tried, if we saw fit to do it. Our right is not limited by an indictment, or by a trial, or by anything else except our own will.

Mr. GEORGE. What would the Senator do with this majority report, then?

Mr. SPENCER. I can conclude by answering the Senator's question in submitting a resolution which is along the line of the only action the Senate can properly take, and I have talked longer than I intended.

All that I feel in regard to this question is as to what is the right and fair thing to the junior Senator from Montana, and the proper thing for the Senate to do, and I can sum it up in a resolution I have drawn, which can not now be placed before the Senate because there is a resolution and a substitute therefor now before the Senate, so that the parliamentary procedure would not allow my resolution to be presented; but I will read it to the Senator, and it at least explains what I think ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. Is the Senator from Georgia through?

Mr. GEORGE. I would like to hear the resolution. I understood the Senator was going to read the resolution, which would give me an answer to the question I asked.

Mr. SPENCER. It is as follows:

The Senate having before it the majority——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Georgia kindly consents that I may ask a question before the resolution of the Senator is read. I want to inquire of the Senator this, suppose this committee had reported that the facts charged in the indictment were true. Would we then be entitled to adopt the report of the committee?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Well——

Mr. SPENCER. I still think, if I may say so to the Senator from Montana, that our power rests alone in passing upon the qualification of our colleague, upon his right to continue membership, and no more.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But suppose the committee did report that the facts are as stated in the indictment, that the charge is true, and some one moved to adopt the report of the committee. I understand the Senator to say now that the Senate would not have any power to do that.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not speak in limitation of their power. The Senate is supreme. It can do as it likes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. As to the propriety?

Mr. SPENCER. I should say it would be improper, and for very obvious reasons. The facts in this case as in any case are changing, additional facts may appear, facts that now seem to be true may disappear. It needs no argument of mine to convince so able a lawyer as the senior Senator from Montana that only a court of law, with its machinery for examination and cross-examination, can finally pass a verdict.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. SPENCER. Why should we assume this judicial function.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let us see. The committee reports that the charges are true; they have investigated the facts; they report the facts, and for the purpose of the case we will say that the report is unanimous, that my colleague is guilty of the act charged.

Mr. BORAH. Let us say, furthermore, that the Senator from Missouri has examined the evidence, and finds the report is true. What would he do about it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator would not allow the Senator from Montana to retain his seat in this body, would he?

Mr. SPENCER. The hypothetical question is not difficult to answer. If the report of the committee showed facts as being true which warranted either the expulsion of the Member, or which warranted a finding of his disqualification to sit as a Member, the proper action of the Senate would be either to expel him or to deny his qualification to membership. It would be a useless thing merely to approve or disapprove an alleged statement of facts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We would adopt the report.

Mr. SPENCER. We would act upon the facts as they were reported before us.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; we would adopt the report.

Mr. SPENCER. We should take such action as under our constitutional rights any established facts warranted. We can expel or refuse to expel. We can pass upon his qualification. We could do nothing more.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. So that the situation is this, as I understand the Senator: If a Senator is charged with an offense which, if established, would necessitate his expulsion from this body, if the committee investigating the matter finds that he is guilty, then the Senate can adopt the report and expel him; but if the committee reports that he is not guilty, and the facts are not established, the Senate then would not do anything at all?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly. The Senate can express its confidence in its Member by refusing to expel him or by approving his qualifications and let the matter remain where it was before there were any charges.

Mr. GEORGE. I will be very glad to have the Senator read his resolution expressing his views.

Mr. SPENCER. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate, having before it the majority and minority reports of its special committee empowered "to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana," and bearing in mind that the duty of the Senate in the matter has to do only with the "qualifications of its own Members" and its right to punish or expel a Member, declares that no reason has been presented to the Senate which questions the right of the junior Senator from Montana to membership in the Senate and discharges its committee from further investigation of the matter.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator merely wants to say in his own language precisely what the acceptance of this report would say.

Mr. SPENCER. If I thought that, may I say to the Senator from Georgia, I certainly would have no objection to the majority report. I conceive that that report goes far beyond our function. I conceive justice to our colleague and our own dignity does not allow us to go further than some such action as I have outlined, and that is the only reason I rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator proposes a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that no reason exists why the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is not entitled to retain his seat. Upon what does he base that conclusion and opinion?

Mr. SPENCER. Had the Senator heard the beginning of the resolution he would have remembered that I based it upon the fact that the Senate has before it the reports of the majority and minority members of the committee, and that the Senate bears in mind its own constitutional limitation. Of course, the facts are based upon those reports. That is the only evidence we have.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator's resolution necessarily imply an approval of the majority report?

Mr. SPENCER. If it does, why not adopt the resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to its adoption, not as a substitute for the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, but as an independent or additional proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, the argument that has been made by the Senator from Missouri might have been an appropriate argument at the time of the introduction of the original resolution. It is not, in my opinion, now apt in any sense.

After the adoption of the resolution, by which a committee was appointed to investigate the facts, and an investigation by that committee, two reports have been presented to the Senate—the majority report, which in reality exonerates the Senator from Montana from wrongdoing, and the minority report, which in substance says there was a prima facie case made against him which justified the indictment in the Federal court in Montana.

At this particular stage, therefore, the question has gone far beyond the position suggested by the Senator from Missouri. We stand here to-day with a twofold duty, it seems to me; first, there is the duty that we owe to the Senator from Montana, the highest duty that colleagues can owe to one another; secondly, there is a duty even more solemn than that, which we owe to the Senate of the United States itself.

If the Senator from Montana is guilty of the offense charged, it would be, in my opinion, an intolerable thing for us to sit here supine and indifferent. If, on the other hand, the Senator from Montana is innocent of the charge laid against him, it would be worse than supine and indifferent, it would be cowardly, for the Senate of the United States not to go upon record in that regard.

I have read the testimony presented before the committee. I have listened with an intentness that few Senators have to the arguments that have been presented, and I am ready to vote. I say that upon the testimony that was adduced before the committee there is no reasonable man on earth who can say that the Senator from Montana was guilty of the crime, or that the indictment against him was justified. Believing in his innocence, therefore, acquitted as he is by four members of a special committee appointed by the Senate of the United States, it would be an outrageous thing, outrageous to him and outrageous for the Senate of the United States, if it believed in his innocence, not to say it and say it just as positively as it can say it at this time.

I am ready to vote, and I am ready to vote for the majority report, or even a stronger report, for there are collateral and cognate circumstances in connection with this case which arouse every bit of indignation that an individual can have, every bit of indignation and resentment that may repose in the breast of every public official. I believe the Senator from Montana to be innocent. I want to vote that way. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules of the Senate forbid any demonstrations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate. The vote should be promptly taken upon the pending resolution. It would be puerile, cowardly, for the Senate at this stage of the proceeding to content itself with an approval of the resolution proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

This issue transcends in its importance every political consideration that by any possible stretch of fancy can be associated with it or that can grow out of it. The undisputed evidence establishes some facts which it is pertinent for Senators to remember.

A Member of this body, executing the mandate of the Senate, was indicted by a grand jury in his home State. The Senate unanimously passed a resolution, at the request of that Senator, authorizing the creation of a special committee, to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, to investigate the facts in connection with the indictment and report them to the Senate.

The committee performed its duty in complete detail. It sought and procured and brought before the Senate all the facts, or alleged facts, within the knowledge of any witness whose name was suggested to the committee. The evidence shows that while the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] was carrying out an order of the Senate a plan was formed to interfere with him as the agent of the Senate, to hamper him in the discharge of his duties, and stop him in the execution of his task, undertaken and carried forward by direction of the Senate.

The evidence supporting that statement of the facts was read into the RECORD yesterday by my colleague, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], who is a member of the committee, and by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Its credibility has in no respect been attacked, either by any witness who testified or by any Senator who has discussed the issues involved in the pending resolution. So that according to the rule of credibility in courts the truthfulness of the statement may be fairly accepted.

The testimony shows that a witness in the case went to the State of Montana for the purpose of procuring an indictment against the junior Senator from Montana because he was in the execution of a mandate of the Senate. It shows that he approached a former Assistant Attorney General of the State and frankly stated to him a purpose to injure the reputation of the junior Senator from Montana and to stop him in the discharge of the duties which the Senate had ordered him to perform. That is the undisputed record of the evidence. Agents of a conspiracy traveled almost across the continent of the United States and combined and collaborated with others, not alone for the purpose of injuring the fair name of a citizen of the United States but for the express purpose of preventing a Member of the United States Senate from fearlessly executing the order of the Senate.

Now, the committee have reported, and a division arises over the report. The majority, four members, say that the evidence discloses that the junior Senator from Montana has not committed an offense against his country, that he is not subject to indictment, that he has performed his duty and has violated no law. Upon that state of the record we are asked by a Member of this body who served upon the committee to take no action upon the subject, to pledge ourselves not to vindicate the junior Senator from Montana. Such a proposal, if it emanated from any other source or was presented anywhere else than in the Senate, the rules of the Senate forbidding such characterization, would be regarded as contemptible. The public are entitled to have the Senate take manly and decisive action.

What would the constituents of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STEELING] say if they could give expression to their views regarding the resolution which he has presented to the Senate to-day? What would they expect of their representative in this great body? Not cowardice, not duplicity, not ambiguity, but straight-out expression. What do the men and women of the United States who have respect for honest public officers require of the Senate on this occasion? That the Senate shield no guilty Member and that the Senate protect its Members from treachery and dishonesty. How contemptible it would appear to the average citizen to be evasive on an issue that involves the honesty of a Senator.

What have the public and the Senator from Montana the right to expect? If the evidence shows that he was framed, if the testimony proves that while fearlessly discharging his duty and obeying your order, he became the victim of a conspiracy as cowardly and as damnable as ever marred the records of court or legislature, then what language can describe the perfidy of his associates whose order he is obeying if they permit his hand to be restrained, his tongue to be silenced, his courage to be intimidated? What right have you to order him to investigate the Department of Justice and make public its inefficiencies and corrupt transactions, and then, when he advances with a determination that inspires the guilty with dread, leave him without support, protection, or indorsement?

I have asked what would the people of South Dakota say to THOMAS STERLING, their Senator for a little while yet, if they knew he had asked his colleagues, under the circumstances shown to exist in Mr. WHEELER's case, to leave Mr. WHEELER to suffer the vengeance of conspirators against him who attempt to destroy him for performing a duty imposed upon him by his colleagues? What would your constituents say if you contented yourselves with taking no action, if you pledged yourselves to do nothing in such a case?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CARAWAY. What objection can an honest man have to expressing an honest opinion about a question that is before him?

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator will have to ask some one else that question. I can not comprehend the mental attitude or the moral character of the Senator who under the issues as presented here is unwilling either to approve WHEELER or to condemn him. It is cowardly in the extreme to order him to perform a duty and then when he is harassed and interfered with in the discharge of that duty to forsake him without defense and without vindication. There is not a human being from limit to limit of this continent, not a well-informed citizen of this Nation, who does not know that WHEELER was framed, and that the object of it was to conceal fraud and corruption in the Department of Justice. There is not an honest man in all the homes that adorn the hills and valleys of this Republic whose heart will not thrill with indignation when he knows that the Senate has seriously considered a proposal to penalize a man, whatever lack of diplomacy he may have shown, who has done his duty in such a way as to win the confidence even of his enemies.

He is entitled, as all who bear his name are entitled, to have you stand up on one side or the other; and I denounce you as a craven and a coward if you hide yourself behind the substitute resolution proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. Vote "yes" or "no," and when you vote you will register for all your life yet to come your attitude respecting honesty in public office and courage in the performance of public duty.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, there seems to be a disposition to evade taking a direct position upon this question by resorting to technicalities. In my opinion there is a question now before us that transcends technicalities and politics. Occasionally an opportunity is given us here to rise above the strife and contentions of selfish and political interest. One such occasion is here now. Is the Senate of the United States capable of administering justice; is the Senate of the United States capable of rising above party advantage and doing justice—justice without which civilization is a mockery and political institutions temples of tyranny?

It has been said that the Senate owes it to itself to make a direct decision on the issue as to the guilt or innocence of this man; it has been said that it owes it to the Senator from Montana; but more than all else I believe it owes it to the American people.

Are we capable of deciding without bias whether or not this man is worthy or unworthy of a seat in this body? Are we capable, after an investigating committee led by one of the ablest and fairest men in this body completely exonerated Senator WHEELER, to reach a decision and to announce to the American people that this man is innocent, worthy of and entitled to enjoy the rights and privileges of a Senator?

No man who has heard or read the testimony before the committee suggests or even hints that he is guilty. Then, tell me if there is any other question here than that of simple, downright, straight, American justice?

Why do we hesitate? Are we to become persecutors of honorable Members of our own body? I can understand petty partisanship entering into many issues that arise here, but in the name of Christianity and our boasted civilization, when it comes to dealing with a fellow Senator, his reputation, when it comes to dealing with a young statesman with all his future before him, his family and his family's reputation, a sovereign State's right to have its Senator's qualifications fairly judged, let us shun party politics and give to the country evidence of our belief in the principles of justice.

The country will construe our action to-day only in one direction—our approval or disapproval of the charges made against Senator WHEELER. A postponement, a compromise, any action except a straight vote of confidence will be interpreted as against Senator WHEELER. If every scintilla of evidence points to his innocence, why deny—never mind him—your countrymen an immediate and a truthful verdict?

As one who has come from and represents in part the State where the junior Senator from Montana was born and received his early education I want to raise my voice and send back word to the people of his native State, his kin and friends in Massachusetts that Senator WHEELER has been found to be an innocent man; that he has been in the opinion of many of his associates the victim of the most damnable scheme to injure his reputation and influence that a public man ever experienced in America. Mr. President, if we fail to render justice, the spirit of the American people will not deny it to him. Is that American spirit of justice still in the hearts of the men elected to the United States Senate? That is the issue here. When this vote is cast let the Senate show to the country that it is a believer in and a giver of justice. If we are not capable of, or have not the courage to decide justly and without equivocation the qualifications of one of our own Members, how can we expect the American people to give us credit for the courage and capacity necessary to make laws for 110,000,000 people? It is clear, as clear as the light of day, that a vote for the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is a vote for justice.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I had not expected to say another word in regard to this matter. I was ready to vote long ago, and I would say nothing now but for the personalities that have been indulged in by some Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Reference has been made to a lack of courage; insinuations of cowardice have been made; duplicity in the matter of the presentation of the minority views and the substitute resolution now pending has been suggested. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota has never felt called upon to defend his record for courage in the Senate of the United States, and he does not believe he is required to defend it now. Not now referring to his constituency, the Senator from South Dakota by vote and voice always expressed on this floor his honest convictions, his best judgment, and acted according to the dictates of his conscience, even up to this hour, and is doing so now. I ask Senators, my colleagues, who have listened to the discussion and proceedings of the last three or four days here in the Senate to determine for themselves whether or not I have been lacking in the courage that a Senator of the United States should have in the expression of his convictions.

Mr. President, it has been asked what would my constituents say? Is it material to this case as to what my constituents in the State of South Dakota will say? That is between me and my constituents; it is not the business of the Senator from Arkansas to inquire; I am ready to answer to my constituents for all I do here. I have one view, however, as to what they will say, and that is that though a man be a Senator of the United States no different or higher right should be accorded to him than to the humblest citizen of the land, and that is what you are proposing to do by this majority report.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Montana has been indicted. That indictment is pending in the Federal court in the State of Montana. His case is to be tried before a petit jury, and I have objected to proceedings here, the effect of which will inevitably be to prejudge and prejudice the case so that a fair trial before a jury will be well-nigh impossible.

Mr. President, I believe in the dignity, in the majesty, in the justice of the law, and I stand here in a feeble way to appeal for a recognition of those attributes. We have the three great departments of the Government—the legislative, executive, and judicial. This case now should be considered as in the hands of the judicial department of the Government. That department has taken jurisdiction of it. The case is pending in the United States courts and there it should be tried as all cases are tried under the orderly processes, proceedings, and safeguards of an American court of justice.

What has been done in other cases and by other Senators and Members of the House? Consider the Mitchell case of years ago. Senator Mitchell appears before the Senate, recites the charges that have been made against him and says, because thereof, he will not intrude himself upon the presence of the Senate longer, and withdraws until after the trial of that charge, a charge which he at the time emphatically denied. What happened in the case of Senator Burton, of Kansas. He does not remain in the Senate of the United States after he is indicted, to participate in the proceedings of the body. So, in the Langley case now pending before the House of Representatives, Mr. LANGLEY undoubtedly has the grace to refrain from participation in the proceedings of that body while he is under indictment. Moreover, quite the opposite of what we have done here, the chairman of the House committee considering the Langley case says that no proceedings will be had before the committee until there has been a trial and a determination by the court of the guilt or innocence of Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. President, that has been my theory of this case all along. There has been no duplicity about it. Everybody has understood my position. I have never agreed to the proposition that it was the business of the committee or of the Senate to determine the guilt or innocence of Senator WHEELER. I have offered the substitute resolution to carry out my idea in regard to the matter.

I give expression to the same thought that other Senators have given expression to, for example, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER]. I hope that Senator WHEELER when he goes before the jury in Montana will be able to explain and to refute every one of the charges which have been made against him; but, Mr. President, it is not for us to sit here and exercise the functions of a trial jury.

Waiving constitutional grounds, we are going outside what I deem to be our proper province in trying this case. Leave it to the jury. Suppose the jury on the evidence before it finds Senator WHEELER guilty of the charges. He has had, under our American system, a fair trial, of the result of which he can not complain. What will be our position under such circumstances? I have cited the case of Senator WHEELER, a Senator of the United States, having an advantage over the ordinary citizen in such a case as this. Suppose—and I have used the illustration before because it appeals to me strongly, and the supposition is not far removed from conditions as they exist in the Senate of the United States to-day—suppose, under like conditions as they now exist, some Senator on the minority side should be indicted in his State and should demand a trial, declaring "I am not guilty; I am anxious to go before the jury, confront the witnesses against me, tell them my story, and produce the witnesses in my behalf," and suppose he should be denied that opportunity by the Senate of the United States, which declares, "Notwithstanding your protestations of innocence, your wish to submit the question to a jury of your peers, we are going to try you here in the Senate of the United States, regardless of any feeling of personal or party prejudice that may exist against you." Mr. President, that seems a travesty to me; it does not comport with my idea of American justice and fair play. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] appealed to our sense of American justice, but that is not justice. Equality before the law, as stated in the minority report, is the greatest principle upon which, it is said, our institutions rest, and it is not equality before the law to prejudge the case here when it is now before a court having full jurisdiction of it.

Mr. President, these are the reasons; these are the motives for what may be termed the interest I have shown in these proceedings. What will my constituents say? I have sufficient confidence, Mr. President, in the intelligence and reasonableness of my constituents to believe that when they understand the situation they will say, "You did right in standing for justice and fair play, and for the denial to even a Senator of the United States a privilege and a right not accorded to any other citizen of the land."

Mr. PEPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to make this statement: The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] a minute ago said that this had been his contention, speaking of his minority report, from the beginning. I want to read what he said on the 21st of this month, with reference to that, in answer to a question from the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. It appears upon page 9427 of the RECORD.

The question of the Senator from Montana was:

> If the Senator believed that the Senate had no power to do that, how can he reconcile his acceptance of an appointment on the committee?

The answer of the Senator from South Dakota is:

> I did not think there was any Senator who perhaps at first blush thought that the Senate was without power to determine this thing. I did not. It was not clear in my own mind as to what the Senate could or should do in the premises under the charge made by Senator WHEELER to the effect that this was a frame-up and that the Government officers acted under improper influence or from bad motives. It was somewhat confusing to me.

He said just a minute ago that that had been his contention all the time; and that was his statement this week.

Just one other thing. I asked the Senator this:

> I, of course, should not have mentioned what went on in the executive session of the committee, except that the Senator sees fit to do it. Did not this occur, that the case was closed, no one wanted to hear another witness, the committee met and after discussion left to the chairman, by direction of the committee, the duty to make the report, and that until the report was prepared and ready to be signed the Senator did not even suggest that this theory should be discussed at all?
>
> Mr. STERLING. I did not assent to any report the chairman of the committee might make.
>
> Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator did agree that the chairman should prepare the report.
>
> Mr. STERLING. He was to prepare a report for the committee to examine; certainly.
>
> Mr. CARAWAY. And the Senator never suggested that this theory should be considered in preparing the report, did he?
>
> Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I did not suggest it openly, nor did any other member of the committee suggest a theory on which the report should be based.

I shall be glad to have the Senator reconcile that statement on Wednesday last with the statement he has just made.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the debate seems to me to have confused a case which is in its essence simple. I am unable to perceive in this record the difficulties which some of the speakers have injected into it.

On a certain date a Senator rose in his place, and what he said was, in legal effect, this. He said to the Senate of the United States:

> Gentlemen, you are the judges of the qualifications of membership in this body. I am under accusation. I ask you to exercise your constitutional prerogative in this regard, and to do it at my request.

The Senate might have decided that it was an inopportune time to institute an inquiry to determine the qualification of the Senator. The Senate might have decided that since a criminal proceeding was pending in the judicial department of the Government the legislature would await the decision of the judiciary before acting, in full consciousness, however, that it would not be bound one way or the other by the judicial determination of the pending question.

The Senate, however, chose to enter upon the discharge of a function which is unquestionably constitutional; namely, it proceeded in the orderly and regular way for the purpose of determining whether or not there was anything in the pending case which should lead to a declaration that the Senator was disqualified for membership in this body. The matter was proceeded with before a committee duly appointed, and we now have before us the majority and the minority reports.

If I correctly understand the majority report, it is to the effect that the Senator from Montana is not disqualified from holding his seat in this body, and that he is not disqualified for the reasons which are set forth in the conclusion of fact reached by the majority of the committee.

Mr. President, we can not straddle upon a proposition of qualification or disqualification. Either the Senator from Montana is qualified or he is disqualified; and he is not qualified unless the things said in the majority report are true. Therefore, I find no difficulty in deciding that I must vote one way or the other on this issue. I can not adopt a middle course. I can not justify myself in suspending my judgment pending the proceedings of a correlative branch of the Government with which I have nothing to do. I must vote upon the issue that is before me, and the issue that is before me is whether the Senator from Montana is disclosed by this record as qualified or disqualified to sit in this body.

Having reached the conclusion that the majority of the committee are right in finding that he is qualified, and being of opinion, giving him the benefit of reasonable doubt on the issues that are doubtful, that the conclusions of fact reached by the majority are sound, I have no escape from the conclusion that I must vote for the resolution proposed by the majority, and I expect to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is absolutely correct in his statement about what the committee has found. In its report—I mean the majority report—this language is used:

> In conclusion, the committee wholly exonerates Senator BURTON K. WHEELER from any and all violation of section 1782 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and find that he neither received or accepted, or agreed to receive or accept, any compensation—

And so forth. The trumped-up charges against him have been found to be untrue.

Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything upon the question now before us, because the majority report had been so ably presented by Senator BORAH and his associates on the committee, Senators CARAWAY and SWANSON; but the last statement of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] makes me feel that some Senator ought to say just now what I am going to say.

If the position of the Senator from South Dakota should become the position of the Senate, district attorneys throughout the country and Federal grand juries under their direction could disqualify every man in this body upon the flimsiest pretext and mere rumor by railroading him and indicting him.

The Senator from South Dakota suggests that we should do nothing until the petit jury acts in Montana and determines whether or not Senator WHEELER is guilty. Why, Mr. President, suppose the district attorney should not want to push that case for trial. Suppose he should continue it from one term of the court to another and the Senator from Montana should follow the suggestion of the Senator from South Dakota, and retire from this Chamber, and await the action of the court under the direction of the district attorney in Montana. He would deprive him of his seat in this body, and he would deprive the people of his State of his service in this body, and he would deprive the people of the United States of his superb courage and great ability in prosecuting those who have disgraced and perverted the offices they held from the ends of their institution.

Mr. President, some things connected with this frame-up indictment of Senator WHEELER make this a very ugly situation to me. Mr. Daugherty, who escaped punishment somehow by a whitewash arrangement in the House more than a year ago, managed to keep certain testimony from getting to the House Committee on the Judiciary, but he did not escape here. The evidence obtained against him over here was strong and convincing. The Senate named to go after him a Member who had the courage to lead, and he did proceed in the investigation in such a competent and courageous fashion that he brought down the "game." He drove Daugherty from a place in the Cabinet into private life—a man shown to have accumulated thousands of dollars through the crooked deals of crooked agents under him—and think of it, Senators, that man appointed the district attorney who has secured the indictment of Senator WHEELER!

What was the atmosphere around that courthouse when Senator WHEELER was indicted? Did a grand jury of its own motion, and acting upon the testimony trying to get at the truth, proceed to indict him? No. They balloted once, and refused to indict him. They balloted twice, three times, four times, five times, six times, seven times, eight times, nine times, and each and every time refused to indict him and then adjourned for the day. They were now allowed to separate, and they went to dinner with certain Republican politicians, and while at dinner they were told that it was desirable and necessary that Senator WHEELER be indicted whether he could be convicted or not, and strange to say on their return they indicted him!

What has the Senate come to if it will permit trumped-up charges to be made against an honorable man in this body, led by a district attorney who was mad with WHEELER because his boss, Daugherty, was driven by WHEELER from the place that he had disgraced?

An able and honorable Senator and a brave and patriotic American citizen, the husband of a splendid and charming wife, and the father of fine and devoted children, is "framed" for the purpose of hampering him in the great work that he is doing here for the good of his country. Would the Senator from South Dakota leave him suspended in the air, with Coan's false charges hanging over him, charges trumped up at the instance of the Republican National Committee, who told Coan they wanted something on WHEELER? They hired Coan to get something on WHEELER. Coan says he was hired for that purpose by the Republican National Committee.

Then we see the district attorney appointed by Daugherty seeking to have a Federal grand jury indict WHEELER, and when they refuse political pressure is brought to bear on certain members of the grand jury and an indictment is finally obtained. The Senator from South Dakota objected to going into that phase of the case before the committee. That testimony was not permitted to go in; but I state to the Senate and to the country that three grand jurors told Senator WHEELER just what I have told you, and they would have told the committee if they had been permitted to do so. Talk about taking no action and suspending judgment. We owe it to common justice and decency to repudiate the suggestion. The position taken by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] is utterly ridiculous. He said if WHEELER was guilty and this committee found him guilty the report ought to be adopted and he ought to be expelled—that is his position—but that if he was not guilty and the committee reported that he was not guilty they should not take any action at all but should leave him suspended in the air with the false charges hanging over him.

Mr. President, I have been in the Congress, in the two Houses for nearly 20 years, and that position is the most absurd and ridiculous position that I have ever known any public man from justice of the peace to President to take. [Laughter.] If they should frame me as they have threatened to do I would hate to fall into the hands of men who feel like he does about this important matter. Senators, when a man wins his election at the hands of the voters of his State, and comes here with a commission to serve his people in this great law-making body and enters into the battle here as this young man from Montana has done, fighting for clean government, driving crooks from high place, daring to attack the mighty, corrupt political conditions that he found when he came, he ought to be praised, encouraged, and supported. Instead of that, Coan said, "Senator WHEELER was attacking the administration, and nobody would get up and say anything, and the National Republican Committee hired me to go out there and get something on him, and I have been paid to do it." That is the substance of his statement. So the National Republican Committee paid Coan to do what he did, and the district attorney holds his job by reason of Daugherty's favor, and the grand jury refused, when undisturbed and uninfluenced, to indict WHEELER, but after corrupt political influence was used, they found an indictment.

Mr. President, the Senate ought to go on record saying that Senator WHEELER is guilty or not guilty. There is no other way to decently and honorably settle this question. Let the crooks know now that self-respecting and honorable Senators will not knowingly permit corrupt court officials to abuse and misuse their positions to persecute and punish those who are trying to serve their country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. I am not advised as to how that Senator would vote if he were present, so I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], who would vote as I intend to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SWANSON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. I have been unable to obtain a transfer, and not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], whose pair has already been announced, if present would vote "nay."

The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] if present would also vote "nay."

The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] would vote "nay" if present, and the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] would also vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and that if present the Senator from Colorado would vote "nay," as would the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. STANLEY (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. STANLEY. I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair, and not knowing how that Senator would vote on this question, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and it having been announced that if present he would vote "nay," as I intend to vote in the same way, I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], with the understanding that when either of us should be interested in a question he would notify the other. I have no notification from the Senator from Connecticut as to this particular question, and if the vote were close, I would hesitate to let my vote stand, but in the circumstances I do let it stand, and will settle it with him.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], but I do not know how the Senator from Indana would vote on this question if he were present and not paired.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] has a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], but I do not know how the Senator from Rhode Island would vote on this question.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], if present, would vote "yea." He is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—5

Curtis	Wadsworth	Warren	Willis
Sterling

NAYS—58

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Ransdell
Bayard	Frazier	Ladd	Reed, Pa.
Borah	George	McNary	Robinson
Brandegee	Gerry	Mayfield	Sheppard
Brookhart	Glass	Moses	Shipstead
Broussard	Gooding	Neely	Simmons
Bruce	Hale	Norbeck	Smith
Cameron	Harris	Norris	Spencer
Caraway	Harrison	Oddie	Stanfield
Copeland	Heflin	Overman	Stephens
Dale	Howell	Owen	Trammell
Dial	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Dill	Johnson, Minn.	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Ferris	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman
Fess	Kendrick	Ralston

NOT VOTING—33

Adams	Elkins	Lodge	Stanley
Ball	Ernst	McCormick	Swanson
Bursum	Fernald	McKellar	Underwood
Capper	Greene	McKinley	Watson
Colt	Harreld	McLean	Weller
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Reed, Mo.	Wheeler
Cummins	Keyes	Shields
Edge	La Follette	Shortridge
Edwards	Lenroot	Smoot

So Mr. STERLING's substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the resolution offered by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. SPENCER. I offer the following substitute for the resolution now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers the following substitute, which the Secretary will report:

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, The Senate, having before it the majority and minority reports of its special committee empowered "to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana," and bearing in mind that the duty of the Senate in the matter has to do only with the "qualifications of its own Members" and its right to punish or expel a Member, declares that no reason has been presented to the Senate which questions the right of the junior Senator from Montana to membership in the Senate, and discharges its committee from further consideration of the matter.

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who appears to be absent, but under my arrangement with him I feel that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement that I made on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before regarding the transfer of my pair, and vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE's name was called). If the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], I vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but I feel at liberty to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I wish to say that I allow my vote to stand on the theory that the same transfer was made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] that was made on the last vote.

Mr. SWANSON (after having voted in the negative). I will state that, according to information I have in this case, it is not necessary for me to observe my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 56, as follows:

YEAS—8

Moses	Reed, Pa.	Stanfield	Warren
Phipps	Spencer	Wadsworth	Willis

NAYS—56

Ashurst	Ferris	Johnson, Minn.	Ralston
Bayard	Fess	Jones, N. Mex.	Ransdell
Borah	Fletcher	Kendrick	Robinson
Brandegee	Frazier	King	Sheppard
Brookhart	George	Ladd	Shipstead
Broussard	Gerry	McNary	Simmons
Bruce	Glass	Mayfield	Smith
Cameron	Gooding	Neely	Stanley
Caraway	Hale	Norris	Stephens
Copeland	Harris	Oddie	Sterling
Curtis	Harrison	Overman	Swanson
Dale	Heflin	Owen	Trammell
Dial	Howell	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Dill	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.

NOT VOTING—32

Adams	Edwards	La Follette	Reed, Mo.
Ball	Elkins	Lenroot	Shields
Bursum	Ernst	Lodge	Shortridge
Capper	Fernald	McCormick	Smoot
Colt	Greene	McKellar	Underwood
Couzens	Harreld	McKinley	Watson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	McLean	Weller
Edge	Keyes	Norbeck	Wheeler

So Mr. SPENCER'S substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. BORAH. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may disclose exactly what the vote is upon, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, the chairman of the special committee, together with the majority report, may be published at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 235) and majority report are as follows:

Resolved, That the report submitted by the chairman of the special committee appointed to investigate the charges against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER be adopted and approved, and the special committee be discharged.

[Senate Report No. 537, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session]

SENATOR BURTON K. WHEELER

Mr. BORAH, from the special committee authorized to investigate charges against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, submitted the following report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 206:

On April 9, 1924, the Senate passed the following resolution:

> "Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in relation to the charges made in a certain indictment returned against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER in the United States District Court for the State of Montana."

That thereafter the President pro tempore of the Senate appointed Senators WILLIAM E. BORAH, CLAUDE SWANSON, THOMAS STERLING, T. H. CARAWAY, and CHARLES L. MCNARY as a special committee to make the investigation authorized by the foregoing resolution.

The charge against Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, and which charge your committee was authorized to investigate, arises under and by virtue of section 1782 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. That statute reads as follows:

> "No Senator, Representative, or Delegate, after his election and during his continuance in office, and no head of a department or other officer or clerk in the employ of the Government, shall receive or agree to receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States is a party, or directly or indirectly interested, before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever. Every person offending against this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not more than two years and fined not more than $10,000, and shall, moreover, by conviction therefor be rendered forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States."

The Supreme Court has construed this statute particularly in the case of Burton v. The United States (202 U. S. 344).

Under this statute an agreement to receive compensation for services rendered, or to be rendered, before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission is made an offense; the receiving of compensation in violation of the statute, whether pursuant to a previous agreement or not, is also made an offense. In other words, if a party agrees to receive compensation for such services, he is guilty under the statute; or if he receives compensation without any previous agreement, he is also guilty of an offense.

This statute in no way prohibits or interferes with a Member of Congress from appearing before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission, provided he does so free from any agreement to receive compensation or without receiving compensation therefor. The sole question which your committee was authorized to investigate, therefore, was, Did Senator WHEELER agree to receive compensation, directly or indirectly, for services rendered, or to be rendered; or did he receive compensation for services rendered, or to be rendered, relative to his appearance or services before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission?

Your committee finds:

First. That during the months of January and February, 1923, after his election to the Senate, Senator WHEELER entered the employ of Gordon Campbell as his attorney, the said contract of employment including the firm of lawyers under the name of Wheeler & Baldwin.

Second. That, according to the terms of employment by which he entered the service of Campbell as his attorney, the said firm of Wheeler & Baldwin was to receive a retainer's fee of $10,000 per annum; that $2,000 thereof was paid January 9, 1923, and $2,000 thereof on February 16, 1923, and that the balance is still unpaid.

Third. That it was fully understood and agreed between all parties to said contract of employment that the services of Senator WHEELER and his firm related alone to the litigation then pending, or to be brought, in the State courts of Montana, said Campbell being at that time interested in a number of lawsuits, some 19 or 20 at least in number.

Fourth. That said BURTON K. WHEELER did not at any time agree to receive compensation for services before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission at Washington, and did not at any time receive compensation for such services before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission.

Fifth. That, on the other hand, the sole contract of employment which he had with Campbell related to matters of litigation in the State courts of Montana; that Senator WHEELER did not at any time appear for said Campbell or his companies before any of the departments in Washington under agreement to receive compensation, and did not at any time receive compensation for any appearance or services rendered before said Government departments.

In conclusion, the committee wholly exonerates Senator BURTON K. WHEELER from any and all violation of section 1782 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and find that he neither received or accepted, or agreed to receive or accept, any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter or thing in which the United States was a party, or directly or indirectly interested, before any department, court-martial, bureau, officer, or any civil, military, or naval commission whatever.

The committee further states that in its opinion Senator WHEELER was careful to have it known and understood from the beginning that his services as an attorney for Gordon Campbell, or his interests, were to be confined exclusively to matters of litigation in the State courts of Montana, and that he observed at all times not only the letter but the spirit of the law.

WM. E. BORAH.
CHAS. L. MCNARY.
CLAUDE A. SWANSON.
T. H. CARAWAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the roll will be called.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS (when Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S name was called). The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Chamber on account of illness. If he were present, on this question he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as before, I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). Making the same statement as to my pair and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). Making the same statement with reference to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], if present, would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I make the same announcement that I made on the previous vote, and let my vote stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is necessarily absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

I was requested to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 56, nays 5, as follows:

YEAS—56

Ashurst	Fess	Jones, N. Mex.	Ralston
Bayard	Fletcher	Kendrick	Ransdell
Borah	Frazier	King	Robinson
Brandegee	George	Ladd	Sheppard
Brookhart	Gerry	McNary	Shipstead
Broussard	Glass	Mayfield	Simmons
Bruce	Gooding	Neely	Smith
Cameron	Hale	Norbeck	Stanfield
Caraway	Harris	Norris	Stanley
Copeland	Harrison	Oddie	Stephens
Dale	Heflin	Overman	Swanson
Dial	Howell	Owen	Trammell
Dill	Johnson, Calif.	Pepper	Walsh, Mass.
Ferris	Johnson, Minn.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.

NAYS—5

Curtis	Spencer	Sterling	Willis
Phipps

NOT VOTING—35

Adams	Elkins	Lodge	Shortridge
Ball	Ernst	McCormick	Smoot
Bursum	Fernald	McKellar	Underwood
Capper	Greene	McKinley	Wadsworth
Colt	Harreld	McLean	Warren
Couzens	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Watson
Cummins	Keyes	Reed, Mo.	Weller
Edge	La Follette	Reed, Pa.	Wheeler
Edwards	Lenroot	Shields

So Mr. BORAH's resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9124) authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DIRECTOR OF BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 105) authorizing the President to detail an officer of the Corps of Engineers as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to direct Maj. Wallace W. Kirby to report to the Secretary of the Treasury for duty for a period of six months, and that said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby may, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, perform the duties of Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for a period not to exceed six months, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1222, Revised Statutes, and section 1224, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 28, 1877: Provided, That the said Maj. Wallace W. Kirby shall receive no emoluments by reason of the performance of said duties, but shall receive the same pay and allowances from appropriations made for the support of the Army as he would receive if he were performing military duty at the War Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. It limits the period of time during which an Army officer may serve as the head of the Bureau of Printing and Engraving to six months.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it just the one amendment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just the one amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. And what is its effect?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senate originally authorized the President to assign an Army officer from the Corps of Engineers to serve as Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for not to exceed two years. The House cut that period down to six months and has named the officer in its amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. And the Senator moves that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With regret, I think it is necessary that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN OF THE ARMY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2450) to amend section 2 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved July 31, 1894, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out all after "follows:" down to and including "section," in line 8, and to insert in lieu thereof:

Retired enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard retired for any cause, and retired officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard who have been retired for injuries received in battle or for injuries or incapacity incurred in line of duty shall not, within the meaning of this section, be construed to hold or to have held an office during such retirement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. It relates to the eligibility of persons in a retired status in the military service being employed in the civil service.

The amendment was concurred in.

LYN LUNDQUIST

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the votes whereby the bill (S. 976) for the relief of Lyn Lundquist was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed last night may be reconsidered. I desire to offer slight amendments to the bill before it shall go to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the votes whereby the bill named by the Senator from Idaho was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered, and, without objection, the bill will be considered as being before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I move the amendments to the bill which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On Page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to," it is proposed to strike out "permit" and to insert "issue patent to"; in line 5, after the word "to" to strike out "make homestead entry of"; and in line 9, after the name "Idaho" to strike out the comma and the words "and to give him credit upon his making final proof showing residence and cultivation as required by law for any improvement he may heretofore have made thereon," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to issue a patent to Lyn Lundquist, notwithstanding he has heretofore exhausted his homestead right, to the west half of the northeast quarter and the east half of the northwest quarter of section 15, in township 44 north, and range 3 east, Boise meridian, in the State of Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7220, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7220) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture," on page 3, line 3, after the word "advertising," to insert "press clippings," so as to make the paragraph read:

For stationery, blank books, twine, paper, gum, dry goods, soap, brushes, brooms, mats, oils, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, ice, fuel, water and gas pipes, heating apparatus, furniture, carpets, and mattings; for lights, freight, express charges, advertising, press clippings, telegraphing, telephoning, postage, washing towels, and necessary repairs and improvements to buildings and heating apparatus; for the purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and the purchase and repair of harness and vehicles, for official purposes only; including necessary expenses for the maintenance, repair, and operation of an automobile for the official use of the Secretary of Agriculture; for the payment of the Department of Agriculture's proportionate share of the expense of the dispatch agent in New York; for official traveling expenses; and for other miscellaneous supplies and expenses not otherwise provided for and necessary for the practical and efficient work of the department, $156,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry," on page 14, at the end of line 21, to strike out "$548,000: Provided, That of this sum $30,000 may be used for the manufacture, preparation, or distribution of blackleg vaccine," and to insert "$573,000: Provided, That of this sum $30,000 may be used as a revolving fund for the purchase, and for the distribution at approximate cost, of blackleg vaccine," so as to make the paragraph read:

For inspection and quarantine work, including all necessary expenses for the eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle, the inspection of southern cattle, the supervision of the transportation of livestock, and the inspection of vessels, the execution of the 28-hour law, the inspection and quarantine of imported animals, including the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations and repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to buildings thereon; the inspection work relative to the existence of contagious diseases, and the mallein testing of animals, $573,000: Provided, That of this sum $30,000 may be used as a revolving fund for the purchase, and for the distribution at approximate cost, of blackleg vaccine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, at the end of line 26, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Animal Industry from "$5,757,766" to "$5,782,766."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, at the end of line 10, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry from "$7,498,916" to "$7,523,916."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry," on page 22, at the end of line 13, to strike out "$84,335" and to insert "$100,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

For the investigation of diseases of forest and ornamental trees and shrubs, including a study of the nature and habits of the parasitic fungi causing the chestnut-tree bark disease, the white-pine blister rust, and other epidemic tree diseases, for the purpose of discovering new methods of control and applying methods of eradication or control already discovered, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, at the end of line 22, to increase the appropriation for the investigation and improvement of tobacco and the methods of tobacco production and handling from "$41,940" to "$46,300."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, at the end of line 11, to strike out "$134,793" and to insert "$139,125," so as to read:

For the investigation and improvement of fruits, and the methods of fruit growing, harvesting, handling, and studies of the physiological and related changes of fruits and vegetables during the processes of marketing and while in commercial storage, $139,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, at the end of line 25, to strike out "$81,808" and insert "$93,102," so as to read:

For horticultural investigations, including the study of producing and harvesting truck and related crops, including potatoes, and studies of the physiological and related changes of vegetables while in the processes of marketing and in commercial storage, and the study of landscape and vegetable gardening, floriculture, and related subjects, $93,102.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, from "$3,048,738" to "$3,084,389."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, at the end of line 12, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Plant Industry from "$3,638,658" to "$3,674,309."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Forest Service," on page 35, at the end of line 4, to strike out "$335,824" and to insert "$351,260," so as to read:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest and fiber products, and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes, in cooperation with individuals and companies, $351,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, at the end of line 2, to strike out "$137,420" and to insert "$187,420," so as to read:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forest and forest lands, $187,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 25, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses of the Forest Service from "$4,230,606" to "$4,296,042."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 14, to increase the total appropriation for the Forest Service from "$6,731,489" to "$6,796,925."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Chemistry," on page 38, at the end of line 12, to strike out "$120,600" and to insert "$130,600," so as to read:

For conducting the investigations contemplated by the act of May 15, 1862, relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof, including investigations of the physiological effects of such products on the human organism, $130,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Chemistry, from "$1,047,230" to "$1,057,230."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Chemistry from "$1,387,230" to "$1,397,230."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Entomology," on page 43, line 14, after the word "grasshopper," to insert "alfalfa weevil," and in the same line, after the words "chinch bug," to strike out "$176,400" and to insert "$186,400," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, including a special investigation of the Hessian fly, grasshopper, alfalfa weevil, and the chinch bug, $186,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 19, after the words "Argentine ant," to strike out "$206,920" and to insert "$256,920, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $256,920, of which sum $25,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 2, after the word "insects," to insert "and wireworms," and at the end of line 4 to strike out "$145,000" and to insert "$157,000," so as to read:

For investigations of insects affecting truck crops, including insects and wireworms affecting the potato, sugar beet, cabbage, onion, tomato, beans, peas, etc., and insects affecting stored products, $157,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Entomology, from "$1,074,305" to "$1,146,305."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 20, to insert:

WESTERN PINE BEETLE AND ASSOCIATED FOREST INSECTS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for a scientific investigation to advance and improve methods of preventing losses from western pine beetle and associated forest insects; and to assist departments of the Federal Government, State and private owners of timber in the inspection of insect-infested timber and the demonstration of the best known methods of control, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Entomology from "$2,028,848" to "$2,135,848."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey," on page 48, line 19, to strike out "$26,480" and to insert "$28,475," so as to read:

For biological investigations, including the relations, habits, geographic distribution, and migrations of animals and plants, and the preparation of maps of the life zones, $28,475.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Biological Survey, from "$784,155" to "$786,150."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Biological Survey, from "$890,495" to "$892,490."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General expenses, Bureau of Agricultural Economics," on page 54, at the end of line 9, to increase the appropriation to investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, from "$275,000" to "$286,538."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 24, after the word "products," to strike out "$524,628" and to insert "$549,628: Provided, That $25,000 of this sum shall be used for investigation of the economic costs of retail marketing of meat and meat products," so as to read:

For acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and nonmanufactured food products and the purchasing of farm supplies, including the demonstration and promotion of the use of uniform standards of classification of American farm products throughout the world, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the department, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the marketing, handling, utilization, grading, transportation, and distributing of farm and food products, $549,628: Provided, That $25,000 of this sum shall be used for investigation of the economic costs of retail marketing of meat and meat products.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 3, before the word "condition" to strike out "and" and to insert "and/or," so as to read:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the class, quality, and/or condition of cotton and fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products when offered for interstate shipment or when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, at the end of line 2, to strike out "682,480" and to insert $768,480," so as to read:

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of livestock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $768,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 4, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics from "$2,263,001" to "$2,385,539."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Enforcement of the United States grain standards act," on page 58, at the end of line 4, to strike out "$500,000" and to insert "$550,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States grain standards act, including rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $550,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administration of the United States warehouse act," on page 58, at the end of line 11, to strike out "$163,000" and to insert "$186,500," so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the United States warehouse act, including the payment of such rent outside of the District of Columbia and the employment of such persons and means as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $186,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, at the end of line 8, to increase the total appropriation for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics from "$4,227,364" to "$4,423,402."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Acquisition of additional forest lands," on page 63, at the end of line 16, to strike out "$600,000" and to insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the paragraph read:

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL FOREST LANDS

For the acquisition of additional lands at headwaters of navigable streams, to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L. p. 961), as amended, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after line 3, to insert:

ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH AND OTHER CONTAGIOUS DISEASES OF ANIMALS

In case of an emergency arising out of the existence of foot-and-mouth disease, rinderpest, contagious pleuropneumonia, or other contagious or infectious disease of animals which, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, threatens the livestock industry of the country, he may expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as he determines to be necessary, in the arrest and eradication of any such disease, including the payment of claims growing out of past and future purchases and destruction, in cooperation with the States, of animals affected by or exposed to, or of materials contaminated by or exposed to, any such disease, wherever found and irrespective of ownership, under like or substantially similar circumstances, when such owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations: Provided, That the payment for animals hereafter purchased may be made on appraisement based on the meat, dairy, or breeding value, but in case of appraisement based on breeding value no appraisement of any animal shall exceed three times its meat or dairy value, and except in case of an extraordinary emergency to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, the payment by the United States Government for any animal shall not exceed one-half of any such appraisements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Enforcement of packers and stockyards act," on page 70, line 22, after the numerals "1921," to strike out "$226,770: Provided, however, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make an estimate of the amount of funds necessary in addition to the sum herein named to enable him to carry into effect the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, and thereupon he may levy, as uniformly and equitably as in his judgment is possible from time to time, against the stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to said act, who shall promptly thereafter pay to the Secretary of Agriculture such fees as will be necessary to provide such additional funds. The Secretary may require reasonable bonds from them to secure the performance of their obligations, and may, after a hearing on not less than two days' notice, suspend any market agency or dealer for a reasonable specified time because of insolvency or violation of said act or any order or regulation thereunder," and to insert "$452,540," so as to make the paragraph read:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, approved August 15, 1921, $452,540.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Special items," on page 72, line 4, to strike out "$4,700,000" and to insert "$8,000,000," and at the end of line 15 to strike out "$5,300,000" and to insert "$2,000,000," so as to read:

Forest roads and trails: For carrying out the provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act approved November 9, 1921, $6,000,000, to be available until expended, being the remainder of the sum of $6,500,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and part of the sum authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, by paragraph 2 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, immediately upon the approval of this act, also to apportion and pro rate among the several States, Alaska, and Porto Rico, as provided in section 23 of said Federal highway act, the sum of $2,000,000, constituting the remainder of the sum authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, at the end of line 9, to increase the total appropriation for the Department of Agriculture from "$56,583,743" to "$60,954,633."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted by the Clerk at the proper place in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 24, line 2, it is proposed to strike out "$155,450" and to insert in lieu thereof "$205,450."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in the subcommittee of which I was a member I fought this appropriation, because it was testified before the subcommittee that this money was to be spent in other countries—in other words, for the exploitation of rubber in Brazil and other South American countries. The Secretary of Agriculture said to me the other night that that was not so; that his idea was to exploit the raising of rubber in this country, down in our southern country. He asked me if I would not agree to offer an amendment for the amount estimated by the Budget, and I agreed to do so. I am going to ask to have his letter read, so that we can see exactly what he wants. He favors this amendment, and the amendment only brings up the amount to the sum estimated by the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD. The Secretary goes on to say that he hopes that rubber trees can be grown in this country, and he thinks it is worth a trial, and I am willing to have him try it. I do not want to spend any money for exploitation in Brazil and Costa Rica and the countries below, and that is the reason why I voted to strike out the item; but in view of this letter I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, May 20, 1924.

DEAR SENATOR: As suggested in our conversation the other evening, with regard to the crude-rubber investigations being carried on by this department, I give you in condensed form the high points.

The United States consumes annually more than 70 per cent of the world's supply of crude rubber.

More than 90 per cent of the total supply of crude rubber is produced in the British and Dutch colonial possessions in the Far East.

It would be greatly to the advantage of the United States if our source of rubber supply could be brought nearer, and especially to our advantage if it should be found possible to develop a rubber industry in the continental United States.

The Department of Agriculture during the past year has begun a systematic exploration of possible rubber-producing territory in Central and South America, and has studied methods of tapping the trees and collecting rubber in those sections where it is being produced. It is obvious that any contribution we can make toward increasing the supply of rubber near at home and improving methods of harvesting it will be greatly to the advantage of our own people. In connection with these explorations and studies in Central and South America, our people have gathered seed and propagating material from rubber plants which may be considered promising for planting in the Canal Zone, Haiti, Florida, and Southern California.

Systematic studies of potential rubber-producing plants which can be grown in continental United States are now well started. These studies are now being carried on at the Chapman Field Plant Introduction Garden in southern Florida, at the Torrey Pine Field Station near San Diego, Calif., and at Fallon, Nev. At the Florida station we have a dozen or more plants growing, at least three of which seem to be promising. At the California station we have several rubber-producing plants, both native and introduced species. At Fallon, Nev., we are working in cooperation with the Carnegie Institution, making studies of a native rubber-producing plant.

No one can forecast with certainty what may be the result of these studies and experiments, but in view of our large consumption of rubber and the remote source of supply, surely the United States can afford to spend much larger sums even than have been contemplated to determine what may be possible. The rubber situation at the present time may be compared to the situation which existed with regard to sugar at the time of the Napoleonic wars. Practically the entire sugar supply of the world was then derived from sugar cane, the production of which was almost entirely restricted to the Tropics. Scientific research and experimentation resulted in the development of the beet as a source of sugar supply, and it now furnishes a large part of the world supply of sugar. With this experience in mind, certainly we are justified in spending whatever money may be necessary to exhaust the possibilities of rubber production in continental United States.

The Bureau of the Budget after full hearing on the subject included an appropriation of $70,000 for these crude-rubber investigations for the coming year. For some reason, which I do not understand, this sum was reduced to twenty thousand in the House. If it should remain at twenty thousand, we will find it necessary to greatly reduce the present personnel engaged in rubber investigations, and confine our studies of potential rubber-producing plants to propagation experiments on a very small scale. I am very strongly of the opinion that the appropriation for this purpose allowed by the Bureau of the Budget will prove a wise expenditure of Government funds.

Very truly,

HENRY C. WALLACE.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Does this include any investigation as to the growing of rubber trees in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to state that this means a survey of the possible growth of rubber trees wherever they may be found, looking toward the introduction into parts of our country of varieties of rubber trees that may be adapted to North American conditions.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the amendment ought to be agreed to. I know of some studies and investigations that are being made in some parts of the country, and I know that in southern Florida, below the frost line, there are great possibilities for the development of this industry and for the production of our own rubber in our own country. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. On the same page, on line 4, it is proposed to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$70,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 48.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The READING CLERK. On page 48, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$508,880" and to insert "$652,140."

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, this is for investigating the food habits of North American birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, and so forth, and for the extermination of predatory animals. We are asking simply that the amount be brought up to the estimate of the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORBECK. Now I desire to offer another amendment. This amendment is on page 49, and is just in harmony with the bill that was passed last night regarding the expenditure of money in Alaska. If the amendment is agreed to it will consolidate the two funds, and do away with the duplicate game wardens, and do it as soon as the appropriation bill passes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota offers a further amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 49, at the end of line 17, it is proposed to insert:

On and after July 1, 1924, the powers and duties heretofore conferred upon the Governor of Alaska by existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska are hereby conferred upon and shall be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture; and all money available or appropriated in this or any other act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, for carrying into effect the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," including salaries, traveling expenses of game wardens, and all other necessary expenses, is hereby transferred to the credit of the Department of Agriculture to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The READING CLERK. On page 64, line 6, after the word "made," it is proposed to insert:

including the erection of a herdsman's cottage.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, this is in accordance with the recommendation of the Agricultural Department. They want this amendment made. It does not increase the appropriation at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks be authorized to correct all totals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that consent will be granted. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORIGIN OF THE WORLD WAR

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Harry Elmer Barnes, with regard to the origin of the World War in connection with a speech I made on the subject.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASSESSING THE BLAME FOR THE WORLD WAR—A REVISED JUDGMENT BASED ON ALL THE AVAILABLE DOCUMENTS [1]

(By Harry Elmer Barnes, Ph. D.)

I. THE NEW DOCUMENTS

Section VIII of the treaty of Versailles, signed on June 28, 1919, begins as follows:

> "The allied and associated Governments affirm, and Germany accepts, the responsibility of herself and her allies for causing all the loss and damage to which the allied and associated Governments and their nationals have been subjected as a consequence of the war imposed upon them by the aggression of Germany and her allies."

On the basis of this assertion the allied powers specifically and concretely erected their claim to reparations from Germany and by implication the general nature of the entire treaty. Some have supposed that Germany, by apparently acquiescing in this charge of full and complete guilt in regard to the outbreak of the war, finally and for all time clinched the argument of the allied powers in regard to her sole responsibility. Such a position could hardly be held, however, by anyone familiar with the methods of the Allies during the peace conference. Germany occupied the situation of a prisoner at the bar, where the prosecuting attorney is given full leeway as to time and presentation of evidence, while the defendant is denied counsel or the opportunity to produce either evidence or witnesses. It was, indeed, a case where the prosecution simply contented itself with the assumption of the guilt of the defendant and was not required to furnish proof. Germany was confronted with the alternative of signing the confession at once or having her territory invaded and occupied, with every probability that such an admission would be ultimately extorted from her in any event. In the light of these obvious facts it is plain that the question of the responsibility for the outbreak of the World War must rest for its solution upon the indisputable documentary evidence which is available in the premises.

Under the circumstances which ordinarily follow a great war we should still be as ignorant of the real causes of the World War as we were in 1914. It has been a general rule that the archives, or repositories of the public documents of the States involved, have been closed to nonofficial readers until from 40 to 80 years after the events and negotiations which these documents describe. Hence we should normally have been required to wait until about 1975 for as great a volume of documentary evidence as we now possess, and two generations of students would have passed away without progressing beyond dubious guesses and intuitive approximations to the truth. The explanation of our unprecedented good fortune in this regard is to be found in the revolutionary overturns in Germany, Austria, and Russia before the close of the World War. The new Governments were socialistic in character and hypothetically opposed to war and militarism, despite the fact that the socialists had for the most part remained loyal to their capitalistic or landlord governments in the World War. Desiring to make their tenure more secure by discrediting the acts and policies of the preceding régimes the leaders of the new governments perceived one method of achieving this end by throwing open the national archives in the hope that historical editors might discover therein evidence of responsibility on the part of the former governing groups for the inundation of blood, misery, and sorrow which swept over Europe after 1914. In addition to these voluntarily opened archives, the Germans seized the Belgian archives during the war and published collections of extracts. Then B. de Siebert, secretary to the Russian Embassy at London in the period before the war, secretly made copies of the important diplomatic exchanges between London and St. Petersburg from 1908 to 1914, and later gave or sold them to the Germans.

The nature of the European diplomatic and military alignments in 1914 accounts for the fact that these revelations are reasonably adequate to settle the problems concerning the declarations of war in 1914, despite the further fact that England, France, and Italy have refused to make their archives accessible to scholars. Inasmuch as Italy was technically allied with Germany and Austria in the Triple Alliance, the nature of much of her foreign policy and many of her diplomatic engagements may be gleaned from the German and Austrian archives. But she was at the same time secretly negotiating with France and, after 1914, with the members of the Triple Entente. This material is, in large part, available in the documents in the Russian archives. England and France having been the other members of the triple entente, the secret diplomacy of this group is reasonably covered in the Russian archives and the Siebert documents, which are now duplicated in part in the publications from the Russian archives, though it would be desirable to know more of any possible secret Franco-British exchanges not revealed to Russia. The French have, of course, published some of their documents in the various Livres Jaunes—the most important of which is that on the Balkan policy (1922), but they are officially edited and the incriminating documents are naturally suppressed. (See the New York Nation, October 11, 1922, p. 372, Document XXVII, for an example of the falsification of the French Yellow Book.)

Although a vast number of documents in the archives of Germany, Austria, and Russia have not yet been published, the collections thus far available are impressive. The diplomatic documents covering the broad historical background of the Austrian crisis of 1914 are presented in the admirable collection of Prof. A. F. Pribram. (The Secret Treaties of Austria-Hungary, 1879–1914. The American edition was supervised by Prof. A. C. Coolidge and published by the Harvard University Press, 1920. It should be pointed out that Pribram's work is not yet finished. He is waiting for the complete publication of the German documents.) The documents in the Austrian archives dealing with the month preceding the outbreak of the World War have been edited by the publicist and scholarly journalist, Roderich Gooss, in the [1] Not the slightest pretension is made in this article to any discovery of facts not already well known to all historians interested in the history of contemporary European diplomacy. The aim of the author is solely to set forth in a clear fashion the conclusions to which we are inevitably forced by the authentic documents which have been published since 1914 and mainly since 1919. Full and complete indebtedness is acknowledged to such experts in the field as S. B. Fay, G. P. Gooch, B. E. Schmitt, A. C. Coolidge, R. J. Kerner, C. A. Beard, W. L. Langer, A. F. Pribram, M. Montgelas and the authors of the special treatises which will be mentioned in the course of the article. In particular, I am indebted to Profs. Bernadotte E. Schmitt, William L. Langer, and two eminent experts who prefer not to be named for a critical reading of this article, which has added much to the general interpretation and saved me from many slips in matters of detail. Professor Schmitt has rendered the special courtesy of allowing me to read in manuscript his important article on "The Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente," to be published in the American Historical Review for April, 1924.

three volumes of the Austrian Red Book. (Diplomatische Aktenstuecke zur Vorgeschichte des Krieges, 1914, 3 volumes, Vienna, 1919. These are now available in English translation.)

In Germany an even more voluminous collection of the diplomacy of Germany and related countries from 1871 to 1914 is in process of publication under the editorship of J. Lepsius, A. M. Bartholdy, and F. Thimme.

This embraces all the important diplomatic documents in the German foreign office; some 12 bulky volumes have already appeared. It is the most extensive publication of this sort yet undertaken in any country. (Die Grosse Politik der Europaeischen Kabinette, 1871–1914. Berlin, 1922.)

The documents dealing with the antecedents of August, 1914, were extracted from the German archives by the German Socialist, Karl Kautsky, and published in four volumes under the editorship of the eminent scholars, W. Schücking, M. Montgelas, and A. M. Bartholdy. (Die Deutschen Dokumente zum Kriegsausbruch, 4 volumes, Charlottenburg, 1919.) A supplementary collection has been more recently published which embodies: (1) The testimony of leading Germans in military, diplomatic, and business life before a committee appointed by the German postwar Government to investigate the responsibility for the war; (2) the records of the reaction of Germany to Mr. Wilson's peace note of December, 1916; and (3) the negotiations between Germany and her allies, and Germany and the United States concerning submarine warfare, and the policies which produced the entry of the United States into the World War. (Official German documents relating to the World War. Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 2 volumes, New York; Oxford University Press, 1923.)

No Russian documents have been made available as yet which cover so ample a historical background as the work of Pribram and the published volumes of the Lepsius-Bartholdy-Thimme collection. The Siebert documents (Entente Diplomacy and the World, 1909–1914, New York; Knickerbocker Press, 1922. Siebert has held out the documents most incriminating to the Entente and is still holding them for a higher price than has been offered. These documents deal with the exchanges between St. Petersburg, London, and Paris in July and August, 1914) deal only with the period from 1908–1914. The Livre Noir (Black Book) is the other important publication of the Russian documents. It was collected by René Marchand, a scholarly French Socialist and journalist thoroughly familiar with the Russian language and with Russian public life and politics. It presents in detail the Russian diplomatic documents of the years 1910–1914, particularly stressing Franco-Russian relations and policies. This is the most important published collection of Russian source material. (Un Livre Noir: Diplomatie d'Avant-Guerre d'apres les Documents Russes, Novembre, 1910; Juillet, 1914; 2 volumes, Paris, 1922–23. A brief collection of these Russian documents was published in Paris as early as 1919 under the editorship of Emile Laloy. It is important as containing the secret Russian conference in February, 1914, on the desirability of seizing the Straits (pp. 74–100).) The newly accessible archival material has enabled scholars to check up on the collections of apologetic or extenuating documents published by the great powers in the early days of the war. A step in this direction has been taken by G. von Romberg, who has brought out a publication of the actual exchanges between Paris and St. Petersburg following the submission of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia on July 23, 1914. This lays bare the serious and important suppressions in the original Russian Orange Book, which eliminated all the damaging evidence regarding conciliatory German proposals or aggressive Franco-Russian aims and policies. (Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, New York; Huebsch, 1923.) Also from the Russian archives has come the recently published collection revealing Italy's dickering with the Entente for territorial cessions from 1914 to the time of her entry into the World War in May, 1915. (L'Intervenzione dell' Italia nei Documenti Segreti dell' Intesa. Rome, 1923.)

The Belgian documents, published by Germany, embraced chiefly the dispatches and opinions of the Belgian ambassadors in the major European capitals following 1886, playing up especially those which express fear of Entente collusion and alliance. Highly selected and one-sided, the collection is of real value as proving that the Belgians were alarmed by the policies of States other than Germany and incidentally vindicating beyond any doubt the neutrality of official Belgian opinion as a whole before 1914. (Belgische Aktenstuecke, 1905–1914, Berlin, 1915. Zur Europaeischen Politik, 1886–1893, 1897–1914, 5 volumes, Berlin, 1919–1922. These collections are edited by B. H. Schwertfeger. Some of them (1905–1914) have appeared in English translation.)

Finally, we have the depressing secret treaties of the Entente, which eliminate once and for all any basis for the hypothesis of idealism underlying the military activities of either side in the World War, and convict the Allies of aggressive aims as thoroughly as Grumbach's "Das Annexionistische Deutschland" proves Germany and Austria guilty of similar ambitions. (These treaties were printed in the New York Evening Post early in 1918 as a result of their revelation by the Bolsheviki. They are analyzed by R. S. Baker in his work, "Woodrow Wilson and the World Settlement." Mr. Baker defends the almost unbelievable assertion that Mr. Wilson left for the Peace Conference nearly a year later with no knowledge of their nature or contents.)

These collections of documents have been supplemented by a vast number of apologetic and controversial memoirs, reminiscences, and autobiographies which possess highly varied value and relevance, and by infinitely more important scholarly monographs analyzing in detail one or another of the many diplomatic and political problems and situations lying back of the World War. (The best summary of this literature is contained in G. P. Gooch's "Recent Revelations on European Diplomacy," Journal of the British Institute of International Affairs, January, 1923.) It is upon such material as this that we are able to construct a relatively objective and definite estimate of the causes of and responsibility for the great calamity of 1914–1918 and its aftermath. It is quite evident that if any account written prior to 1919 possesses any validity whatever or any approximation to the true picture of events, this is due solely to superior guessing power or good luck on the part of the writer, and in no sense to the possession of reliable or pertinent documentary evidence.

II. THE PRE-WAR SITUATION

The causes of the World War involve the greatest multitude of factors ranging from the most general and cosmic to the most detailed and personal; from the persistence of the tribal hunting-pack ferocity in mankind and the pressure of growing populations upon limited habitats and natural resources to the foolhardy conduct of the Austrian archduke on the day of his assassination, the psychic state of the Kaiser on July 5, 1914, and the intimidation of the Czar by militaristic advisers late in July, 1914. Though no reputable historian would doubt that the World War grew out of the economic and nationalistic situation from 1870 to 1914, there seems little of the inevitable in the alignments or historic circumstances that produced the war. States which were allied in 1914 clashed seriously in the preceding generation—England with France and Russia with England. Russia was on fairly friendly terms with Germany until the retirement of Bismarck. Germany was cordial to England in the early nineties, alienated her after 1895, and then adjusted satisfactorily to both parties the outstanding diplomatic difficulties of two decades two weeks before the assassination of the archduke. Russia several times indicated a willingness to sacrifice other Slavic peoples to gain her own imperialistic and territorial ends. There were strong groups in both France and Germany that desired a rapprochement between these States.

The gradual shaping of European diplomatic behavior creating the crisis of 1914 seems to rest primarily upon three major elements or inciting factors. One was the imperialistic and Pan-Slavic ambitions of Russia, who desired to dominate the Near East, to control the straits leading from the Black Sea to the Ægean, and to draw under her diplomatic ægis the lesser Slavic peoples of Europe. These aspirations, however, cut directly across the major ambitions and policies of the polyglot dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary, whose very existence depended upon repressing or abating the Slavic nationalism of a large portion of her population. In these policies she was naturally encouraged by her ally, Germany, who desired to have as strong an associate as possible, and who had herself a definite reason for wishing to realize an Austro-German hegemony in the Balkans as the first link in the "Berlin-to-Bagdad" railroad scheme. (Important surveys of these diplomatic and political problems are to be found in R. W. Seton-Watson et al., The War and Democracy, Chs. IV–V; Seton-Watson, The Southern Slav Question and the Hapsburg Monarchy; F. Schevill, A History of the Balkan Peninsula; E. M. Earle, Turkey, the Great Powers and the Bagdad Railroad; H. Friedjung, Das Zeitalter des Imperialismus; E. Durham, Twenty Years of the Balkan Tangle; S. A. Korff, Russia's Foreign Relations in the Last Half Century; Pribram, op. cit.; Fischel, Der Panslavismus; Pilar, Die Suedslawische Frage und die Weltkrieg; L. Mandl, Oesterreich-Ungarn and Serbien; and Die Hapsburger und die Suedslawische Frage.) Then there was the underlying hatred of Germany cherished by the French military group and "Revanchards" (the group committed to the project of a war of revenge) growing out of the sting of the unexpected defeat in 1870–71. Not even Caillaux was able to overcome this. Nothing short of a voluntary cession of at least Lorraine would have satisfied France, and there were important historical and economic reasons why Germany would not consent to any such proposal. (See G. P. Gooch, Franco-German Relations, 1871–1914; H. A. L. Fisher, Studies in History and Politics, pp. 146–161, and E. R. G. Curtius, Maurice Barres und die Geistigen Grundlagen des Franzoesischen Nationalismus. This work is very critical.) To these three major factors in the background might be added the remarkable economic and commercial development of Germany, leading to the growth of the volume and scope of German commerce, the rise of German naval ambitions, and a resulting rivalry with Great Britain in trade and maritime armament. There might also be mentioned the diplomatic clashes of Germany and England over the Boer War and the Bagdad railroad. (G. P. Gooch, Modern Europe, Ch. XIII; B. E. Schmitt, England and Germany, 1740–1914; and A. W. Ward and G. P. Gooch, Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, Vol. III, pp. 263–286, 294–301, 385–394, 456–485.)

On these foundations the familiar alignments of 1914 began slowly to take form. Austria and Germany were gradually isolated, and France, Great Britain, Russia, and Italy began to draw together. Italy was ostensibly a member of the Triple Alliance until 1914, but we now know that she was not a loyal member at any time during the present century, and that by 1902 she had an understanding with France that she would not join any other State in a war upon the French Nation. (There are many important works on European diplomacy since 1870, but those written before 1921 were not based upon the new and indispensable documents and must therefore be disregarded by the general reader. The only thorough and reliable book utilizing the new evidence is G. P. Gooch's History of Modern Europe, 1878–1919, which is the unrivaled diplomatic history of the period since 1870 and supplants all earlier works. Other more special works based on the recently published documents and of high value and impartiality are A. F. Pribram, Austrian Foreign Policy, 1908–1918; J. V. Fuller, Bismarck's Diplomacy at its Zenith; and the already cited works, G. P. Gooch, Franco-German Relations, 1871–1914; E. M. Earle, Turkey, the Great Powers and the Bagdad Railroad; and F. Rachfahl, Deutschland und die Weltpolitik, 1871–1914.) As Professor Schmitt has pointed out, however, it is to be borne in mind that the Italian Foreign Minister from 1910 to 1914, the Marquis of San Giuliano, took a renewed interest in the part of Italy in the Triple Alliance, and that Italy was on better terms with her old allies than at any previous time after 1902. Moltke in 1914 counted definitely on Italian military aid in the World War.

Along with the diplomatic arrangements and entanglements went an ominous and expensive armament race. Americans have been accustomed to regard the increase of land and sea armament from 1890 onward as primarily a German phenomenon, initiated by her, and reluctantly, lamely, and ineffectively imitated as a defensive policy by Russia, France, and Great Britain. This has been due partly to the fact that the Kaiser's vocal exuberance on military matters made good newspaper copy and partly to the further fact that the great majority of our own news concerning Germany came to us through the Harmsworth and other English papers which were strongly anti-German in tone. If possible, there has been an even more mistaken impression on this point than with respect to the view that Germany was solely responsible for the World War. The sober facts indicate that Germany and Austria were together maintaining an armament establishment on land and sea only a little more than half as extensive or expensive as that of England, France, and Russia combined. France, usually represented as pacific, unprepared, and defenseless, was in 1913–14 planning an army two-thirds larger per capita than that contemplated by Germany in her latest military bill before the World War. (See A. J. Nock, The Myth of a Guilty Nation, pp. 23–26; M. Montgelas, Leitfaden zur Kriegsschuldfrage, pp. 81–85; and the judicious analysis of the whole problem in A. G. Enock, The Problem of Armaments.)

Stress has been laid upon the peculiar and unique danger of the linking of autocracy and militarism in Germany and Austria. Such a combination is doubtless dangerous and deplorable, but it was not more noticeable in Germany and Austria than in Russia. We shall probably have to go further, however, and admit that it is the military attitude and the war spirit which is a menace, and that this will exist, if unchecked, in a democracy as well as in an autocracy. The old notion that democracy and militarism and war are mutually irreconcilable must be put aside as groundless illusion. The war spirit in the British Navy and in the militaristic group in France was about as virulent and aggressive as that of Potsdam or Vienna from 1912 to 1914. If war is to be obstructed and ultimately eliminated, it is militarism and nationalism which must be directly attacked; little will be achieved by merely altering political institutions. (See the interesting article by Prof. George H. Blakeslee, "Will Democracy Alone Make the World Safe?" in Journal of Race Development, April, 1918.)

In addition to these menacing general alignments and diplomatic antagonisms, it is essential to understand that there was especially high tension in the spring of 1914. It has usually been believed by the average intelligent citizen in America that the World War broke like a storm out of a clear sky; that Europe had settled down rather peacefully after the last Morocco crisis and was calm and unperturbed until June 28, 1914. Nothing could be further from the facts in the case. The assassination of Franz Ferdinand was merely the culmination of a veritable fear-neurosis on the part of the European Governments. In 1913 Germany and France provided for great increases in their land armaments, and England began what almost might be called war measures in her navy organization and procedure. In the spring of 1914 Austria could scarcely restrain herself from attacking Serbia, in spite of German opposition in the previous year. Germany was frightened by the cumulative progress of the Franco-Russian rapprochement and the substitution of a more chauvinistic French ambassador at St. Petersburg, and even more by the Russo-British naval conversation of 1914. German soldiers, statesmen, and publicists openly declared that, though pacific in intent, Germany was prepared for a vigorous defense against a wanton attack. Russia was controlled by the militaristic group who were encouraged by Poincaré and his followers in France. The Russians boasted that they, too, were ready for the test of arms, and contended that France should also be found thoroughly prepared. By the middle of June this feverish excitement and mutual suspicion had become alarmingly apparent alike to domestic observers and to foreign visitors. A crisis in such a state of affairs was likely to precipitate a panic and make it difficult to obstruct and control headstrong and arbitrary action. Such was the European situation when Franz Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne, was slain in Serajevo on June 28, 1914. (G. P. Gooch, History of Modern Europe, 1878–1919, Ch. XV; C. A. Beard, Cross Currents in Europe To-day, Chs. I–III; W. S. Churchill, The World Crisis, 1911–1914 (on war plans of British Navy from 1912 to 1914).)

The only light relieving the darkness of the situation was the successful culmination of the Anglo-German negotiations concerning the Near East, but before this could effect any readjustment of the European diplomatic situation, the continent was plunged into universal carnage. (Earle, op. cit., pp. 258–265.) It is believed by some that if sufficient publicity could have been given to the Anglo-German settlement, it would have had a sufficiently sobering effect upon the Franco-Russian imperialists to have postponed or avoided the World War, but it must be remembered that at the same time when England was negotiating successfully with Germany over the Near East she was negotiating secret naval agreements with France and Russia against Germany.

While this article is devoted chiefly to an analysis of the responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities, the writer is inclined to the view of Prof. B. E. Schmitt, expressed in the American Historical Review for April, 1924, that the real causes of the World War must be sought in this general diplomatic background which made the conflict inevitable, once an important and crucial issue arose between the Triple Alliance and the Triple Entente:

> "The causes of the Great War have been analyzed from many points of view. The explanation usually offered is the vaulting ambition of this or that great power, Germany being most often selected as the offender. Persons internationally minded insist that rabid nationalism was a universal disease and draw vivid pictures of the European anarchy. The pacifist points to the bloated armaments, and the Socialist can see only the conflict of rival imperialisms. Facts galore can be cited in support of each thesis. Yet no one of these explanations is entirely satisfactory, or the lot of them taken together. Why should the different kinds of dynamite explode simultaneously in August, 1914? Why, for instance, should a war break out between Great Britain and Germany at a moment when their disputes were seemingly on the verge of adjustment? There must have been some connecting link which acted as a chain of powder between the various accumulations of explosive material. And so there was; as one peruses the innumerable memoirs by politicians, soldiers, and sailors, from the German Emperor to obscure diplomatists, or tries to digest the thousands of documents published since 1918 from the German, Austrian, Serbian, Russian, French, Belgian, and British archives, the conviction grows that it was the schism of Europe in Triple Alliance and Triple Entente which fused the various quarrels and forces into one gigantic struggle for the balance of power; and the war came in 1914 because then, for the first time, the lines were sharply drawn between the two rival groups, and neither could yield on the Serbian issue without seeing the balance pass definitely to the other side."

III. DISTRIBUTION OF RESPONSIBILITY

Austria: Before discussing the policies and conduct of Austria, it is desirable to understand clearly the nature of the Austro-Serbian situation. Serbia, like the majority of the Balkan States, was a backward political society, in which intrigue, murder, and wholesale assassinations had not yet been transformed into orderly party government. It was also inflamed by an intense nationalism, fed by the sufferings and aspirations of centuries of repression. In June, 1903, the reigning royal family, their ministers, and over 50 prominent sympathizers and supporters were murdered and a new dynasty under King Peter established. The new dynasty was the rallying point of the Yugoslav nationalism, which looked to Russia for protection and encouragement. But the integrity of the Dual Monarchy depended upon holding in leash Slavic nationalism and the Pan-Slav program. The stage was thus set for continual and serious friction. (Schevill, op. cit., pp. 456–461; Seton-Watson, as above; A. Moussett, Le Royaume des Serbes, Croates et Slovenes. Mandl, op. cit. It is interesting to note that from 1903 to 1908 Edward VII was the most consistent of the European monarchs in boycotting the new Serb dynasty.)

This first came to a head in 1908 when Izvolsky, then the Russian Foreign Minister, proposed to the Austrian minister, Count Aehrenthal, that Austria annex Bosnia and Herzegovina, two Serb districts near the Adriatic then under the nominal control of Turkey. This had after 1903 been a secret Austrian ambition, but no Austrian statesman had dared to think of it as a practical step, for it involved a violation of the treaty of Berlin of 1878, and it had been supposed by the Austrians that Russia would make a vigorous protest against any such proposal. Izvolsky intimated, however, that Russia would be placated by Austro-German pressure on Turkey to open the straits to the Russian Navy. (Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 410–426. The great authority on the Bosnian crisis is Friedjung, op. cit., Vol. II.; see also E. Molden, Graf Aehrenthal; and Hoijer, Le Comte Aehrenthal et la Politique de Violence.)

Once Aehrenthal discovered that Russia would not be likely to object, he planned and carried through the annexation with a gusto that surprised and annoyed Izvolsky and led him to deny some of his earlier suggestions and assertions. The annexation was made feasible by the Young Turk revolution of 1908, which weakened Turkish resistance. Serbia protested sharply, but as she found herself deserted by Russia, in the end had to accede. We have entertained an altogether false notion as to the part of Germany in this transaction. The pressure which she applied to Russia was very slight. One of Izvolsky's assistants has gone so far as to hold that Germany's conduct in the circumstances was, in reality, a great favor to Russia. The "shining armor" statement of the Kaiser was merely a picturesque and bombastic mode of giving public notice of the firmness of the Austro-German understanding, not unlike Lloyd George's speech at the time of the second Morocco crisis. The annexation, however, created bitter feeling. Serbia never ceased from that time to plot against Austria, and Russian statesmen, not always fully informed as to how the annexation program was initiated, felt that Russia had been humiliated and discredited as the leader of the Pan-Slavic movement and "big brother" to the lesser Slavic States. (Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 417–426; see list of authorities, p. 410, footnote 2.) Even more resentment was generated in official Russian circles over the failure to secure the opening of the straits, this proposal having actually been blocked by Great Britain. (Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, Vol. III, pp. 404–405.)

Not even the treaty of 1910 with Germany over the Bagdad Railway was adequate to restore good relations. This Russian antipathy toward Germany was speedily recognized and eagerly exploited by the French nationalists and militarists, who were just then being united under the leadership of Poincaré. (The best presentation of the case against French militarism under Poincaré is contained in four one-sided books which need to be used cautiously, but have never been adequately refuted by Poincaré and his apologists. They are F. Gouttenoire de Toury, La Politique Russe de Poincaré; and by the same author, Jaures et le Parti de la Guerre; F. Bausman, Let France Explain; and A. H. Pevet, Les Responsables de la Guerre. The documentary evidence on this point is assembled in Marchand, Un Livre Noir, particularly Vol. II; and the Siebert Documents (Entente Diplomacy).)

SERB INTRIGUE AGAINST AUSTRIA

Another crisis was precipitated in 1912–13 by the Balkan wars, and Austria was prevented from making war on Serbia only by the firm opposition of Germany. (This matter is most adequately analyzed in M. Montgelas's Leitfaden zur Kriegsschuldfrage, pp. 36–68, especially pp. 62–65.) As it was, Austria was able to block Serbia's attempt to gain access to the Adriatic by inducing the great powers to erect the abortive State of Albania. Serbia knew of the aggressive Austrian plans and was greatly incensed by the denial of a port on the Adriatic. Anti-Austrian plots increased in number with the growth of hatred for that State. In the spring of 1914 a plot for the murder of the heir to the Austrian throne was instigated and planned by one Col. Dragutin Dimitryevitch, chief of the intelligence bureau of the Serbian general staff, and a notorious plotter and assassin. He apparently lost courage at the last moment and tried to call off the execution of the plan when it was too late. (S. Stanojevic, Die Ermordung des Erzherzogs Franz Ferdinand. It appears that the plans for the assassination were due to the fact that the Russian general staff passed on to the Serbian general staff the incorrect information that in their visit of June, 1914, the Kaiser and Franz Ferdinand had agreed upon a joint Austro-German attack on Serbia.) This is a fact not known to Austria in 1914, though she suspected a Serbian plot and did her best to uncover it. She had no success, however, at the time. On July 13, 1914, Berchtold's private agent, Wiesner, reported after a thorough investigation at Serajevo that "There is nothing to prove, or even to cause suspicion of the Serbian Government's cognizance of steps leading to the crime or of its preparing it or of its supplying the weapons. On the contrary, there are indications that this is to be regarded as out of the question." Hence, our present knowledge of complicity on the part of certain Serbian military officials is in no sense a justification of the action of the Austrian Government in July, 1914. In fact, it was a knowledge of the apparent falsity of his specific charges against Serbia that made Berchtold determined to keep the matter from a European congress of investigation and mediation. On the other hand, there was ample evidence of dangerous and continuous Serbian intrigue against Austria, whatever Serbia's part may have been in the plot against Franz Ferdinand. The assassins of Franz Ferdinand were members of one of these anti-Austrian secret societies. (Sidney B. Fay, "New Light on the Origins of the World War," in American Historical Review, July and October, 1920, and January, 1921; July, 1920, pp. 634–635; Gooch, Modern Europe, p. 555; Friedjung, op. cit., Vol. III.)

In briefly summarizing the Austrian action and policy from June 28 to August 1, it is necessary to keep clearly in mind that though Berchtold, as foreign secretary, was formally responsible for the negotiations, he was but a figurehead. Szilassy, Kanner, and Hötzendorf have made it most evident that he was but a vain, lazy, weak-willed, vacillating tool, dominated entirely by the war party led by Hötzendorf, the chief of staff, aided and abetted by Forgách, Hoyos, Bilinski, Stürgkh, and by sympathetic or docile subordinate officials in the foreign office (J. von Szilassy, Der Untergang der Donau-Monarchie; H. Kanner, Kaiserliche Katastrophen-Politik; C. von Hötzendorf, Aus Meiner Dienstzeit, 1906–1918. Szilassy's book is much the most important as demonstrating Berchtold's nominal responsibility for Austria's policy in July, 1914, and the real responsibility of the Hötzendorf-Forgách crowd. Professor Fay, however, believes that the crisis of July, 1914, stiffened up Berchtold and made him more of an active and responsible person than was normally the case). It was at one time believed that Berchtold was urged on by Tschirschky (see the violent diatribe against Tschirschky by A. Dumaine, French ambassador at Vienna from 1912 to 1914, in his La Derniere Ambassade de France en Autriche. B. W. von Buelow, Die Krisis, pp. 55–56, gives ample evidence of Tschirschky's relative caution and timidity), the German ambassador at Vienna, but though Tschirschky was more belligerent, after July 5, than the Kaiser or Bethmann-Hollweg, he was so much more moderate than Hötzendorf and his group as to seem a pacifist by comparison (Fay, loc. cit. (July, 1920), passim, especially pp. 631–632 and p. 639, footnote 83).

Thoroughly at the mercy of the war party, and not reluctantly so, Berchtold drew up a letter to the Kaiser signed by the aged Austrian Emperor, Franz Josef, stressing the fact that unless vigorous action was taken against Serbia there was little hope that the Austrian Empire could be kept intact. This was delivered on July 5. The Kaiser expressed sympathy with and approval of the Austrian position as stated in the letter, gave assurance of German support, and declared it to be his opinion that it was improbable that Russia would take up arms in defense of Serbia. In the evening he talked over the matter with Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the chancellor, and Dr. Zimmermann, the undersecretary for foreign affairs.

A FATEFUL DECISION

On July 6, as the Kaiser was leaving on his annual northern cruise, von Bethmann-Hollweg communicated to Szögyény, the Austrian ambassador at Berlin, the ominous decision as to Germany's position. It was as follows: "Austria may judge what is to be done to clear up her relation with Serbia; whatever Austria's decision may turn out to be, Austria can count with certainty upon it that Germany will stand behind her as an ally and friend" (Ib., pp. 625–627; Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 532–534). This crucial blank warrant was to prove the undoing of the dual monarchy and the German Empire. When it was too late, the Kaiser recognized the folly of such a commitment, and on July 30 exclaimed in desperation that he and Bethmann-Hollweg had been stupid enough to put their necks into a noose (Fay, Ib., p. 628, and footnote 38), an expression of regret which was not duplicated by Poincaré or Grey when they found themselves involved by giving Russia a free hand in the Balkans.

These talks of the Kaiser with Szögyény, Bethmann-Hollweg, and Zimmermann and an unimportant brief conference with Falkenhayn, the Prussian minister of war, on July 5, constitute all there actually was of a "Potsdam conference," which, starting as a bit of wild gossip on the part of a waiter in a Berlin restaurant, developed into the luxuriant and voluptuous legend with which Ambassador Henry Morgenthau regaled the English-speaking world in 1918 (at least eight of the men specifically alleged to be present at Potsdam were not in that part of Germany on July 5, and some not in Germany at all). Before leaving, early on the morning of July 6, for his cruise, the Kaiser talked with army and navy officials to inform them of the possibility of war, but asserted that he did not think it sufficiently probable to warrant cutting short the furloughs of army and navy chiefs who were away on their vacations. Nor did he consider the situation serious enough to remain until the return of his Secretary of Foreign Affairs (Fay, Ib., pp. 628–632; Kanner, Montgelas, and V. Valentin, Deutschlands Aussenpolitik, 1890–1918, demonstrate at even greater length the myth of the Potsdam conference).

AUSTRIAN MILITARISTS FOR WAR

The delay of the Austrians from July 6 to July 23 in sending the ultimatum to Serbia, originally attributed to the necessity, made clear at the "Potsdam conference," of having a couple of weeks to arrange the German financial and military situation for imminent and deliberate war, was actually due to the desire to get the report of Wiesner as to Serbian complicity in the assassination, the necessity of winning over Count Tisza, the Hungarian Prime Minister, to the war policy, and the decision to wait until President Poincaré of France had terminated his visit to Russia. There can be no doubt, however, that the Hötzendorf group, with Berchtold as their mouthpiece, had determined upon war long before the delivery of the ultimatum of July 23 and irrespective of any reply which Serbia might make. The Austrian Army was promptly mobilized on the Serbian boundary on July 25, in the determination to forestall any attempt of intervention and arbitration. On July 28, in spite of the humble Serbian reply, which satisfied the Kaiser, von Bethmann-Hollweg, and von Jagow, Austria declared war on Serbia. There seems little probability, even if Germany and Russia had delayed their hostilities, that Austria could have been coerced into reason unless Germany had been willing to stand aside and let Russia make war upon her unaided ally. But there is no evidence that Russia was any more eager to make war upon Austria than upon Germany (Fay, loc. cit. (July and October, 1920), especially pp. 632–638. The most detailed and reliable treatment of Austrian diplomacy in July, 1914, is contained in the works of Szilassy, Kanner, and Valentin, and R. Goos, Das Wiener Kabinett und die Entstehung des Weltkrieges, the most voluminous analysis. Though German and Austrian writers, all four were noted critics of Macht-und-Realpolitik in their respective countries and their works are in no sense apologetic for those responsible for the Austro-German policy of 1914. No historian in any country has written more competently or objectively upon the origins of the war than Valentin, whose work is the best study we yet have of the diplomacy of Germany and Austria in 1914. He places the responsibility primarily upon Russia and Austria, in the order given). "The readiness of Austria," says Gooch, "for an eleventh-hour compromise, of which we heard so much at the beginning of the war, proves to be a legend" (Gooch, Recent Revelations on European Diplomacy, loc. cit., p. 18. For full details of Austrian duplicity see Fay, loc. cit. (October, 1920), pp. 45–49).

Though we must recognize the perverse, determined, and arbitrary action of Austria in this crisis, which unquestionably carries with it the ultimate responsibility for the outbreak of the European war, the historian must also point out that it was a life-or-death proposition on the part of Austria to crush the Serbian plots, however natural and just these may have seemed to Serbia. (Friedjung, op. cit., Vol. III; Hoijer, op. cit.). And, further, arbitrary and peremptory as the ultimatum to Serbia was, it certainly was not more so than our demands upon Mexico at the time of the invasion by the Pershing expedition, with no more justification. As Gooch has well put the matter:

> "It was natural that Austria should defend herself against the openly proclaimed ambition to rob her of Provinces which she had held for centuries. After the Bosnian crisis Serbia had promised to be a good neighbor; but she had not kept her word, and her intrigues with Russia were notorious. To stand with folded arms and wait till her enemies felt strong enough to carry out their program of dismemberment was to invite disaster, and the murder of Francis Ferdinand by Yugoslav assassins appeared to demand some striking vindication of the authority of the State. The ultimatum to Serbia was a gambler's throw; but to the statesmen of Vienna and Budapest it appeared to offer the best chance of escape from a terrible danger which was certain to increase and which challenged the existence of Austria as a great power." (Gooch, op. cit., p. 55.)

Germany: In regard to Germany, the first point to be kept in mind is the military tradition which she inherited from the Bismarckian era. The conventional notions in this matter are usually quite correct as to the absolute degree of German militarism, but they are, for the most part, grotesquely exaggerated as to its uniqueness and relative extent and aggressiveness. No doubt Bismarck did bully France somewhat during his chancellorship, but the French "Revenge" group was irreconcilable, and Paul Déroulède preached the crusade of revenge not only in France but throughout the Continent. There were as many in Germany who would have welcomed the conciliatory program of Caillaux as there were Frenchmen who gave him loyal support. Germany was well aware of the strength of the revenge motive in the Franco-Russian alliance. (A good description and criticism of militaristic Germany is contained in the book by the German pacifist, F. Foerster, Mes Combats a l'Assaut du Militarisme et de l'Imperialisme Allemand. On Franco-German relations see Gooch, Franco-German Relations, 1871–1914; J. Caillaux, Agadir: Ma Politique Exterieure; and P. Albin, L'Allemagne et la France. The most thorough study of German foreign policy is that by F. Rachfahl, Deutschland und die Weltpolitik, 1871–1914. For the pacific group in Germany see H. Wehberg, Die Fuehrer der Deutschen Friedensbewegung.) The Pan-German League, so much denounced during the war in fantastic books like those by André Chéradame and R. G. Usher, appears to have been little more than a small but noisy group of fanatical patriots and imperialists of little standing or influence in Germany. (For this statement I am indebted to the conclusions of the most thorough and scholarly study yet made of the Pan-German League in a doctoral dissertation about to be published by Miss Mildred S. Wertheimer at Columbia University.)

Germany's attitude toward Russia was determined primarily by the fact that she was the chief ally of Germany's inveterate enemy and the enemy of her main ally. There was some further mutual enmity based upon discriminatory tariffs and Russian opposition to German plans in the way of imperialism in the Near East. (Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 501–525; Korff, op. cit.; A. Hedenstrom, Geschichte Russlands von 1878 bis 1918; R. Pohle, Russland und das Deutsche Reich.) Germany understood that her future security depended primarily upon maintaining the strength and integrity of the dual monarchy. Otherwise she would be wholly isolated and surrounded by hostile and powerful States. The ascendency of Austria in the Balkans was also essential to the plans of Germany for developing the Near East. Germany thus had a definite and direct interest in the suppression of so evident a menace to the permanence of Austria-Hungary as the rapid growth of Yugoslav nationalism. It should be pointed out, however, that up to 1914, in spite of opposition of interests, there was surprisingly little hostility on the part of Germany toward Serbia. As late as July 1, 1914, Tisza complained of the Kaiser's partiality for Serbia. It was the horror at the assassination of a member of a royal family that turned the Kaiser against Serbia in 1914.

In order properly to understand the Kaiser's reaction to the murder of the archduke one has to combine with this general background his friendship with Franz Ferdinand, his recent visit with him, and, above all, the shock caused by the assassination of a member of a royal family, particularly one so close to the Hohenzollerns as the Hapsburgs. He had even been profoundly moved by the assassination of President Sadi Carnot, of France, in 1894, and of King Humbert, of Italy, in 1900. (The most detailed and accurate sketch of the Kaiser in relation to German foreign policy is contained in the five works by Otto Hammann, chief of the press bureau of the German Foreign Office: Der Neue Kurs; Zur Vorgeschichte des Weltkrieges; Um den Kaiser; Der Missverstandne Bismarck; and Bilder aus der Letzten Kaiserzeit.)

Whether he was right or wrong, it is therefore easy enough to see why the Kaiser should have been in a state of mind to regard the Sarajevo incident as a just basis for strong Austrian action against Serbia, even though it might lead to some possibility of a general European war. He had, however, the best of reasons for believing that the conflict might be localized to one between Austria and Serbia. He felt that the Czar should be as much startled and repelled as himself over the murder of Franz Ferdinand, and he had been assured by the Russian military attaché at Berlin that Russia had not been seriously disturbed over the aggressive attitude of Austria toward Serbia in 1913. In the face of these facts, it is not difficult to understand why the Kaiser should have been impressed with the letter of Franz Josef and, while still in a highly emotional state, should have given Austria a free hand with Serbia on July 5. It is equally clear, in the light of a full knowledge of the circumstances and consequences which we now possess, that it was a most foolhardy policy, which the Kaiser himself bitterly regretted before the month was over. (Fay, loc. cit. (July, 1920), pp. 628–629; Beard, op. cit., pp. 22–27. Valentin and Montgelas have explained in the most detail why the Kaiser did not continue his 1918 policy of restraining Austria. The most vigorous assault upon the Kaiser and his policy in 1914 has been made by K. Kautsky, Wie die Weltkrieg Entstand.) It must not be forgotten that in 1912 Poincaré deliberately, and with less justification in the way of a crisis, urged Russia to take a firm hand in the Balkans and assured her of French support to the full.

Though the general terms of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia were agreed upon by the Austrian leaders on July 14, Berchtold deliberately withheld a copy from Bethmann-Hollweg and von Jagow, so that they did not obtain it until the evening of July 22, rather late to protest against its delivery. Both pronounced it too harsh and severe. Berchtold likewise held up the humble and conciliatory Serbian reply to the ultimatum, and the German Foreign Office first learned of its nature and contents through the Serbian minister in Berlin. The Kaiser, von Bethmann-Hollweg, and von Jagow were all satisfied with it and felt that it removed all cause for war between Austria and Serbia. (Fay, ibid., pp. 632–637. Tschirschky must have known of the contents of the ultimatum before July 23, and the responsibility for the ignorance of von Bethmann-Hollweg and Jagow may rest in part with him. See Gooch, Modern Europe, p. 543, note. There is little probability that Germany would have publicly protested in any event, because of the carte blanche to Austria. Bethmann-Hollweg might still have telegraphed a protest on the evening of the 22d.) The Kaiser commented upon the Serbian concessions as a great diplomatic victory for Austria. "A brilliant result for a time limit of only 48 hours. That is more than one might have expected. A great moral victory for Vienna; but with it every ground for war disappears and Giesl ought to have remained quiet in Belgrade. In such circumstances I should never have ordered mobilization." (Fay, loc. cit. (July, 1920), p. 637, footnote.)

Bethmann-Hollweg and the Kaiser on July 27–29 endeavored to mediate between Russia and Austria, both on his own initiative and in cooperation with Sir Edward Grey, but the Austrian Government deliberately refused to answer their telegrams containing the suggetion and offer of mediation. The real earnestness of von Bethmann-Hollweg in his effort to restrain Austria is well brought out in the following telegram sent to Vienna on the early morning of July 30 (Ibid. (October, 1920), p. 45):

> "If Austria refuses all negotiations, we are face to face with a conflagration in which England will be against us, Rumania and Italy, according to all indications, will not be for us, and we shall stand two against four powers. Through England's opposition the main blow will fall on Germany. Austria's political prestige, the military honor of her army, as well as her just claims against Serbia, can be adequately satisfied by her occupation of Belgrade or other places. Through her humiliation of Serbia she will make her position in the Balkans as well as in her relation to Russia strong again. Under these circumstances we most urgently and emphatically urge upon the consideration of the Vienna cabinet the adoption of mediation in accordance with the above honorable conditions. The responsibility for the consequences which would otherwise follow would be for Austria and for us an uncommonly heavy one."

While Berchtold went through the form of laying this before Franz Josef, Forgách and Hoyos remarked to Tschirschky that any such proposal was a mere joke, in the light of the policy which Austria had determined upon and in which she was supported by the Austrian people.

As we have seen, the Austrian war party, this time determined not to be obstructed by Germany or any other outside power in their ambition to discipline Serbia, declared war on that country and then informed Germany that mediation or arbitration was out of the question, as war had already begun and the whole face of the diplomatic situation was changed thereby.

The Kaiser and Bethmann-Hollweg then devoted themselves to an effort to localize the conflict between Austria and Serbia, but they underestimated the Russian initiative and willingness for war, and their efforts failed. (Ibid., Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 538–539, 544–545.) The victory of the military group at Berlin over the pacific chancellor was primarily due to the evasive conduct and duplicity of the Vienna authorities. Bethmann-Hollweg's program was discredited because he could report no progress on account of Berchtold's delays and deceit. The one real and complete test of the German desire to prevent a general European war was never allowed to come to a trial. If Russia had mobilized solely against Austria, and Germany, justified by Austria's duplicity and arbitrary action, had refused to join her ally, this would have been final proof of Germany's pacific intent.

Some have held that the German ultimatum to Russia demanding a cessation of mobilization was a rash and hasty move; counter-mobilization and a continuation of negotiations would have been a more moderate and judicious procedure. This is doubtless true from the standpoint of diplomatic negotiations, but from what we now know of Russian attitudes and Franco-Russian exchanges between July 29 and August 1, it seems perfectly clear that this would have had no significant results in avoiding the conflict, and from a military standpoint would have been a fatal strategic error. Russia was determined upon war, and Russian soldiers apparently invaded East Prussia before the expiration of the German ultimatum, though there is some evidence that Berlin was not fully informed of this fact. (Gooch, op. cit., pp. 547–549. Cf. B. E. Schmidt in American Historical Review, October, 1923, p. 137.) Once Germany was fully convinced that Russia meant war, her only sane procedure was to get into action as soon as possible against a much more powerful, but more ponderous enemy. At this point the control of the situation was taken out of the hands of the civil authorities and given over to the general staff.

It would, then, seem that the worst that can be said for the Kaiser and Bethmann-Hollweg is that they were both stupid, and, further, that the Kaiser was also far too hasty and impulsive in getting themselves into an inextricable hole by giving Austria a free hand in Serbia, but this is only what they have both admitted. That either had the slightest desire to bring on a general European war is not supported by a shred of evidence. Nothing could be more absurd than the old myth that Austria was about to give in on July 31 when Germany, alarmed at her signs of weakening, rushed in to prevent mediation and make war certain. (Fay, loc. cit., October, 1920, pp. 51–52; Gooch, op. cit., pp. 555–556. For the opinion of the English military attaché at Berlin as to the pacific nature of the Kaiser and his reluctance to sign the final mobilization order see the New York Times, March 30, 1924, Book Review section, p. 20. Two telegrams from von Moltke to Hötzendorf given in Volume IV of the latter's memoirs prove, however, the eagerness of the German general staff for war.)

It should further be indicated that it is obviously false to assert that 1914 was a peculiarly fortunate time for Germany to risk a World War, and that August 1, 1914, was "Der tag" long awaited. While further delay would have made France and Russia stronger in a military sense, Germany's Army and Navy increases were far from complete, and her finances were in a wretched state for war, as is shown by the many efforts in 1913–14 to sell foreign securities and get German gold back into Germany to guard against the emergency of a World War which the diplomats feared and the general staff hoped might be imminent.

Russia: Russian hostility to Germany actually goes back as far as the eighteenth century, though Bismarck did much to allay it. The Kaiser had turned away from Bismarck's Russian policy, and Russian hostility following 1910 was accentuated by the fact that Germany had all but conquered Russia economically. By 1913, 50 per cent of Russian imports were from Germany, and 35 per cent of her exports went to Germany. This amounted to four times England's trade with Russia and seven times the trade of France. Along with this went a tariff war, based on the discriminatory and differential tariff scheme common to European States before 1914.

Still further intensifying the Russo-German rivalry was the growing German domination of Turkey, which had become practically complete by 1912. The German grip upon Constantinople challenged the age-old Russian aspiration to control the Straits, and probably did more than anything else in the international situation to determine Sazonov's Balkan policy from 1912 to 1914, which was stiffened by the encouragement offered to it by Poincaré.

Russia had been disappointed and humiliated in 1908 as a result of the failure to secure the opening of the Straits as compensation for suggesting and acquiescing in the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina and because of her inability in the circumstances to stand forth in the rôle of the defender of Slavic nationalism which was more or less implied in her Pan-Slavic program. (Gooch, op. cit., chs. 12, 15. For a sympathetic study of Russian interests in Serbia and Yugoslav expansion see M. Boghitschewitsch: Kriegsursachen; cf., G. H. Trubetskoi, Russland als Grossmacht. It is worth while pointing out, however, that in the Three Emperors' Alliance of 1881 and 1884 Russia conceded to Austria the right to annex Bosnia and Herzegovina whenever she saw fit, but the Hungarians were opposed even to occupation at this time.) Her resentment was most opportunely exploited by President Poincaré of France. As Baron Korff points out in his judicious and moderate review of the second volume of Marchand's Livre Noir (American Historical Review, July, 1923, pp. 747–748.):

> "We find new light thrown upon the pre-war attitude of France, strangely but constantly connected with one big name—Poincaré. Pichon, Barthou, and many other familiar names are frequently mentioned, but none seems to have played any such prominent rôle in the building up and strengthening of the Franco-Russian alliance as Poincaré; and besides, with a very evident object—steady preparation for the coming conflict with Germany. The reader will put aside this volume with the inevitable conviction that Poincaré long before 1914 had one idea on his mind, the war with Germany. * * * These documents give a most vivid picture of the French pressure exerted on Russia with that one object in view, a war with Germany. At times the Russians were even losing patience with the French, so little did the latter mind the Russian interests; they were willing to lend the Russians money, but only on condition that Russia would increase her army and build new strategic, but otherwise quite useless, railways."

Most significant is the fact that Poincaré in 1912, through Izvolsky, gave Russia a relatively free hand in the Balkans, promising unconditional French support if she was attacked by Austria or Germany. This was two years before the Kaiser's grant of similar freedom to Austria. It is quite apparent, however, from the recent French Yellow Book on Balkan affairs that Poincaré, in spite of his encouragement of a strong Russian policy in the Balkans, insisted upon knowing and approving all the Russian acts and policies, in order that France might not be drawn into any conflict which would not advance her general European interests. Among the more interesting of Izvolsky's communications on this point are the following (Beard, op. cit., pp. 24–27. Also Entente Diplomacy and the World, pp. 403–404, and New York Nation, October 11, 1922, pp. 363–365):

> "The present Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs [Poincaré] is an exceedingly great personality and his cabinet shows itself as the strongest combination of power that has existed for a long period of years. * * *
>
> "M. Poincaré told me that the French Government is first of all considering the question of possible international eventualities. It quite realizes that this or that event, as, for instance, the destruction of Bulgaria by Turkey or any attack upon Serbia by Austria, might force Russia to give up its passive attitude and take diplomatic steps, to be followed afterwards, by military measures against Turkey or Austria. According to assurances received by us from the French Government, we can in such a case count upon the most sincere and most energetic diplomatic support on the part of France. * * * If the conflict with Austria should result in an armed interference on the part of Germany, France would, as a matter of course, look upon this as a casus foederis and not hesitate a minute to fulfill its obligation toward Russia. * * * M. Poincaré further told me that, in view of the critical position in the Balkans, the highest authorities of the French military command are studying with increasing attention all possible military eventualities and it was known to him that expert and responsible personages held an extremely optimistic view of the Franco-Russian chances in case of a general collision. * * * It is for Russia, he remarked to me, to take the initiative in a question (the Austro-Serbian affair) in which she is interested above all others; while it is France's task to give her full and active support. All in all this means that if Russia makes war France will also make war, because we know that Germany will stand by Austria in this question."

That Poincaré, aided by Izvolsky's bribery of the French press, was successful in getting French opinion behind him is evident from the following telegram from Izvolsky to Sazonov (from the Livre Noir, Volume I, translated in the New York Nation, October 11, 1922, pp. 365–366):

"While not long ago the French Government and the press were inclined to accuse us of exciting Serbia and the dominant note was 'France does not wish to wage war for a Serbian port,' now, on the contrary, they look with astonishment and unconcealed apprehension upon our indifference to the fact of mobilization in Austria (against Serbia late in 1912). Not only are these apprehensions expressed by the French cabinet ministers; they penetrate also to the general public and into the newspapers of the most diverse political opinions; they are so lively in the French general staff that the minister of war felt it necessary to draw M. Poincaré's attention to the matter. * * * M. Georges Louis's telegram transmitting the reply of our general staff to General de la Guiche (of the French general staff) did not dissipate the astonishment of the French; they showed me the text of this telegram, according to which General de la Guiche was not only told that we considered Austria's arming only a measure of defense, but that in the improbable case that Austria should attack Serbia, Russia would not fight. This reply greatly astonished M. Poincaré and the other French ministers. * * *

"While attempting to maintain a favorable disposition among the members of the Government and in the political world I am also doing everything possible to influence the press. Thanks to careful steps taken in good time considerable results have been obtained.

"As you know, I do not intervene directly in the distribution of subsidies [to the French press], but this distribution, in which the French ministries of foreign affairs and of finance participate, seems to be effective and is attaining its goal. * * * In general, the Paris press of to-day is very different from that of 1908–9; I must call particular attention to the attitude of the Temps, which distinguished itself four years ago for its Austrophilism, but in the columns of which M. Tardieu is now energetically fighting against the Austrian policy. Count Berchtold and the Austrian ambassador at Paris have several times complained to M. Poincaré.

"In my discussions with French journalists I try particularly to persuade them that if Austria's arming and the demands of Austrian diplomacy bring on a general European conflict despite Russia's conciliatory moderation, war will be waged not for the private interests of Serbia or of Russia, but as a result of Austria's policy and Germany's support of it; these two powers seek to establish their hegemony in Europe and in the Balkan Peninsula. God be thanked, this idea is filtering more and more into political, military, and social circles, and lately I have not had to combat so much the idea that war might be imposed upon France for interests alien to hers as the fear that we might be too passive in a situation concerning the position and prestige of the Entente." (See the New York Nation and the New Republic for February 6, 1924, for revelation of the details of the cooperation between Izvolsky and Poincaré in bribing the French press with Russian gold. Tardieu was prominent as a disbursing agent.)

How well Izvolsky, Poincaré, and the Russian militarists succeeded between 1912 and 1914 is obvious from the aggressive Russian attitude in the Serbian crisis in 1914. Poincaré was aided in 1913 by the substitution of the aggressive Théophile Delcassé for the pacific Georges Louis as French ambassador to Russia. Delcassé was replaced shortly before the war by Maurice Paléologue, an equally enthusiastic supporter of the Franco-Russian alliance.

An illuminating fact as bearing upon the Russian attitude in 1914, which has rarely been pointed out, is the meeting of the Russian Crown council late in February, 1914, to decide as to the best means of Russia's getting control of the straits. The conference came to the conclusion that it would not be wise to strike suddenly and unaided against Turkey, but that it would be the best judgment to await a general European war, when the British and French fleets could be relied upon to destroy or hold in port the fleets of Germany and Austria. Such a conflict was not deemed unlikely or undesirable. (Gooch, op. cit., pp. 520–521; E. Laloy, Les Documents Secrets des Archives du Ministere des Affaires Etrangeres de Russie, pp. 74–109; Montgelas, op. cit., pp. 72–74.)

We have already referred to the tense feeling in both Germany and Russia in the spring of 1914 as a result of this growing suspicion, fear, increase of armament, and tightening of encircling policies. The Austro-Serbian crisis in such a setting was extremely likely to prove fatal to the peace of Europe. The specific circumstances of Austria's conduct toward Serbia were, as we have noted above, peculiarly arbitrary, insulting, and atrocious, perfectly designed to provoke the Russian leaders like Sazonov to strong measures in the attempt to insure Serbia a fair chance to put her case before the great powers. It is difficult to understand how any fair-minded historian can fail to see why Russia felt justified in contemplating forcible intervention against Austria, even if the Kaiser had reasonable grounds for believing that she probably would not execute such action. Prior assurance of complete French support gave Russia courage in a determined stand. (Fay, loc. cit. (July, 1920), pp. 634–635; Gooch, op. cit., pp. 539–540, 546–547, 556–557. It could be held in 1920 that Sazonov, while thoroughly committed to the Russian ambitions in the Balkans and the Near East and to the Franco-Russian military alliance, was desirous of avoiding war and allowing Serbia to submit her case to the European powers. This view must be somewhat modified in the light of the suppressed telegrams in the Russian Orange Book, which reveal the fact that both Sazonov and Izvolsky were thoroughly aware as to what was going on in military circles in both France and Germany. Sazonov may have been more pacific than the army group, and at least went through the form of cooperation with Grey in the effort to submit the problems of the 1914 crisis to a European congress. See his unconvincing apology in the New York Times, May 11, 1924.)

RUSSIAN OPINION DIVIDED

Russian opinion and attitudes were apparently divided. The Czar was sincerely desirous of peace, but quite incapable mentally of envisaging the complex European situation and comprehending the full import of his own acts and orders. Sazonov, the foreign minister, though thoroughly committed to Russian imperialism in the Near East and the French military alliance, seems to have been willing to avoid war and secure the submission of the Serbian crisis to a congress of the great powers; he hoped for aid in this direction from Great Britain and was not disappointed. On the other hand, Grand Duke Nicholas, the minister of war, Sukhomlinov, and the chief of staff, Janushkevitch, with the militaristic and imperialistic group as a whole, were convinced that the Austrian ultimatum palpably and inevitably meant war, and believed that the sooner Russia recognized this and accepted the strategic implications and responsibilities the better. (Fay, ibid. (January, 1921), pp. 225–251; R. Honiger, Russlands Vorbereitungen zum Weltkriege. Sazonov's part in urging the Czar to order general mobilization may be explained on the ground that he believed that it would frighten Austria into a resumption of conversations.) "They felt," says Professor Fay, "that a war between Austria and Serbia was necessarily a war between Austria and Russia, and they had no doubt that Austria was about to begin an invasion of Serbia as soon as the time limit expired. * * * They were probably convinced that war was 'inevitable,' and that here was Russia's heaven-sent opportunity to have her final reckoning with Germany and to acquire Constantinople and the straits. Therefore the sooner full mobilization was declared the better." (Fay, ibid., p. 233. It is alleged by some writers that the Russian mobilization was planned from Paris by the French militarists in conjunction with Izvolsky, Sukhomlinov, and Janushkevitch. It seems that Paris and London knew of Russian mobilization long before the Czar was aware of it.) All important evidence which has come out since this was published in January, 1921, has tended to confirm Professor Fay's generalization. To the Russian military group the European war was really on from the moment of the delivery of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia, and no amount of restraining and conciliatory efforts by Bethmann-Hollweg, Sazonov, or Grey would have been of any real avail. The Russian militarists, encouraged by the French, ran away with the situation in Russia in the same way that Hötzendorf and his followers were dominating the policy and producing the train of tragic consequences in the realm of the Central Powers. (Livre Noir, Vol. II, B. von Romberg (editor), Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book; also the references in the following footnote.) Izvolsky, the Russian ambassador at Paris, was thoroughly with the military group.

General preparatory military measures to aid Serbia were decided upon on the 25th, partial mobilization ordered on the 29th, and general mobilization on the 30th. It has been alleged that a false report of German mobilization published in the Berlin Lokal-Anzeiger on July 30, 1914, produced the Russian mobilization order, but this is palpably false. The Russians had determined upon and ordered general mobilization before they heard of this publication. (Montgelas, op. cit., pp. 178–180.) Much has been made of an alleged interception of an order of the Czar in answer to an appeal from the Kaiser directing a suspension of mobilization, but it now seems that the question is unimportant and that the Russian militarists were as determined to have their way, regardless of the Czar, as the Austrian war party was to disregard the moderating and restraining influence of Germany after July 27. (Honiger, op. cit.; S. Dobrorolski, Die Mobilmachung der Russischen Armee, 1914, and Die Kriegsschuldfrage, January–February, 1924, pp. 18–21. I am indebted to Professors Shotwell and Fay for reports of conversations with Dobrorolski in the summer of 1923, in which he frankly stated that the Russian war office and general staff accepted the Austrian ultimatum as a declaration of war on Russia, and began steady preparations for war against both Germany and Austria. Nothing but a complete repudiation by Austria of her demands on Serbia could have held the Russians in check.)

Nor was there any effort of the French to curb Russia. The most that they did was to suggest to Izvolsky on July 30 that he telegraph his Government to be as secretive as possible in carrying on the mobilization, so that Germany could not publicly allege or prove Russian aggression. While the Russians were hypothetically mobilizing to prevent Austrian intervention in Serbia, the French were urging Russia to neglect Austria and concentrate her military activities against Germany. Proof of good faith in the Russian claim to be arming to protect Serbia would have been made if she had mobilized against Austria alone, but this was strategically impracticable. Knowing that Germany and Austria were closely allied, it would have been folly to move against Austria and leave her whole German flank exposed. Further, one must reckon with the fact that Russia was not aware or convinced of the actually serious efforts of Germany to check Austria, and with the further fact that Russia was being urged by the French to move primarily against Germany. (Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book (New York, Huebsch, 1923), pp. 45–61. This had always been a basic phase of French policy, going back as far as the 1892 negotiations preceding the Franco-Russian military convention.)

The German ultimatum and mobilization were inevitably produced by the mobilization of Russia.

As Fay says, "German mobilization was directly caused by that of Russia. In fact, it came rather surprisingly late. (Fay, loc. cit. (January, 1921), pp. 250–251.) On this ground Gooch holds that Russia must bear the responsibility for the actual outbreak of hostilities: "The World War was precipitated by the action of Russia at a moment when conversations between Vienna and Petrograd were being resumed, when Bethmann-Hollweg was at length endeavoring to restrain his ally, and when the Czar and the Kaiser were in telegraphic communication." (Gooch, op. cit., pp. 546–547. As a matter of fact, Austria had not been persuaded to resume conversations at the time of the Russian general mobilization.) This conclusion, to be significant, must rest upon the assumption that if Russia had undertaken only partial mobilization, and that against Austria alone, Germany would have exerted sufficient pressure on her ally to have led to an abandonment of the Serbian invasion and a submission of the dispute to a European congress. Whether or not she actually would have done so is one of the many interesting hypotheses connected with the outbreak of the conflict which can not be regarded as an assured fact. In a narrow and technical sense, however, it is entirely true that it was the Russian general mobilization which supplanted the state of diplomatic negotiations by the clash of arms. This is doubtless what Professor Gooch implies.

There has been much discussion as to whether the Russian general mobilization meant war, and whether Germany was justified in issuing her ultimatum ordering Russia to suspend mobilization. There seems no doubt on this point. The British ambassador to St. Petersburg warned Russia as early as July 25 that Russian general mobilization would mean war, and we know that both the French and the Russian military experts fully and frankly recognized this. This fact surely disposes of the allegation that from a military standpoint Germany should have contented herself with countermobilization. France and Russia both expected her to follow the Russian mobilization with a declaration of war. (Gooch, op. cit., pp. 546–547; Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, pp. 50–76; Montgelas, op. cit., pp. 133–136.)

The one point in the whole situation here which has been most frequently ignored by historians is that Sazonov was certainly grotesquely exaggerating the actuality when he described the protection of Serbia as a life and death matter for Russia. No informed historian and political scientist could well deny that Austria had far more reason, from the standpoint of the realities in the defense of her national existence, in attacking Serbia than Russia had in the way of protecting her. In 1908 Russia had instigated Austrian aggression of a type nearly as serious as that contemplated in 1914; in 1912–13 she had not been seriously disturbed by Austrian threats against Serbia, and the fact that she directed a prominent part of her military action against Germany and not Austria indicates that she was not wholly absorbed in solicitude for Serbia. At most, it was only Russia's not wholly defensible or commendable aspiration for the hegemony of the Balkans which was at stake, while the very future cohesion of the dual monarchy depended upon a repression of Yugoslav nationalism. We are not, of course, necessarily arguing that Austria-Hungary should have continued to exist, but we can certainly forgive the Austrian and German authorities for believing that it should. One should keep in mind, however, Professor Schmitt's thesis that, even if the Serbian matter was not of crucial importance for Russia considered individually, it was of the greatest importance to the Triple Entente as a whole.

France: In regard to France, the analysis of the pre-war situation must begin with a recognition of the Franco-German psychology after 1871. France never forgave Germany for the humiliation of that period or for the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine. Germany recognized the intensity of French resentment and longing for revenge, and reciprocated by an overbearing attitude toward France. We must, however, free our minds of the illusion that France was in 1870 a terror-stricken victim of Prussian aggression. Even the two early French authorities on the diplomacy of the Franco-Prussian War, La Gorce and Sorel, frankly admit that Gramont precipitated the war and thereby played directly into the hands of Bismarck. (We must also free ourselves from the myth of the Ems telegram atrocity. In some ways it was even less insulting in the abridged than in the complete form. A more recent French account of the origins of the War of 1870 is P. Lehautcourt, Les Origines de la Guerre de 1870.) We should further dispel the mistaken notion that England and the United States were indignantly repelled by Prussian aggressiveness in 1870. The overwhelming majority of English and American opinion was unreservedly on the side of Prussia, which they believed was being wantonly assaulted by the most militaristic and warlike power in Europe. It is true, however, that the severity of Bismarck's terms alienated some of his British and American supporters. (C. B. Schieber, The Transformation of American Sentiment Toward Germany, 1870–1914; chap. 1; D. N. Raymond, British Policy and Opinion During the Franco-Prussian War.)

The spirit of revenge never died out in France, its chief apostles being Paul Déroulède, Maurice Barrès, and Léon Daudet, leaders of the League of Patriots and the Action Française. After the collapse of the Boulanger movement in 1889, and the discrediting of the militaristic clique in the Dreyfus case, however, the war and revanche fever abated for a decade, and certain French leaders, like Joseph Caillaux, endeavored to promote greater friendliness between France and Germany. This was made more difficult by the Morocco crises, and about 1909 the party represented by Caillaux began to lose its dominating position and was replaced by the advocates of a "strong France," prominent among them Poincaré, Delcassé, Millerand, Joffre, Jonnart, and Tardieu. Even Clemenceau, the original and veteran defeatist and antimilitarist, joined their group. In the words of the Abbé Dimnet, "France was herself again." This group was strengthened by the unquestionable increase of the power and vocal exuberance of the imperialistic and military party across the Rhine. (The works of Fisher, Gooch, Curtis, and Albin, as above. E. Dimnet, France Herself Again, is a sympathetic discussion of the nationalistic party after 1900. An extreme criticism is contained in Gouttenoire de Toury, Pevet, and Bausman as cited.)

FRENCH INCITEMENT OF RUSSIA

The point of concentration in diplomacy on the part of the Poincaré policy was Russia. (See above in the section on Russia.) The record of its nature is now available in the Livre Noir, and no reader of the documents can doubt that after 1912, at least, France was the moving and dominating spirit in the Franco-Russian alliance, and that she constantly worked to accustom Russia to the idea of a coming war with Germany and to its preparation. Russian sensitiveness concerning Austro-German policies in the Balkans and the Near East was ever stimulated by French warnings and suggestions. When the Russian Government, in 1912–13, seemed not to be greatly disturbed over Austria's menacing attitude toward Serbia, the French Government informed the Russian that it viewed this attitude with "astonishment and unconcealed apprehension." (New York Nation, October 11, 1922, pp. 365–366, Document XVI; Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 515–520; Montgelas, Leitfaden zur Kriegsschuldfrage, pp. 72–74.) In 1913 France passed a bill providing for the largest standing army per head of population maintained by any major European State. From the documents now available it seems perfectly clear that by this time Poincaré, himself a Lorrainer, was willing to accept the first good opportunity for a European war as the means of restoring Alsace-Lorraine to France. (Marchand, Livre Noir, Vol. I, pp. 35–39, 128–130, 148–150, 259, 345–347, 393, 419–437, 457–464, and Entente Diplomacy, Books II–III.) The allegation that he was eager to promote an occasion for such a conflict does not rest upon any such impressive documentary evidence, though informed persons will admit that the circumstantial evidence is impressive, and Poincaré has not attempted to clear himself by opening the French archives to historians. (The most serious accusation is that by Pevet, Les Responsables de la Guerre. Poincare's defense is contained in his Origins of the War, which is rendered far less convincing by the subsequent publication of the Livre Noir and the Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book. The authoritative apology for the official French policy is contained in E. Bourgeois and G. Pages, Les Origines and Responsabilites de la Grande Guerre.) Probably the most judicious and comprehensive summary of the primary importance of Poincaré in completing and stiffening the Franco-Russian alliance is the following by Professor Schmitt:

"The credit belongs in the first instance to M. Raymond Poincaré, who became Premier of France in January, 1912. Under his masterly care Franco-Russian relations, which had become somewhat tenuous while one ally was absorbed in Morocco and the other in Persia and the Far East, were soon exhibiting the closest harmony. In the liquidation of the Tripolitan war and throughout the Balkan wars Paris and St. Petersburg devised and applied a common policy, carrying London with them, if possible. M. Poincaré repeatedly assured Izvolsky, now ambassador to France, that the Republic would fulfill all the obligations of the alliance; Izvolsky took the Paris press into pay to create a sentiment for Russia and to strengthen the position of the Premier, whom he recognized as most useful to Russia. The French statesman urged the Czar to proceed with the construction of strategic railways in Poland and sent Delcassé as his representative at the Russian court. The Russian ambassador, at least according to some persons, demanded that France revive the three years' military service. Then French and Russian general staffs in annual conferences perfected their plans for war, which were based on a joint offensive against Germany. A naval convention was concluded. Finally M. Poincaré went to Russia, and M. Sazonov, the Foreign Minister, expressed to the Czar his hope that "in the event of a crisis in international relations there would be at the helm in France, if not M. Poincaré, at least a personality of the same great power of decision and as free from the fear of taking responsibility." The elevation of M. Poincaré to the Presidency of the Republic in no way interrupted the newly developed intimancy. Indeed, from 1912 to the outbreak of the war the dual alliance presented a solid front at every turn to the rival diplomatic group."

FRANCE NOT AVERSE TO WAR

It is quite evident therefore that we must modify the view which was tenable before publication of the Siebert documents, the Livre Noir, and the Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, namely, that the French Government was reluctant to contemplate the imminent approach of war in July, 1914. In 1920 Professor Fay could write:

"As to France, however much she may have encouraged the Russian militarists in the months preceding the crisis by her adoption of the three-year term of military service, by her exchange of military and diplomatic visits, by her naval convention, by her jingo press, and by her close relations with England, and however much by these same measures she may have aroused the suspicions of Germany, there can be no doubt that when the crisis came she sincerely did her best to avert it. (Fay, loc. cit. (January, 1921), pp. 252–253.)

To-day we know that she did not do her best to avert it. If there was to be a world war which would lead to the recovery of Alsace-Lorraine and the humiliation of Germany, 1914 was a good year for France to risk it, for her leaders knew of the growing improvement of relations between England and Germany, and the loss of English aid would have been a far greater handicap to France than the incompleteness of her military increases in 1914. The French diplomats also feared lest England might grow more cautious after a crisis like that of 1914. The chief bulwark of the defense of pacific intent upon the part of France is the statement that on July 30 she ordered the withdrawal of her frontier troops to a point 10 kilometers (about 6 miles) back of the boundary in order to prove her lack of aggressive purposes and then awaited German attack. There are a number of considerations which make it necessary almost entirely to discredit this move as any proof whatever of a purely defensive attitude on the part of France. In the first place, the order was given on July 30, before Germany had taken any steps toward general mobilization and when she was doing her best to restrain Austria. By the 30th, however, France was fully aware of the fact of the Russian mobilization measures, and her "fear" of Germany must have been based upon her agreeable understanding that Russia proposed to continue her military preparations and that this would mean war with Germany. Further, this order, even if executed, meant no weakening of the French defenses. It was not uniformly obeyed and had no military importance whatever back of the Belgian and Luxemburg frontiers. Officers and soldiers were left in the border posts to watch and report the activities of the German patrols. Most important of all is the generally overlooked fact that while this withdrawal meant little or no military handicap to the French, even where actually executed, it was in many cases a real military advantage, as it allowed them to bring up to the 10-kilometer line many detachments that had been stationed farther back from the frontier and to carry out preparatory military measures back of this line with apparent innocence of any aggressive intent. (A complete refutation of this withdrawal order as a proof of French defensive humility is contained in Montgelas, op. cit., pp. 180–182, which on this point is absolutely conclusive.) On July 30 Izvolsky was telegraphing to Sazonov that the French Minister of War had suggested that Russia might verbally assure the other powers that she was willing to slow up her military preparations, but at the same time might well actually speed them up, provided that she kept her movements sufficiently secret so that the other powers, particularly Germany and Austria, would not discover her extensive preparatory measures. (Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, pp. 50–64.)

In the light of this and other suppressed Franco-Russian telegrams during the last three days of July, 1914, the order for the withdrawal of the French troops fits in well with the general picture of the French policy as it emerges from the secret documents, namely, a firm determination on the part of the Poincaré clique to encourage and execute extensive military preparations on the part of Russia and France and a parallel effort to keep this decision as secret as possible so as to get military preparations far under way before their discovery by Germany, and also to avoid alienating the opinion of Grey and England. The one fact that stands out of the Franco-Russian exchange of late July and early August, 1914, more than anything else, is the ever-present fear of the French authorities that England would discover the aggressive attitude of France and Russia and become lukewarm or alienated from the Entente. As Izvolsky telegraphed to Sazonov, "It is very important for France on account of political considerations relative to Italy and most especially England that the French mobilization should not precede the German one but form the answer to the latter." (Ibid., pp. 64–65.)

The ordered withdrawal of the French frontier troops, then, would appear unquestionably to have served a dual purpose. It sufficed to dupe Grey and the English into accepting the fiction of a purely defensive attitude on the part of France and allowed extensive French military measures to be carried on secretly and effectively behind the 10-kilometer line. Instead of an obstacle to the French military preparations, then, it was a positive gain, while also serving as a diplomatic ruse. We have no means of knowing as yet the understanding reached by Poincaré and the Russians during the former's visit to St. Petersburg in July, 1914, a most crucial bit of information for assigning war guilt, but we have unanswerable documentary evidence that by July 30 France recognized that Russia had determined upon military measures which would lead to war, encouraged her in this decision, and gave assurance of complete French support as an ally while publicly approving Grey's honest attempts at mediation with Germany, Austria and Russia. (Ibid., pp. 50–76; Montgelas, op. cit., pp. 94–97, 125–132, 142–144. Though in some cases in this work Montgelas fails to consider evidence damaging to Germany, his presentation of the case for Franco-Russian duplicity in these pages is incontestable.)

MILITARISTS WELCOMED WAR

More damaging is the testimony as to the enthusiasm and fervor with which the French civil and military chiefs anticipated the approach of war. On July 29 Izvolsky telegraphed Sazonov that the army circles in France were in high spirits at the prospect of war, and that the French Government was suppressing antimilitaristic meetings. On July 30 he telegraphed that France had given full assurance that she would fulfill all her obligations as an ally of Russia, but suggested that Russian military preparations be sufficiently secretive so that Germany would not also be prematurely frightened into mobilization. On July 31 the German ambassador in Paris called on Premier Viviani to learn what attitude France would take in the event of war between Russia and Germany. Viviani refused to answer, telling the ambassador to come around the next day. Just after midnight, however, the French Minister of War told Izvolsky that the French Government had agreed upon war and hoped that the Russians would neglect the war with Austria and throw all their forces against Germany. "The French Minister of War disclosed to me with hearty, high spirits that the French Government has firmly decided upon war and begged me to confirm the hope of the French general staff that all our (Russian) efforts will be directed against Germany, and that Austria will be treated as a negligible quantity." (Ibid., pp. 44–61.) When to this is added the unbounded enthusiasm for war which the French ambassador at Petrograd, Paléologue, confesses in his diary we have to drop entirely the myth of a terrified and reluctant France, however much the pacific group in France may have been repelled by Poincaré, Viviani, Delcassé, and their policies. (M. Paléologue, La Russie des Tsars pendant la Grande Guerre.)

Of course, we must distinguish rather sharply between the attitude of the French people and that of Poincaré and his Government. There is no doubt that the French people were pacifically inclined and taken by surprise at the sudden outbreak of hostilities. The French people were happy in the middle of July, 1914, to see that the Serajevo incident had quieted down, but Russian gold still remained to induce the French press to stir the French citizens from their pacific complacency. In fact, it is necessary to go even further, and distinguish between Poincaré and his group and other members of the cabinet. Several members of the cabinet were Socialists or socialistically inclined and opposed to war. French foreign policy on crucial points in the critical period of July, 1914, was arbitrarily and in some cases secretly handled by Poincaré, Viviani, and Messimy, in the Government, in cooperation with Paul Cambon, French ambassador to England (who made a semisecret trip to Paris late in July), and with Delcassé and Tardieu. Upon Poincaré himself must fall the major responsibility for the determination of French policy from June to August, 1914, as well as for the control of Franco-Russian relations from 1912 to 1914. In order to whip the citizenry of the Republic into line, the Government, by means of censorship and propaganda, carried on a vigorous campaign to convince the French people that they were being asked to support their Government in a purely defensive war in which the very existence of France was at stake. (G. Demartial, La Guerre de 1914. Comment on mobilisa les consciences.)

That France was not caught napping in the way of military preparations is proved by the fact that, though she officially took action toward mobilization on July 31, the five army corps on the frontier were announced as fully prepared for war on the next day. Further, Poincaré frankly admitted to Izvolsky that he hesitated to declare war on Germany because to do so would involve calling Parliament and a public debate, which he feared. He also delayed in order to complete French mobilization, and, quite obviously, not to alarm England and lose her support. Satisfaction was expressed when the Germans actually invaded France and eliminated the necessity for a debate on war. (Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, pp. 58, 62–63, 68–76.)

Great Britain: England's foreign policy underwent notable changes between 1870 and 1914. Down to 1890 she had pursued a policy of isolation, except for a brief joint action with France in Egypt, and the Mediterranean agreement of 1887. The new German Kaiser turned toward England and away from Russia about 1890, and Germany and England were on good terms until the famous Kruger telegram of the Kaiser at the time of the Jameson raid. This, together with German commercial development and naval plans, and her Bagdad railway scheme, alienated England, and good feeling was not restored until June, 1914.

The failure of efforts to achieve amicable Anglo-German relations earlier than this, as Hammann and Valentin freely admit, was due chiefly to Germany, and particularly to Bülow and his anti-English bête noir, Baron von Holstein, whom even the Kaiser denounces in his memoirs. They discouraged the pacific English advances. Further, it was Bülow's and Tirpitz's foolhardy naval policy that did more than anything else to arouse English suspicion and throw Grey into relations of a more friendly sort with France and Russia. German sympathizers might, of course, point to the English rejection of German overtures at the time of the Haldane mission of 1912.

England had clashed with France in the Sudan in 1898, but astute French diplomacy had brought out of this impasse an understanding with England which ripened into an agreement in 1904 and was practically a defensive alliance by 1911. England and Russia had been traditional rivals over the Near East until they settled their differences by partitioning Persia in 1907, thereby paving the way for the consummation of the Triple Entente. (The latest authoritative history of British diplomacy after 1870, based on the new documents and relatively impartial, is contained in the Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, Vol. III. It should be supplemented by such critical works as those by E. D. Morel and W. S. Blunt. The best book yet written in England on war origins is that by Lord Loreburn, How the War Came. It should be compared with the official apology in the work of H. H. Asquith, The Genesis of the War.) There is little doubt that Sir Edward Grey, in spite of his engagements with Russia and France, was really desirous of better relations with Germany. He was the only important European statesman who had a vision of a new European order. Loreburn's judgment is on some points too harsh.

BRITISH COMMITMENTS TO FRANCE

In dealing with the problem of England's position and procedure in the crisis of July, 1914, it should be pointed out that Sir Edward Grey occupied a position singularly like that of the Kaiser and Bethmann-Hollweg. Sincerely desirous of preserving the peace of Europe, he had, nevertheless, actually arranged to aid France in case of her being attacked by Germany, and had a less definite agreement with Russia concerning concerted naval action. There is no doubt that the Anglo-French agreement was less literally definite than Germany's carte blanche to Austria of July 5, 1914, but it was morally as definite and binding. It brought Grey into the same desperate situation as Germany, when he found himself, on August 1–2, 1914, unconsciously the victim of warlike aims and activities on the part of Russia and France. So firmly were the French convinced of the binding character of the English understanding that Joffre tells us that the French military details were based in detail upon the assumption of English aid. Professor Schmitt further points out that the language of the Anglo-French understanding is practically identical with the comparable clauses of the Franco-Russian alliance.

The Anglo-French agreement had never been revealed to Parliament or to some members of the cabinet. Its very existence had been denied by both Grey and Asquith in 1913–14. It was first confessed by Sir Edward Grey on August 3, 1914, when he was compelled to go before Parliament and plead for the support of France. (See the indictment of Grey on these points in Loreburn, op. cit., and E. D. Morel, The Secret History of a Great Betrayal.) Professor Beard thus describes the situation:

> "When on August 3, 1914, the great decision had to be taken, Sir Edward Grey, in his memorable plea for the support of France, revealed for the first time the nature of the conversations and understandings that had been drawing the two countries together during the previous 10 years. He explained how the French Admiralty had concentrated its fleet in the Mediterranean and left the Atlantic coast of France undefended, and how, the day before, he had assured France that, if the German fleet came out, England would protect the defenseless ports across the Channel. He explained how naval conversations extending over many years had prepared for the immediate and effective cooperation of the two powers in case of war." (C. A. Beard, Cross Currents in Europe Today, pp. 30–31; Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, Vol. III, pp. 466–470, 500–508.)

This announcement created considerable consternation in England, and led Charles P. Trevelyan, John Morley, and John Burns to resign from the ministry in protest.

England also gave Russia a favorable impression of her attitude in the event of a European war. Sazonov reported to the Czar in 1912 that on his visit to England Grey, the King, and Bonar Law assured him that cooperation with France and Russia in the event of war with Germany was the one point upon which all major parties in England were enthusiastically agreed. Of George V he said:

> "With visible emotion His Majesty mentioned Germany's aspirations toward naval equality with Great Britain, and explained that in case of a conflict it would have dangerous consequences not only for the German fleet but also for German commerce, as the English 'would sink every single German merchant ship they got hold of.'" (Beard, ibid., pp. 41–43; Korff in American Historical Review, July, 1922, p. 797.)

Definite arrangements for a triangular naval cooperation in the event of war were secretly worked out between England, France, and Russia in May and June, 1914, a rumor of which greatly disturbed and alarmed German official circles. (Beard, ibid., pp. 45–50, 72–75; Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, pp. 484–486; New York Nation, October 11, 1922, pp. 365–370, Documents XXI–XXV.) Not only had England thus prepared for naval participation against Germany; she had also worked out in minute detail the plans for sending troops to the Continent. Lord Haldane, who had been Secretary of State for War from 1905–1912, testified in 1919 that he had made every plan during those years for the transfer of troops across the Channel. Like the Prussians in 1870, when war was declared the English officials had but to sign orders prepared nearly a decade earlier.

Captured Belgian documents further reveal the fact that England had even discussed with Belgium the possibility of landing troops on Belgian soil in the event of a German invasion, but this proposal received little encouragement from Belgium. (Beard, Ibid., pp. 50–55.) Finally, Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, has told how, after 1912, when diplomatic relations between England and Germany were steadily improving, he became convinced that war with Germany was inevitable, and began in every way active preparations for it. The intellect of Churchill on the matter of war preparation seems fairly comparable to those of Hötzendorf, Janushkevitch, and Von Moltke. (W. S. Churchill, The World Crisis, 1911–1914.)

In spite of these preparations for war, no fair-minded student doubts Grey's sincere desire for peace in July, 1914, or the ardor with which he worked for mediation and delay of hostilities, within the limitations forced by his negative and vacillating character and his commitments to his allies. Probably the chief criticism which can be made of Grey's procedure after July 25 is his shiftiness and uncertainty and the fact that he did not warn Germany quickly and sharply enough as to what England's position would be in the event of an attack upon France. It would now seem that such a warning would have forced Germany into very strong measures against Austria and, perhaps, have averted the conflict. But we must remember that Grey would have faced a cabinet which might not have supported him in any such positive action. He was shamefully deceived by France and Russia, who had resolved upon war and were making military preparations at the very time when Grey was earnestly carrying on negotiations in good faith for delay and mediation. He was "double-crossed" by Grand Duke Nicholas, Sukhomlinov, and Poincaré in the same way that Bethmann-Hollweg and the Kaiser were by Hötzendorf, Forgách, and Berchtold. (Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book, pp. 44–76; Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 545–546; Cambridge History of British Foreign Policy, pp. 486–504. For proof that Grey was not willing, how-over, to limit his ability to fulfill his obligations to the Triple Entente in the interest of peace, see p. 501. An acquaintance who has examined the unpublished Siebert documents assures me that my account above is too favorable to Sir Edward Grey, who should bear more of the burden of responsibility for the crisis of 1914 than I have indicated.) The telegrams in the Falsifications of the Russian Orange Book reveal Poincaré excessively fearful of offending England or allowing her to discover in any way the aggressive French and Russian decisions. He was equally eager to discover and play up any apparently aggressive German aims and acts. It is doubtful if Grey was thoroughly disillusioned about his deception until the publication of the secret Franco-Russian dispatches in 1922–23, and Mr. Asquith still seems to share the illusions of 1914 about the good faith of his allies. (H. H. Asquith, The Genesis of the War, 1923.)

Once Germany declared war on France, Grey was relieved from his embarrassment by the invasion of Belgium, but there is little doubt that England would have come into the conflict irrespective of this act, and there is equal reason to believe that Germany would not have invaded Belgium if England had given assurance of abstinence from hostilities on this condition. The millions of English and Dominion citizens who fell in the World War were the price paid for Grey's folly in allowing himself to be dragged into the service of Franco-Russian imperialism. (Recognition of Grey's pacific intent in 1914 does not carry with it, of course, a whitewash of British imperialism, but the problems of British rule in Egypt, India, South Africa, and Ireland are not a legitimate part of the chapter of history dealing with the war guilt of 1914.)

Italy: Much has been made by some of Italy's unwillingness to join with Germany and Austria in 1914 as a proof of her conviction of their perfidy, aggression, and war guilt. This argument possesses no validity whatever. Italy's joining of the Triple Alliance in 1882 had been an accident, due to temporary Italian pique over the French annexation of Tunis. (A. C. Coolidge, the Origins of the Triple Alliance; Pribram, op. cit.; Fuller, op. cit. It might also be pointed out that fear dominated Italian policy in 1882, as Italy actually expected a French attack at this time. Pribram suggests that an important factor was King Humbert's fear of socialism.) Austria was Italy's traditional enemy, and in due time the old enmity reasserted itself. Italian nationalism and imperialism embraced as a part of its program the recovery of Italia Irredenta from Austria, if not, indeed, the making of an "Italian Lake" out of the Adriatic. Such aspirations could, of course, only be realized as the result of a war with Austria. By this time the anti-French feeling had cooled considerably, and in November, 1902, Italy and France made an agreement not to make war upon each other, even if one took the initiative in declaring war upon a State allied with the other. This meant that the Triple Alliance was, unknown to Germany and Austria, but a hollow shell, so far as Italy was concerned, for a dozen years before the crisis of 1914. (Gooch, Modern Europe, pp. 58–60, 145–149, 346–347, 416–417; G. Gullavresi, Italia e Austria, 1859–1914; Mayr, Der Italienische Irredentismus.) Italy's participation in the war on the side of the Allies was purchased only by promising her the territorial cessions contemplated in the Italian nationalist program, and it was this dickering, more than anything else, which produced the notorious Secret Treaties of the Entente. (L'Intervenzione dell' Italia nei Document Segreti dell' Intesa.)

Belgium: Belgium comes out of the test of full documentary evidence as to her pre-war activities with a complete clean bill of health. The most that can be made out of her archives is that she feared an invasion by France as well as by Germany in the event of war, and that England had actually discussed the possibility of landing troops on Belgian soil, though she had not been able to secure Belgian consent to such a proposal. In 1912, however, Sazonov wrote the Czar that Poincaré told him very confidentially that England had agreed to send 100,000 men to protect the Belgian boundary against the German invasion of Belgium, which was anticipated by the French General Staff. As to whether France or England would have ultimately invaded Belgium as a mode of getting at Germany if Germany had not anticipated them is another fruitless hypothesis, but anyone who doubts that their morality was above such action should remember their willingness to sacrifice their ally, Serbia, to protect whom the war was originally started, in making Italy concessions in the secret treaties. If they had abstained, it would have been on grounds of expediency and the consequences of alienating neutral opinion, for which the Allies certainly had more fear, if not more respect, than the Central Powers. (This material is contained in the Schwertfeger collection.) The fact that there is no available evidence that France actually intended to invade Belgium in 1914 is no proof whatever that such plans did not exist in the secret files of the general staff. Indeed, we know that the French as well as the German general staff had considered the desirability of invading Belgium. The French authorities well recognized the opposition of England to the violation of the neutrality of Belgium, and the inevitable loss of a powerful ally by even suggesting such action clearly outweighed any strategic value in anticipating German occupation of Belgium. It is, of course, the merest nonsense to allege that the French and British officials and generals were paralyzed with horror and astonishment at the invasion of Belgium. They had expected it and had based their war plans for years on this assumption. The only thing which surprised them was the rapidity of the fall of Liege and Namur and the German advance.

IV. FINAL CONCLUSIONS

It should be apparent to anyone who has followed the analysis of the evidence of war guilt up to the present point that the scapegoat theory of complete, sole, and unique guilt on the part of Germany or any other single State can no longer be supported. Probably the majority of competent students would assign the relative responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities in about this order: Austria, Russia, France, Germany, and England. But who will say that any of the other States, if placed in Austria's position, would not have done much as she did? The United States took military measures against Spain and Mexico on infinitely slighter pretext, without any question of our national integrity being at stake. Our own diplomatic conduct with Spain in 1898 will as little bear close scrutiny as that of Austria with Serbia in 1914. And none of the Entente States can make too much capital out of the free hand given to Austria by Germany. This was exactly what France really extended to Russia in 1912 and what all members of the Entente insisted Russia should have in the Balkan and Serbian crisis of 1914. Neither France nor England made as vigorous efforts to restrain Russia in 1914 as Germany did to curb Austria. Deeper than any national guilt is the responsibility of the wrong-headed and savage European system of nationalism, imperialism, secret diplomacy, and militarism which sprang into full bloom from 1870 to 1914. And there can be no hope of permanent peace in Europe until it is freely and clearly recognized that it is this system which must be resolutely attacked through various forms of international cooperation and organization. The most judicious summary of the whole matter is the following from the pen of Prof. George Peabody Gooch, the most impartial and thorough chronicler who has brought together a comprehensive picture of the diplomatic history of the generation preceding the war:

> "To explain the conduct of the different statesmen of Europe in July and August, 1914, is not necessarily to approve the policy pursued by them and their predecessors out of which the crisis arose. The root of the evil lay in the division of Europe into two armed camps, which dated from 1871; and the conflict was the offspring of fear no less than of ambition. The Old World had degenerated into a powder magazine, in which the dropping of a lighted match, whether by accident or design, was almost certain to produce a gigantic conflagration. No war, strictly speaking, is inevitable; but in a storehouse of high explosives it required rulers of exceptional foresight and self-control in every country to avoid a catastrophe. It is a mistake to imagine that the war took Europe unawares, for statesmen and soldiers alike had been expecting and preparing for it for many years. It is also a mistake to attribute exceptional wickedness to the governments who, in the words of Mr. Lloyd George, stumbled and staggered into war. Blind to danger and deaf to advice as were the statesmen of the three despotic empires, not one of them, when it came to the point, desired to set the world alight. But though they may be acquitted of the supreme offense of deliberately starting the avalanche, they must bear the reproach of having chosen the paths which led straight to the abyss. The outbreak of the Great War is the condemnation not only of the performers who strutted for a brief hour across the stage but of the international anarchy which they inherited and which they did nothing to abate." (Gooch, Recent Revelations on European Diplomacy, loc. cit., p. 29.)

Such, then, are the main results of the most recent research into the origins of the World War in the light of the documentary evidence made available in the past few years. The importance of the problem to-day is to be found in the undoubted fact that our attitudes with respect to desirable European policies are determined more than anything else by our views of the responsibility for the calamity of 1914.

PAY AND ALLOWANCES OF ARMY, NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, without amendment, House bill 4820, to amend the act entitled "An act to readjust the pay and allowances of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service," approved June 10, 1922; and I submit a report (No. 594) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that when we conclude the business of the Senate to-day the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BEQUEST FOR SUMMER WHITE HOUSE SITE

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The principal clerk read as follows:

2905 GEORGIA AVENUE NW.,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1924.

Hon. L. H. BALL,
United States Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your recent bill to create a National Capital park commission which, among other proposals contained therein, is one for the development of park boulevards on either side of the Potomac River, to extend, on the Virginia side to Mount Vernon, and, on the Maryland side along the bluffs to Fort Washington, I respectfully submit the following:

Within the past year there was bequeathed by the late J. Wilson Leakin, the sum of $200,000 for the purchase of a site for a summer White House to be erected in the State of Maryland.

The will provides that his offer be accepted by the United States Government within 18 months of his death, and that if this were not done, the money would revert to the Peabody Institute, which was made his residuary legatee.

No steps have been taken by the Federal Government to accept the money. Sites have been submitted but no final action has been taken and, unless this bequest is accepted by the coming June, the Peabody Institute will receive the $200,000.

I believe you will agree with me that the ideal location for this site should be on the Maryland shore of the Potomac River, directly opposite Mount Vernon, Va. It would be easy of access to the President via automobile or the U. S. S. Mayflower, the presidential yacht. It would always be a link, retrospectively, between the first and last Presidents of our country.

It would be within view of thousands of tourists who visit Mount Vernon annually, whereas the sites thus far proposed are devoid of sentiment or historical proximity; and, being near both Fort Washington, Md., and Quantico, Va., military guards from either of these stations could give it adequate protection.

Under any circumstances, it could be occupied from April until Thanksgiving.

If a summer White House can be located on the Maryland shore of the Potomac, directly opposite Mount Vernon, either by acceptance of the bequest herein quoted, applying it later for this purpose after the necessary land has been appraised, or by an independent appropriation therefor, your proposed riverside-park system will be splendidly balanced on each side.

May I ask your early consideration of this proposal on account of there remaining a trifle more than a month for the acceptance of the bequest herein mentioned?

I am inclosing copy of a letter sent to Senator FESS, referring to a bill by him to note the two-hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. It is in harmony with your park plan and of interest to every citizen.

Very truly yours, PASCAL J. PLANT.

Mr. BALL. I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so referred.

Mr. BALL. I had the letter read merely to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that unless some action is taken by Congress between now and the middle of June, the bequest of $200,000 will go to the Peabody Institute.

ALIEN PROPERTY TRADE INVESTMENT CORPORATION

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 121, Order of Business 541.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska makes a unanimous-consent request. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the measure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the title be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the title of the joint resolution.

The READING CLERK. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) to create a body corporate by the name of the "Alien Property Trade Investment Corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the present consideration of the joint resolution; I am inclined to support it; but it does seem to me that there is practically no one here, and that there ought to be a quorum present when the joint resolution is considered.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator desires it, I shall be glad to explain the joint resolution. I am not asking that it be passed informally. I am perfectly willing to take it up on its merits.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know that; but, as I have stated, there ought to be a quorum here. The joint resolution is a very important one. I do not object to its consideration, but I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Dill	Kendrick	Ransdell
Bayard	Edge	King	Reed, Pa.
Borah	Ferris	Ladd	Sheppard
Brandegee	Fess	Lodge	Shipstead
Brookhart	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Broussard	Frazier	Moses	Smoot
Bruce	George	Neely	Stanfield
Bursum	Gerry	Norbeck	Stephens
Cameron	Harreld	Norris	Swanson
Capper	Harris	Oddie	Wadsworth
Caraway	Harrison	Overman	Warren
Copeland	Heflin	Owen	Willis
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman
Dial	Johnson, Minn.	Ralston

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. KING. I left the Chamber a moment ago, and the Agricultural appropriation bill was up for consideration. May I inquire now if that has been displaced; and if so, in what manner?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been passed.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its passage. May I inquire what measure is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are acting under a unanimous-consent agreement, considering the joint resolution in charge of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent?

Mr. NORRIS. Under a unanimous-consent request the Senate has before it now for consideration Senate Joint Resolution 121.

Mr. KING. Is that the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]?

Mr. NORRIS. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And consent was given for its consideration.

Mr. KING. If I had been here, I should have objected to the consideration of the measure.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, several Senators have asked, very naturally and properly, that the joint resolution now before the Senate be explained. Some Senators were of the opinion that an attempt was being made to have the joint resolution passed without due consideration. There is no such disposition whatever. We invite full consideration of the joint resolution. There is no disposition to pass it without proper consideration.

This is a joint resolution that has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to clear up this point——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will let me explain the measure, perhaps I will clear up the point in the explanation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Perhaps the Senator's explanation will not touch the point I have in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps it will not. Very well, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. The question in my mind is whether this fund in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian will be preserved so that it will protect the claims which American citizens have against the origin of the fund, against Germany, for instance. In other words, our people have certain claims, and we have always been told that they must look to this fund; and there was sufficient left in the fund after we had authorized the distribution of a certain portion of it, the Senator will recall, to protect those claims. Some of those claims have been filed, I presume, and are under consideration. The main point I want to be assured of is with reference to whether this fund will be available to protect the claims after it is used as may be provided in the pending joint resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the Senator from Nebraska is a brilliant lawyer, and has been a judge, and I would like to hear him on the question as to whether or not this is a trust fund which the United States is holding in trust, either to pay these claims or for the German nationals, as some people claim. That is a very interesting legal question, and I hope the Senator will give us his opinion upon it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has anticipated me. Of course, what he asks is one of the things the measure must provide for, and one of the things that must be provided for before I would support any proposition such as involved in this measure. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were unanimous in that opinion. We have an amendment to this joint resolution which, in my judgment, completely protects the trust fund, as everybody, I think, feels it should be protected. I will refer to that just a little later.

There are some details to this joint resolution, and a corporation is to be organized under it, which will be able to carry out the objects of the measure, that there shall be taken from the Alien Property Custodian funds $150,000,000, with which money products in this country will be purchased and shipped to foreign countries whose nationals have title to the trust funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Those products can be sold for cash or on time by the corporation, and provision is made for the taking of security, and so forth. All the money must be spent in this country, and it is contemplated that with this money agricultural products will be purchased, consisting of all kinds of grain and cotton and wool, perhaps. The sales must be made, however, in the country whose nationals own the property which the Government took during the war and now holds as trustee.

In order that there may be no question about the use of this trust fund, we have made no change in the law, because at the present time the Alien Property Custodian and other Government officials have invested parts of this fund in governmental securities. So they have been using the money to some extent.

We felt that the Government of the United States was bound in honor to hold this money for the benefit of whoever it might be later decided was entitled to it. So we amended the joint resolution so as to make it specific, and leave no question about it, that the Government of the United States guarantees that it will make up to the people entitled to the money, whether they be American citizens or foreigners, any money that may be lost by this operation I have briefly outlined.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, is it not a fact that under the Alien Property Custodian law the Alien Property Custodian is bound to invest all the moneys resulting from the sale of properties in Federal securities?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. BAYARD. So that he creates a trust fund under the law, and puts a trust upon those securities.

Mr. NORRIS. And the only guaranty that the cestui que trust has is that the Government of the United States will make good if there should be loss, and we do nothing more than that by this measure, except that we make a different kind of an investment.

Mr. BORAH. That is quite a different proposition, however, it seems to me, from investing this money in property which you are going to supply to people who will not be able to pay it back, in all probability, for the next 25 or 30 years. As I look at it, it does not make very much difference to the Government of the United States, if it is going to guarantee this fund, whether you take the property on hand that belongs to the alien property holders, or whether the Government supplies its own money. The Government goes into the business and takes the money out of its Treasury and sends this property over there. I do not know that it is a definite and final conclusion, but the fundamental objection I have to this measure is that this kind of a proposition means that if you are ever going to settle these claims of the alien property holders within any reasonable time at all, the Government of the United States will have to go down into its pocket to settle them, because the people to whom we are selling, if we ever collect it at all, will not pay it for the next 25 or 30 years. So what we are doing is to make it impossible to settle the proposition unless the Government of the United States takes the money out of its Treasury and settles it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me answer one question at a time.

Mr. CURTIS. But my question would apply in the same connection and may save time.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that the Alien Property Custodian is settling these cases now every day?

Mr. OVERMAN. Only up to $10,000.

Mr. KING. And less than $50,000 in the aggregate.

Mr. BORAH. It is very unfortunate that he is not settling them every day.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Alien Property Custodian settles them, he has not any authority of law now to pay the money to anybody. Let me say first to the Senator from Idaho that if it be true that we throw this money away or make bad loans and lose it, we have to pay it, and if we are going to use it, we ought to be bound to pay it. The joint resolution provides that the products can be sold either for cash or on time, and that interest shall not exceed 6 per cent if sold on time, and the time shall not exceed one year. There is an international commission now sitting, provided for by the treaty with Germany, for the purpose of passing on the claims of our citizens and German citizens. They are liquidating them. They have proceeded to quite an extent. As to whether, when they get through, this money shall be used that we have taken from German nationals and Austrian and Hungarian nationals, and what it shall be used for, will require further legislation by Congress, even after that commission is through. One claim is—and as I understand it, the treaty with Germany provides that it can be done—that the money we have in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian shall be held as security to pay damages to American citizens brought about by Germany during the war, from submarine warfare, or, for that matter, any other kind of claim that an American citizen has against the German Government. These funds are held as security for that purpose.

Mr. BAYARD. Under the terms of the treaty?

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it.

Mr. BAYARD. Is the Senator sure of that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think that is right. As I understand it, the treaty provides that Congress shall act on that matter. I may be mistaken about that, but it has not yet been determined. There are two classes of thought in the country, one whether we have an honorable right to hold the money that we have taken from German nationals to pay American citizens' claims against the Government of Germany. But we are holding it ostensibly for that purpose and until it is determined how much are the claims of American citizens against the German Government, nobody knows what the amount will be to pay. Of course, the German Government would be primarily liable, but ostensibly we are holding the money that we have taken from German nationals during the war by virtue of taking their property here, to protect American citizens who have claims allowed against the German Government by the international commission set up by the treaty, as I understand it, between our country and Germany.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not only the Versailles treaty, but the treaty with Germany provides that the fund shall go to pay those debts.

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it will require the passage of an act by Congress before that can be done.

Mr. BORAH. It simply provides that the money or property shall be held.

Mr. NORRIS. To be held until Congress shall determine.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right, but I am talking about the Versailles treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a difference of opinion. Congress will have to decide when they get through with the work of the commission, which will take a little over a year yet to finish its work, and there will be a certain amount of claims allowed against the German Government then due to American citizens. Whether we should take the property of German citizens, which we took during the war, to pay the debts of the German Government to our citizens, is a question that must still be decided by the Congress, as I understand it.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question, as I have to leave the Chamber. Does he propose to dispose of the joint resolution this evening?

Mr. NORRIS. I wish we could. It is in the hands of the Senate. I do not want to crowd anything or make any unnecessary speed in the matter.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to interfere with the work of Congress because we have so little time left, but there is an exceedingly important question involved in the matter, and a question which, I think, goes to the very honor of the Government. Never, until we undertook to do so in this case, have we entered upon a policy in this country that would take the property of a people who came here and invested under American laws and under the American flag, and either squandered it, as we have a large portion of this fund, or used it to pay a portion of our debt. It is a vital proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand it, the question that the Senator from Idaho raises—and I think it is involved in the ideas of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], whose ideas in neither case am I trying to controvert now—is not raised in this situation. I do not believe that the question which he raises is involved in the pending joint resolution.

We do not in the joint resolution touch the question whether we shall use the money of German nationals to pay debts due from their Government to American citizens. That is not touched upon at all.

Mr. BORAH. But we are here by our process of legislation dealing with a trust fund in a way that no trustee ought ever to deal with the fund, in my opinion. It is dealing with it in a way that the very fact that we are taking their money instead of taking ours shows that we are not willing to take the risk with reference to our own money that we are taking with reference to theirs, but we are postponing the day of adjustment for those for whom we hold this fund.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think we are doing either one of those things in the joint resolution. There is no postponement. They are not, as a question of law, using the money any differently from what we are using it now. We propose to invest it in a different kind of securities, and we now have on hand, from investments of this property in the Alien Property Custodian's hands, $27,000,000 of interest that has accrued since the Government of the United States got the property.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment? I want to make that point clear. We have already been using it, and the law under which we took it from those people provides that we shall, and we do it on the theory that the Government is liable for the money in any case as a matter of honor, is liable in any case to people who in the end it is determined own the money. If we were an individual and were going to use it, or the law provided we could use it, we would, of course, require a bond in order that it might not be lost; but nobody pretends and nobody believes that the Government of the United States is not good and that it needs to put up a bond when it handles this money. The joint resolution specifically guarantees all the money to all the claimants at the time they are entitled to it, and if we lose it by our investment we will pay it.

Suppose in the other investments we made that we invested in something and lost the money. Suppose somebody stole it out of the Treasury while we had it there, would anybody claim for a moment that the Government would not make it good when it was finally determined to whom it belonged?

But that question is undisposed of and is unsettled. It will require action by Congress to settle it. We do not anticipate that action, but we do know that before the commission is prepared to report a year will have elapsed, and we thought that with the products of the farm, cotton, wheat, corn, and tobacco, and without a market in this country, and with those people over there suffering for the very things that we have in abundance and which they are anxious to get, that we should carry out this plan. We believe that they are as anxious that we should do it as we are that it ought to be done.

I now yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I want to make this suggestion to the Senator. I do not think he has gone far enough back in tracing his history of the creation of the fund. We took the property, not under the law known as the Alien Property Custodian law but under international law, because we were at war with Germany. The Alien Property Custodian law was framed merely to have some one receive the property when we took it. Under international law we would hold the property, no matter whether the particular terms in the law were set up for the actual holding of it, until peace was declared and then would come the time for a distribution of the property to German nationals or any nationals, whoever they might be. Until that time arrives we handle the fund under international law and could not utilize it for our own nationals or for national operations. That has been the international law for many years.

The operation of the treaty with Germany made since the war has been to hold the distribution of that fund in abeyance, but not to apply it to any one object. The Senator's position undertakes to break two things; in the first place, international law as established and ratified in this particular proposition, and in the next place, the very terms of the act which took the property, and particularly the moneys arising from the sale of property, and invested them directly in a specific thing, and we can not do it by the present law. That could not happen under the terms of the law which was passed in contemplation of the existing situation. In other words, as I see it, the Senator is taking a trust created under international law and by Federal statute and tearing it into little pieces.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be the last man—and I think I speak for all those who have had anything to do with the contemplated legislation—to violate a pledge that I thought our Government owed, even though there was no law for it, to the amount of a penny. As I said a while ago, we are already using this fund for investment. We could not do it under the existing law in the manner proposed in the joint resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. But do we not account for the income?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why we are trying to enact a law to broaden the scope of the investments.

Mr. BAYARD. But do we not account for the income and put it into this fund?

Mr. NORRIS. Surely we do, and we are going to account for all the income here. To show that we have been using this fund, we have not locked it up and kept it idle, and nobody would want us to do so. Those who will own the fund in the end would perhaps criticize us when they get the money, for they would say, "You have had it for 10 years and have not done anything with it. Our money has been idle. There were plenty of investments you could have made without loss. You ought to have done it and given us the benefit of it." We have been investing it and made a profit on the investment now of $27,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. That is for the bnefit of the cestuis que trustent.

Mr. NORRIS. Surely. Of course there will arise another legal question as to who will be entitled to the interest, because it may be a question as to whether the Government of the United States is liable for interest. In my judgment every penny of profit that we make out of this money, either under existing law or under the pending joint resolution, must in honor go to those whose money and property we have taken. We must give them every cent of it, and must not in any way profit a single penny. There is no theory of making any profit in this contemplated legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I want to ask the Senator if he can state approximately the total amount of the fund now?

Mr. NORRIS. The amount is stated in the hearings, but I have forgotten exactly what it is.

Mr. DIAL. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that it is about $180,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I am told that it is about $189,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought it was $400,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Some of the smaller funds have been returned.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the Senator proposes to use $150,000,000 of the $180,000,000?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; we do not propose to take it all.

Mr. FLETCHER. I must dissent from the idea that this fund should not be used as a protection to American claimants. For instance, take the case of an American citizen who owned a vessel which he sent to Germany to procure a cargo of potash. The potash was loaded onto the vessel in Bremen before we became involved in the war, but the German Government seized the vessel and cargo and appropriated it. That claim ought to be paid by somebody—not by an insolvent, bankrupt concern—and if the United States Government has the money in its possession it ought to protect its citizens in a case of that kind.

With reference to the source of this money, take the case where the Kaiser himself and the Crown Prince owned real property, saw mills, and similar property, which was sold and constitutes a part of this fund.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall want to call the Senator's attention to that in due time when the question comes up properly before the Senate for decision. I expect to participate in the debate on it, but I should dislike to see the debate on this joint resolution go off on that question, because it is not involved in this proposed legislation. The particular joint resolution that we have now before us does not pretend to settle that question. The Senator has given his views on one side of the question, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who stands by his side, is very emphatic in his belief on the opposite side. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is with the Senator from Utah, but I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the question is not settled in this proposed legislation; there is no attempt to settle it; and the joint resolution, if passed, would not hinder its settlement. It may be made at any time; no, not any time; I ought not to say that, because the commission passing on these matters will take a year yet before they will get through. The only question now involved is whether or not the Government of the United States shall handle this money so as to help both its citizens and the citizens of Germany and Hungary and Austria. Most of it, of course, as we know, will go to Germany.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Before we leave the point which was suggested by way of illustration by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I wish to make one observation, with the Senator's pardon, in reply. The Senator from Florida indicated that because the German Government had seized a boat containing potash which belonged to American citizens and had confiscated it, therefore the Government of the United States ought to seize the property of German nationals invested in the United States under the sacred guaranties of treaty, to say nothing of international law, and apply the property of German nationals invested here under the protection of a treaty to the liquidation of claims of American nationals against the German Government.

I suggest to the able Senator from Florida that Mexicans have killed 800 Americans during the past few years; they have destroyed the property of American citizens to the extent of more than $300,000,000. There are hundreds of Mexican citizens living in the United States—many of them in California, many of them in New Mexico, many of them in Texas. They have valuable property. Shall our Government lay its hands upon the property of Mexican nationals who have invested in the United States?

Mr. BROUSSARD. But we are not at war with them.

Mr. KING. I will answer that suggestion in a moment. Shall our Government lay its hands upon the property of those Mexican nationals for the purpose of liquidating the claims that American nationals may have against the Mexican Government? Such a doctrine is intolerable, Mr. President. Even in the Dark Ages they would scarcely have proceeded so far.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] has suggested that we are not at war with Mexico. However, I shall pretermit any argument upon that point, because I am now trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. FLETCHER. The cases are not parallel at all. The people who went down to Mexico took their chances in Mexico; but here there is a different situation. When the Kaiser of Germany himself and the crown prince own property in the United States as a part of this fund, the Senator can not tell me that it is not ethical and proper that all legitimate claims of citizens of the United States should be protected by it.

Mr. KING. Any property of the German Government, of course, may be taken; I have no objection to that; but I am speaking about German nationals, and the Senator from Florida certainly understood that I referred to them.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I understand the Senator's position clearly; but, Mr. President, I want to repeat that I hope we shall not enter into a debate on that question. I myself have decided opinions upon it, but it is not involved in this proposed legislation. We shall, however, have to settle that; the Senate has got to thrash out that question.

Let me say, Mr. President, that when this proposal was first suggested to me I turned it down flat, because I said, "Why, this is a sacred fund; we can not do it." When I commenced to look into it, and we commenced to have hearings and commenced to consult with the officials of the Government and the Alien Property Custodian, I came to the conclusion, as did the entire committee, that there is not involved any new principle but merely a different use of the money. We had before us attorneys and persons having claims against the German Government amounting to many millions of dollars; American citizens whose property had been destroyed, whose ships had been lost or cargoes sunk. They were all frightened. Word got out in some way or other that we were going to take this money, which they looked upon as the Senator from Florida does. They regarded this fund as belonging to them, to guarantee the damages which they may establish before the commission as to their losses occasioned by the German Government, and they were all frightened, as they thought we were going to take it away; but when we gave those people to understand that no measure would come out of the committee that did not afford a guaranty by the Government of the United States against any loss that might be sustained, and the payment of that loss to whomsoever might be found later to be entitled to it, their objections vanished like the wind.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I inquire of the Senator what security is provided for these loans or advances?

Mr. NORRIS. The corporation proposed to be set up can take any security that it deems sufficient. It is given powers in that respect similar to those of the War Finance Corporation, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] suggests. We expect that the corporation will sell these products, but not always, of course, on time.

If the Senator will pardon me, I will refer for just a moment to cotton, in which he is so deeply interested and upon which he has so much information. We were informed that in Germany there was a provision of law by which a lien attached to property purchased that would follow the property through to its manufactured stage. The joint resolution provides that, if there is such a law and the product is sold on time, as one of the methods of security, when cotton is shipped to Germany and made into cloth the corporation would have a lien on the cloth itself after it was manufactured. We have not tried to hamper the corporation. We want to give it the same freedom that an individual would have. We have imposed no limitation except that the time shall not be more than a year, and that the interest shall not exceed 6 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. My understanding, from the discussion of this question before the committee, was that it was not a question of settling any of the disputed points that were raised by the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Florida.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH. But it was simply proposed to use as an investment the fund that we have and that was likely to remain in our hands and secure that without any reference to what ultimate disposition our Government might make of it in the settlement with the other nations; that we would simply use it in the meantime, while the adjudication was going on, for the purposes set forth in the joint resolution.

I notice that the Senator from Utah takes one side of the question as to whether the acts of the Government of Germany should affect the property of German nationals in this country. That question does not enter into the measure that is before us at all. The questions involved are not likely to be settled within a given time, and within that given time we propose to use the money for the best interests of this country and the other countries. That is my understanding of the entire measure. It constitutes no attempt to settle or to prejudice any question that may arise under the final adjudication of the controversy.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from South Carolina suggested the use of the fund not for German nationals but for American nationals. What right have American nationals to this trust fund? It has been created purely for German nationals.

Mr. SMITH. But, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me to answer that question, we have the fund here, and if we can use it as an investment and incidentally help our nationals why should we stay our hands in the meantime? If we thereby can render more service to those who ultimately will get the money, what objection can the Senator have to that?

Mr. BAYARD. Frankly, I have objection because I never understood it to be proper that a trustee should invest his ward's money in his own affairs, and that is what we would be doing in this instance.

Mr. SMITH. If the trustee in investing this money incidentally can help himself without any infringement of the law and thereby greatly enhance the funds he holds for the cestui qui trust, I think he would be justified in doing it.

Mr. BAYARD. Does not the Senator consider—he stated a moment ago—that this fund was created under international law to start with, but was segregated under a Federal statute?

Mr. SMITH. Under the law we invested it.

Mr. BAYARD. For whose benefit? Not for the benefit of ourselves.

Mr. SMITH. Suppose we invested it for the benefit of Germany and we found a method by which we could more advantageously use the fund for Germany and incidentally help ourselves; I should like to know what valid objection the Senator could have to that.

Mr. BAYARD. I think that the incidental purpose is the object of the entire proposal.

Mr. SMITH. That is an inference the Senator may draw.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think it is an inference. I think it is a fact.

Mr. SMITH. But the parties in interest were the ones who suggested the use of the money in this way.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before I yield further I wish to say just a word in regard to what the Senator from Delaware has said in his colloquy with the Senator from South Carolina. I do not know whether the Senator from Delaware understood it, but I have tried to state before that the money that will be taken from this fund, if this joint resolution shall be passed, will be used for the purpose of buying products of this country and selling them to the nationals of the country whose property goes to make up the Alien Property Custodian's fund.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that thoroughly, but that does not cast any cloud over my vision when I see the real purpose of it, which is to buy products of this country to help people out who have no other market for them and to utilize this fund to establish a trade with Germany. The point I have in mind is that it is not, as I see it, a proper use for trust funds, and I conceive these to be pure trust funds.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case of a trustee who had money belonging to a ward, for instance, he would not have any authority to use it for such a purpose unless he secured express authority from the court that had control of it. We can not see how anybody having claims against Germany, or any German nationals whose property we have taken and converted into this fund, can complain, because the only security any of those people have is the Government of the United States, and this measure does not take away that security. They do not object, as far as I know. Neither the German nationals in the German part of it object to this measure, nor do those who have claims against the German Government, and who expect to get their pay out of this fund, object to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. LODGE. What I desire to ask the Senator has no reference to the merits of the claim at all, but is simply as to the fund.

The fund, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has pointed out, is a trust fund. It is recognized in the treaty of Versailles, and it is in our hands as trustees. Part of it, I suppose, will be returned to the Germans from whom it was taken in time of war. The bulk of it is mortgaged, we may say, so far as necessary, to pay American pre-war claims for damages; and all the fund is, therefore, covered.

We can take this money out of the Treasury, of course, and I think that is what we ought to do if we are going to pass the joint resolution; but it does not seem to me that we ought to take a trust fund which is assigned to certain uses; and we shall be liable for that fund, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. LODGE. Then why take it? It is going to be the obligation of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Because we do not increase our liability, and, as I said awhile ago, we are already doing it with the same fund, and we have already made $27,000,000 profit on our use of this fund.

Mr. BAYARD. That is very true; but we are utilizing that and holding it and rolling it over for the benefit of the German nationals from whom we took it.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and we will get interest on this. The only difference is that it will be a larger rate of interest.

Mr. BAYARD. But we are not abusing our trust in so doing, and the point made by the Senator from Massachusetts a moment ago is that all the way through this thing is a trust fund. That is what we can not get away from.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit it; yes.

Mr. BAYARD. All right. Now, the minute we depart from that, the point I am trying to make to the Senator from Nebraska is this: That being a trust fund, and we happening to hold it, is no excuse to us, because we happen to hold it, for using it for other purposes than the trust.

Mr. KING. That is a conversion.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that. We are liable for it. If we lose it, we shall have to make it good.

Mr. BAYARD. But the mere fact that we have it should not make us use it.

Mr. NORRIS. We invest it here in Treasury certificates. We invest it in other kinds of securities, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. Chiefly Government securities, absolutely safe.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose we invest it here, and suppose somebody steals it. We are liable for it. It is in our hands as a trust fund, and we must make it good; but the difference here is between investing it in Treasury certificates and investing it in a security that this corporation shall take from the people who buy the products. That is the difference.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has alluded several times to the fact that we have obtained $27,000,000 of interest as a result of investment of this trust fund. The implication from his remarks was that we were doing a favor to the German nationals whose property we had sequestrated and converted. The Senator remembers that much of that property was highly productive——

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I know that.

Mr. KING. And that it was sold under the hammer at disadvantageous prices——

Mr. NORRIS. I admit all that.

Mr. KING. And that German nationals sustained enormous losses by reason of our conversion.

Mr. NORRIS. I believe all that is true. I am not contradicting that at all.

Mr. KING. So we are doing them no service, because we are getting 4 per cent interest upon property which perhaps would have returned them 10 or 12 per cent or more, because much of it was invested in profitable business enterprises in the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not claiming that if we had not taken the property they would not have made more money out of it than we have made. The Senator is making an argument here that applies to the beginning of this thing, when we took the property. I am not going into that question. That has two sides. That is not interfered with by this legislation; but if we had taken that property and never invested a dollar of it the amount in the hands of the custodian to-day would have been $27,000,000 less than he has; so that it is a favor to the people who are going to get this money, whoever they may be, that they are going to get more than we took of them. That may not compensate them for the loss sustained by our taking, which for the purpose of this measure we may admit was wrongful in many cases.

Mr. BAYARD. Then, following out the Senator's argument, we arrive at this conclusion: That a trustee who lets trust funds lie idle is an ordinary trustee and can do nothing more than administer the terms of the trust as originally created; but the trustee who would advance his ward's interests by investing the money and getting a high rate of interest and turning over the income, and so forth, then becomes a privileged person and can do what he pleases with the trust funds, as long as he guarantees to make good in the event of failure or loss of the trust funds.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes; I say we are simply changing the form of the investment as far as the property involved here is concerned. The Senator from Utah, however, has intimated that because we have made $27,000,000 on this fund that was not to our credit. However much there may be to our discredit in taking it—I am not saying that there is anything; but however that may be, for the sake of the argument admit it—we have done some good to the people whose money we hold, whether we get it honorably or otherwise, by increasing it $27,000,000.

If we had invested it and lost it, we would have had to sustain the loss. We will have to do that here. There is only a difference in the kind of security, whether you invest the trust fund in a note secured by a mortgage on cotton or whether you invest it in a bond secured by a municipality.

Mr. BAYARD. Or secured by the credit of the United States of America, which is a very different thing.

Mr. NORRIS. In no case do we get away from the credit of the United States of America.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I just want to call the Senator's attention to this, if he will allow me:

This is admittedly a trust fund. It is generally understood that the first duty of a trustee is to invest in very safe securities. If I am rightly informed about this fund, it is invested in the safest possible securities, chiefly in Treasury certificates or United States bonds. We are taking it out of that type of investment and putting it into a more or less speculative investment.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not call it speculative, but I admit, I will say to the Senator——

Mr. LODGE. It is an active business.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that we are going to put it into a kind of investment that is not as good as the kind of investment it has been in before. I admit that; but this is what I want to make plain, and what it seemed to me the Senator from Delaware had not gotten right in his mind:

The difference in the kind of investment is only a difference in the degree of investment. The principle is just the same in one case as in the other. If the trustee was not financially able to make good in case he lost, then the person who would ultimately be entitled to this money ought to be heard to object; but nobody contends that.

Mr. BAYARD. Then may I answer that proposition of the Senator by repeating the same reply I made to the Senator from South Carolina a moment ago, and that is this: You can not deny that you have in mind a benefit for persons other than the beneficiaries of this trust.

Mr. SMITH. Only incidentally.

Mr. BAYARD. In other words, you have in mind the benefit of the people in this country who will sell their goods to the German nationals and get their just proportion of this trust fund after it is released for this purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. We would not be here with this joint resolution if we did not think that without injuring anybody and without the violation of any sacred trust we could, by a different use of this money, help our people and the German people as well. That is the object of this proposed legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the nationals of the very countries to whom we ultimately will have to pay this money are asking for the very commodities that we propose to send. They suggested that this fund that was lying idle might be used for the purpose of relieving their wants, with the proper safeguards thrown around it; and it was primarily for the benefit of the very nations to whom we will ultimately have to make this payment that this legislation was suggested. I believe it was primarily suggested—my colleague may know more particularly than I do—by a representative of one of the countries to whom this payment will have ultimately to be made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I will yield the floor now, unless there are some other questions that Senators desire to ask.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was just going to suggest that the passage of this joint resolution will serve a double purpose, as my colleague [Mr. SMITH] says. It will not only take care of the interest on this money but it will serve the very people who claim the property by giving them employment. In fact, it will serve a third purpose. It will aid the people of the United States to get rid of a surplus which is somewhat of a glut on the market.

I did not hear the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] when he started his speech. I do not know whether or not he explained to the Senate that a commission would be appointed, as provided for in the joint resolution, composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Alien Property Custodian, and three others, to be appointed by the President.

The Senator from Nebraska spoke of the safety of the use of this fund. We happen to know of an organization that has been operating in a manner similar to that provided in the joint resolution. This organization has used $50,000,000 worth of cotton in Germany, and I am informed that it has not lost one cent.

The bill provides that there shall not be excessive loans; that only a very small proportion of the whole amount shall be loaned to one individual or one concern. It is protected so that there can not be much loss in case there is any loss at all.

The Senator from Nebraska has shown us that we can follow the raw agricultural product through the processes of manufacture; and, of course, the product will be worth much more when it is in the finished stage than it was in the raw stage.

Those people over there—the Germans and some of these other people—have the mills; they have the machinery; they have the labor. The labor is seeking employment, and by this process we will put them to work and enable them to be independent people, and sell their labor in this manner. We could not accomplish a better purpose, Mr. President.

We have pending in the Senate now a joint resolution to donate $10,000,000 to the women and children of Germany. It has passed the House, so it must have some friends in this country. I do not think that is a proper thing to do; but when we can lend assistance to the people of the world and let them help themselves by using their labor and their idle machinery and the facilities that they have, we shall be accomplishing a good purpose.

We were told here the other day by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that when this $10,000,000 joint resolution was being considered by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate that committee was appealed to by representatives of three other nations for donations. I submit that that is a wrong principle to set up in the United States.

Mr. President, no man in the Senate is more opposed than I am to the Government going into business and taking undue risks; but we have been talking here, not only during this session but during former sessions, about trying to do something to help agriculture in this country, trying to do something to open up the markets of the world, whereby we can sell our surplus products and thereby not only put the people of other countries to work but aid and encourage the people of this country to go to work and produce a surplus.

In my section of the country there is some surplus cotton carried over from year to year. That depresses the price of the next crop. While I do not believe there is any great quantity on hand at this time, yet newspapers will send out false reports—I do not mean they intentionally do so—the figures will be garbled, and we can not get a correct statement even from the Department of Commerce. The figures are always disputed, they are padded, the crop is misrepresented, and it is claimed that we carry a greater crop of cotton than is really in existence. So what I am trying to do now is to get rid of any surplus, if surplus there be, of the past crop, so that we may start in new with the next crop and let the law of supply and demand function, and let our people get a fair price for what they produce, so that the mills of the world can operate and so that the employees of the mills can continue to find employment and not be turned out on the streets.

The dry-goods trade all over the world is demoralized by reason of the wild fluctuation in cotton, and if we can get rid of the surplus cotton that will be corrected in a great measure. I see the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] here. I believe some of the mills in his State are shut down and labor is thrown out of employment. To a great extent that is brought about by the buyers being misinformed as to the cost of production, and they are failing to buy at present. So if we can get rid of our surplus cotton in this country before the next crop comes in, I think we will have done a great thing to stabilize the price of cotton and the price of dry goods, and we will put the people to work. We want to encourage the people to be an independent people and not have to come to Congress or to go anywhere else and ask for help.

That is the object of this measure. There is nothing revolutionary about it. We create a trust. Nobody wants to put the funds beyond the reach of the proper claimants at the proper time. We do not undertake to discuss that. We do not, as the Senator from Nebraska has well said, undertake to change it at all. But we are using the funds for a triple purpose, and there is nothing immoral about it. These people come and beg for it. They send delegation after delegation who say they want this done. Consider even the tobacco interests. We are told that there are some $8,000,000 of one tobacco concern impounded in this fund, and they to-day want to buy $4,000,000 worth of tobacco. At this very hour the South has a committee on the other side of the ocean trying to sell the surplus of the last few years of the tobacco crop, as my colleague well knows.

All we are trying to do is to put people to work, and of course we will help to sell and ship something out of this country, and there is nothing immoral or wrong in that. It is to be encouraged. The people owning the mills over there have been here trying to get cotton and wheat. They say that if they could have gotten the quantity of wheat needed during the last 12 months they would have used 50,000,000 more bushels of wheat from the United States.

The wheat people in the last few months have been trying to get Congress to go into the pension business, to lend money directly to the farmers of the Northwest in order that they might diversify, and they have come here asking Congress to donate. We donated $20,000,000 to Russia, and now we are asked to donate $10,000,000 to Germany, and to keep on donating the taxpayers' money. Certainly we have no constitutional right to take that kind of a loss.

Therefore I see nothing wrong about this. I am, I will not say conservative, because I believe that is a term used now to discredit a man, but I am a conservative progressive, I hope. I try to be safe with money and try to be sound in work, and I want to let every man help himself.

Under this measure no loan can extend over the period of a year. There will be a revolving fund. It has been tried by some of my neighbors in South Carolina. My colleague knows there was a concern in Anderson which shipped cotton right out of my county and the adjoining county to Czechoslovakia, I believe it was, where it was converted into goods and sold.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DIAL. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. There are two matters involved in the joint resolution. One is the general policy of the United States making large appropriations to help agriculture. The other question is the simple one of taking the money from a trust fund. If it is to be taken at all, it ought to be taken squarely out of the Treasury of the United States and we should not take it from a fund which is distinctly, by law, a trust fund. It may be made to appear that we are not spending the money, but we are spending the money, no doubt for a good purpose. However, let it be our money that we take without any question of a trust fund. If we go into spending the trust fund, then any losses which come, of course, we are responsible for, and nobody can tell what the loss may be, because it is all a speculation, every bit of it.

Mr. DIAL. The Senator and I do not differ very much except in this: I do not know who the owners of the fund are; that is undecided, as a matter of law, but the parties from whom it was taken want this very thing done. It would encourage them, open up their trade with the United States, and it would encourage them to go to work, thinking they were using their own money, making interest on their own money, and it would establish a good feeling.

Mr. LODGE. That is a question of the general policy. We can get the money out of the Treasury of the United States. My objection is to taking trust money. There are two classes of people for whom this trust is held. It is not held primarily for Germans. It is held as a security that Americans who have claims will have those claims satisfied by Germany. To me the first point here is the question of taking the money from a trust fund. The other is the question of general policy.

Mr. DIAL. It is not taking a trust fund. It is merely using it. I believe in safety in investments, and correctness in legal business, and all those things. But you can not apply old rules to conditions which obtain to-day.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we have any right to take money from this trust fund to speculate with it.

Mr. DIAL. No——

Mr. LODGE. It is pure speculation. It may turn out very well, or it may turn out very ill; we can not tell.

Mr. DIAL. It would be commerce; it would not be speculation. There is more or less risk, I admit.

Mr. LODGE. I have heard of speculation in connection with commerce.

Mr. DIAL. There would be more or less risk, of course.

Mr. LODGE. Of course there is risk. The custodian of that fund would never dare, as a trustee, to invest money in that way.

Mr. SMITH. As my colleague has said, I do not think it would assume the nature of a speculation, as the Senator from Massachusetts indicates.

Mr. LODGE. All commerce is more or less speculation.

Mr. SMITH. I know, but this is purely a question of legitimate, orderly commerce, which has been blocked by lack of funds to carry it on, and here are funds that are static, or laying idle, in a way, which neither belong to us nor belong definitely and distinctly to any particular individual, but which ultimately will belong to some one for whom we are holding the fund in trust, looking toward the settlement of the question as to just where it should be paid. Pending that settlement, if we could find a legitimate, safe, conservative method by which we could meet the requests of those who have the primary claim on it, as well as relieve a situation here——

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the Germans have no primary claim. The primary claim is ours, of those who are the subjects of the trust, the beneficiaries.

Mr. SMITH. I realize that; but we are investing the money now.

Mr. LODGE. We are turning it into business. I heard one of the greatest and most successful mill owners in Massachusetts once say that the question of whether a mill succeeded or not was dependent on whether the cotton was bought well three years in five; that is, the man who succeeded in buying his cotton well and judging his market well three years in five would make a mill successful. There is an element of speculation, of course, in every business. It is not in cotton alone.

Mr. SMITH. On the other hand, it is claimed now that the lack of prosperity is not due to the manner in which the cotton has been bought, but to the manner in which the purchasing market is conducting itself.

Mr. LODGE. I did not mean to go off into that at all. It was only an illustration of the fact that it is more or less a speculative thing, as all commerce must be. I shall be glad to help, but if we are to take the money I do want to take it squarely from the Treasury of the United States and not meddle with a trust fund.

Mr. SMITH. I want to point out to the Senator that no doubt this money has been invested in United States bonds.

Mr. LODGE. Almost all of it.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator knows that even our bonds have fluctuated. They went from 85 to par.

Mr. LODGE. Everything is comparative; and investment in United States bonds is not a speculative investment compared with investment in cotton or sugar or any other commodity.

Mr. SMITH. Not to the same degree; but there is the principle of speculation even in that.

Mr. LODGE. United States bonds, the Senator knows, are taken by trustees as the utmost of safety they can obtain in an untrustworthy world.

Mr. SMITH. What I was trying to show was that it was not speculation in the ordinarily offensive sense in which we use the word "speculation." It is investment in the ordinary, legitimate lines of commerce with whatever speculation is incident thereto.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the junior Senator from South Carolina about what amount of money would be taken out of the Alien Property Custodian's hands for this purpose in the way of cash?

Mr. DIAL. That would depend on the demand for the use of it.

Mr. BAYARD. What amount is estimated?

Mr. DIAL. We authorize $150,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. I want to make a suggestion to the Senator on that basis. We must assume, then, that the custodian has at least $150,000,000 of United States securities, bonds——

Mr. DIAL. Or money.

Mr. BAYARD. Which he has presumably bought at par. If we force him to sell those for the purpose of putting the money into this operation, the price will be forced down, and before he gets through he will sell below the price he paid for them, and to that extent his trust funds will be diminished. They are still trust funds, and that operation will be punitive to that extent, or, by the very law you are endeavoring to have enacted, you penalize these people with the beneficiaries.

Mr. DIAL. I do not think so. A great deal of this business could be handled on credit, and the money would soon begin to come back. It would be a revolving fund.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me. It is not expected that all this money is to be gotten at once. It will be used gradually, so there will be no throwing of a lot of securities on the market. For instance, the Alien Property Custodian has somewhere in the neighborhood of seven or eight or ten million dollars in actual cash doing nothing.

Mr. BAYARD. That may not be to the credit of these particular individuals, or their particular trusts, so it could not be utilized for this purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator indicated, I thought, in his question to the Senator from South Carolina, that if this money were invested in United States bonds, or something of that kind, and they were put on the market, it would drive the price down. If we did that all at once, I think perhaps it would have that effect.

Mr. BAYARD. Suppose he put out only $10,000,000, and it happened that the price of the bonds was 98, or 99, or 99 and a fraction; even so, he would diminish the trust fund to that extent.

Mr. NORRIS. He would not do anything of that kind unless he was perfectly reckless. He would not be called upon to do anything of that kind. There is no question but that he can sell the United States bonds he now has above what he paid for them, and make a profit on them, because they have been going up all the time.

Mr. BAYARD. Were all of the custodian's purchases made at prices below par?

Mr. NORRIS. Not that I know of, and I can not say how much of his money is invested in Liberty bonds. I can not tell the Senator how many Liberty bonds are in his possession, but it is safe to say, from general knowledge of the Liberty bond market, that the prices have been going up. Liberty bonds are above par right now. None of them are below par.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish that were true. Only one or two issues, I think, are above par or better at the present moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I have been looking in the paper every day—I do not think I looked to-day—and I know one that I looked at yesterday was up to 102.

Mr. BAYARD. Not of the war-loan issues.

Mr. NORRIS. Of the issues that were to take up some of the war issues.

Mr. BAYARD. The refunding issues.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Those funds are invested in Liberty bonds, I take it, and have been so invested prior to the present time, of course some of them quite a while before, and it is very safe to say that if they were sold now he would make quite a profit on the transaction.

Mr. BAYARD. That is assuming a different proposition, but when the property was converted into cash and invested by the custodian, it was invested at the then market price of bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. But, as a matter of fact, most of that property was converted during the war, and when the bond issues came out they were all sold at par, and so I assume the investment was made at par.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right.

Mr. BAYARD. It is just as good an assumption as the Senator's, because I am taking the war-time operation. When the Government officials invested in those issues they paid par.

Mr. NORRIS. If they bought the bonds directly from the Government, of course they paid par, but there has never been a time, from the time of the issuing of the bonds or soon after, except perhaps on those 3½'s that were nontaxable for every purpose, when they have not been below par, and they have been gradually and slowly coming up. It is only recently that they have reached par, and I assume he has made no investments recently, although I may be wrong about it.

Mr. BAYARD. He invests the interest that the Senator is speaking about.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; perhaps the interest.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Nebraska has no objection, I would like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I am ready whenever he is to go into executive session.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold the motion for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

ROBERT J. KIRK

Mr. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 3009) for the relief of Robert J. Kirk. It involves a small claim by an appointee of our court who was appointed as referee in a case by the judge, and on account of having been a trial justice for some reason they held up the claim. The judge himself says that the claim ought to have been paid as the court ordered him to do the work, and the Attorney General says so. It only amounts to $332.50.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert J. Kirk, of Florence, S. C., the sum of $332.50 for service as United States commissioner for the Eastern District of South Carolina for the period beginning July 1, 1919, to November 15, 1919.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO SENATOR FRANK L. GREENE

Mr. FESS from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 230, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 20th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Hon. FRANK L. GREENE, a Senator from the State of Vermont, the sum of $7,500, as reimbursement for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him in the treatment and care of injuries resulting from an accidental bullet wound received while walking on the street in the city of Washington, D. C., February 15, 1924.

SALE OF REAL PROPERTY NOT NEEDED FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

Mr. WADSWORTH. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, House bill 9124, authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes, and I submit a report (No. 607) thereon. I intend to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration if permission is given to receive it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the receipt of the report? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs were, on page 2, after line 13, to insert: "North Carolina: Fort Caswell Military Reservation, near Southport on the Atlantic coast; less 57 acres, more or less, required by the Treasury Department for Coast Guard purposes"; and on page 2, after line 16, to insert: "Florida: Gasparilla Military Reservation, entrance to Charlotte Bay: Provided, That the appraisal and sale of this reservation shall cover only the right, title, and interest of the United States in the lands and public improvements thereon, without in any way altering or modifying any rights heretofore created therein," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell or cause to be sold, either in whole or in two or more parts as he may deem best for the interests of the United States, the several tracts or parcels of real property hereinafter designated, or any interest therein or appurtenant thereto, which said tracts or parcels are no longer needed for military purposes, and to execute and deliver in the name of the United States and in its behalf any and all contracts, conveyances, or other instruments necessary to effectuate such sale.

FIRST CORPS AREA

Maine: Narrows Island Reservation, Boothbay, Lincoln County.

Massachusetts: Fort Phoenix, near Fair Haven, Bristol County; Springfield Armory, two small tracts.

Rhode Island: Fort Greene, Newport.

SECOND CORPS AREA

New York: Fort Montgomery, Rouses Point, Clinton County; Sag Harbor Reservation, Sag Harbor, Long Island, Suffolk County.

North Carolina: Fort Caswell Military Reservation, near Southport on the Atlantic coast; less 57 acres, more or less, required by the Treasury Department for Coast Guard purposes.

FOURTH CORPS AREA

South Carolina: Bay Point Reservation on Phillips Island, Beaufort County; Hilton Head Reservation at south entrance to Port Royal Sound, Beaufort County.

Florida: Gasparilla Military Reservation, entrance to Charlotte Bay: Provided, That the appraisal and sale of this reservation shall cover only the right, title, and interest of the United States in the lands and public improvements thereon, without in any way altering or modifying any rights heretofore created therein.

Alabama: Fort Gaines, on east end of Dauphin Island, Mobile County.

Tennessee: Park Field, Millington.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by appropriate quitclaim deed to nine trustees and their successors to be selected by the Chamber of Commerce of Columbia, S. C., and known as "Trustees of Columbia cantonment lands," approximately 1,192 acres of land within the United States Military Reservation at Camp Jackson, S. C., to wit:

The following two tracts of land:

Tract No. 1: Beginning at a stone corner of the Powell, Hampton, and United States Government lands, thence along the Hampton lands, north 61° 45′ west 3,024 feet to a stone; thence north 47° 5′ west 1,956 feet to a stone; thence north 61° 40′ west 740 feet to a stone; thence north 27° 20′ east across Government lands 2,000 feet to a stone; thence south 87° 40′ east 385 feet to a stone; near southeast corner of Camp Jackson incinerator; thence north 6° 20′ east 975.5 feet to a stone; thence north 42° 20′ east 815 feet to a stone; thence north 82° 20′ east 828 feet to a stone; thence north 61° 35′ east 1,430 feet to a stone at intersection of old roads; thence south 72° 40′ east 1,355 feet to a stone; thence south 85° 40′ east 2,798.5 feet to a stone; thence south 27° 50′ west 2,654 feet to a stone; corner of Powell's lands, thence along Powell's lands south 79° 35′ west 1,290 feet to a stone; thence south 11° 40′ west 4,102 feet to a stone, point of beginning, containing in all 705.12 acres.

Tract No. 2: Beginning at a stone on the eastern side of the Camden public road near the 6-mile post; thence along Camden public road south 89° 45′ west 800 feet to a stone; thence along the Camden public road south 87° 35′ west 985 feet to a stone; thence along the Camden public road south 78° 45′ west 184 feet to a stone; thence south 12° 50′ east 985 feet to a stone; thence north 85° 45′ east 1,240 feet to a stone; thence south 63° 5′ east 1,984 feet to a stone 6 feet from paved road; thence in an easterly and northerly direction 922 feet along paved road to a stone 6 feet from paving; thence south 82° 20′ east 1,050 feet to a stone; thence north 73° 50′ east 1,325 feet to a stone; thence north 8° 20′ east 270 feet to a stone; thence south 86° east 408 feet to a stone; thence south 7° 30′ west 217 feet to a stone; thence south 64° 25′ west 570 feet to a stone; thence south 53° 25′ west 1,460 feet to a stone; thence south 50° 25′ east 323 feet to a stone; thence north 71° 55′ east 1,300 feet to a stone; thence north 52° 15′ east 2,131 feet to a stone on the north side of the Ancrum Ferry Road; thence north 3° 40′ east 4,315 feet to a stone on the eastern side of the Camden public road; thence along said Camden public road south 38° 30′ west 211 feet to a stone; thence south 36° 55′ west 1,039 feet to a stone; thence south 55° 50′ west 620 feet to a stone near the 7-mile post; thence south 87° 55′ west 779 feet to a stone; thence south 69° 40′ west 498 feet to a stone; thence south 55° 55′ west 1,330 feet to a stone on the southerly side of the Ancrum Ferry Road; thence south 75° 20′ west 811 feet to a stone near branch; thence south 70° 15′ west 1,265 feet to a stone; thence south 68° 25′ west 890 feet to a stone near branch; thence north 80° 20′ west 166 feet to a stone, the point of beginning, containing in all 486.88 acres; the land so conveyed being approximately equal in area to the lands donated to the United States by the said chamber of commerce as a part of the site on the said reservation by deeds executed by J. Erwin Belser, trustee, dated July 20, 1917, and November 16, 1917: Provided, That prior to such conveyance by the Secretary of War there shall be conveyed to the United States by appropriate deed all the rights of way and other rights reserved in the aforementioned deeds of donation to the United States to the extent that the Secretary of War may require.

That the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized, in his discretion, to grant by revocable license to the said trustees, their successors or assigns, subject to such conditions and restrictions as he may deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States, and to such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe, the right to use, in common with the United States, the existing roadways and railway lines of the United States, steam or electric, now located upon and extending over and across the reservation, and also the right to occupy and use such other lands within the said reservation as he may designate for the construction and operation thereon of steam or electric railway lines to extend to the lands to be conveyed to the said trustees as hereinabove described, the United States to have the right to use without charge any railway lines or tracks so constructed on the reservation: Provided, That the said existing roadways and railway lines on the reservation so occupied and used and the railway lines so constructed and operated thereon shall be maintained and kept in a good state of repair, to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, at the sole expense of the said trustees, their successors or assigns.

That the said trustees shall hold, use, manage, lease, sell, and convey, or otherwise dispose of said lands, or any portion thereof, and of the proceeds and revenues of the same, for one or more of the following purposes as they may deem best, to wit: Agricultural, industrial, charitable, and educational purposes: Provided, however, That no sale or conveyance shall be made by the said trustees of the lands conveyed by the Secretary of War under this act until the Secretary of War shall have given his consent in each instance to such sale or conveyance.

That a majority of the said trustees shall constitute a quorum competent to transact business, and that the said trustees shall make such by-laws, rules, and regulations for their own government and for the management and control of the said property and the proceeds thereof as they may deem necessary and proper, and that in the event of any vacancy occurring among the said trustees by death, resignation, removal of residence from Richland County, S. C., or other cause, such vacancy shall be filled from residents of Richland County by selection by a majority of the remaining trustees, such selection to be approved by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Columbia, S. C., or its successors; and if there be no successors, then such selection shall be approved by a majority vote of a committee composed of the president of the University of South Carolina, the mayor of the city of Columbia, the senator in the General Assembly of South Carolina from Richland County, the probate judge of Richland County, and the resident judge of the judicial circuit of South Carolina embracing Richland County, or their respective successors.

That there is hereby granted to the State of North Carolina, without cost to the State, for public uses, all lands belonging to Fort Macon Military Reservation and now the property of the United States, together with all the improvements thereon; and that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey to the said State all right, title, and interest of the United States in said lands and improvements, to be held and used by said State for public purposes: Provided, That the following-described land is reserved and granted to the Treasury Department for Coast Guard purposes: Beginning at a concrete monument at the southwest corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence north 299.5 feet to a concrete monument at the northwest corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence north 9° 58′ west 1,320 feet, more or less, to Bogue Sound; thence eastwardly about 600 feet along Bogue Sound; thence south 1,340 feet, more or less, to a concrete monument at the northeast corner of the present Coast Guard property, which said monument bears north 134 feet from the center of the top of curb of the old hospital well, also it bears north 84° 22′ 30″ west 145 feet from the old gun pivot at the northwest corner of the outside wall of old Fort Macon; thence south 299.5 feet to a concrete monument at the southeast corner of the present Coast Guard property; thence south 1,400 feet, more or less, to the Atlantic Ocean; thence westwardly about 200 feet along said Atlantic Ocean; thence north 1,400 feet, more or less, to the south line of the present Coast Guard property; thence west 147.5 feet to the place of beginning, containing 22.6 acres, more or less: Provided further, That the Government at all times has the right and privilege of preserving, erecting, and maintaining on said reservation such buildings as Coast Guard stations, signal stations for pilots, lighthouses, etc., as may be incident to the purposes of the Treasury, War, Navy, and Commerce Departments.

SEVENTH CORPS AREA

Arkansas: Camp Pike Booster Pumping Station, near Little Rock.

SEC. 2. In the disposal of the aforesaid properties the Secretary of War shall in each and every case cause the same to be appraised, either as a whole or in two or more parts, by an appraiser or appraisers to be chosen by him for each tract, and in the making of such appraisal due regard shall be given to the value of any improvements thereon and to the historic interest of any part of said land.

SEC. 3. After such appraisal shall have been made and approved by the Secretary of War, notification of the fact of such appraisal shall be given by the Secretary of War to the governor of the State in which each such tract of land is located, and such State, or the county or municipality in which such land is located, shall in the order named have the option at any time within six months after the approval of such appraisal to acquire the same, or any part thereof which shall have been separately appraised, upon payment within said period of six months of the appraisal value: Provided, however, That the conveyance of said tract of land to such State, county, or municipality shall be upon the condition and limitation that said property shall be limited to use for public park purposes and upon cessation of such use shall revert to the United States without notice, demand, or action brought.

SEC. 4. Six months after the date of approval of said appraisal, if the option given in section 3 hereof shall not have been completely exercised, the Secretary of War shall sell, or cause to be sold, each of said properties at public sale, at not less than the appraised value, after advertisement in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary: Provided, That no auctioneer or person acting in said capacity shall be paid a fee for the sale of said properties in excess of the sum of $100 a day.

SEC. 5. A full report of transfers and sales made under the provisions of this act shall be submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 6. The expense of appraisal, survey, advertising, and sale shall in each case be paid from the proceeds of the sale, whether made in accordance with section 3 or section 4 of this act, and the net proceeds thereof shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts."

SEC. 7. The authority granted by this act shall not repeal any prior legislative authority granted to the Secretary of War to sell or otherwise dispose of lands or property of the United States.

EIGHTH CORPS AREA

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey to Elizabeth Moore, guardian of G. Bedell Moore, a minor, her successors, or her said ward, or his lawful or legal representatives or assigns, the camp site of Camp Robert E. L. Michie, containing 400 acres, more or less, as described in the deed of conveyance to the United States dated April 26, 1919, in consideration of the payment by Elizabeth Moore, guardian of the estate of G. Bedell Moore, a minor, her successors, or her said ward, or his lawful heirs or legal representatives or assigns, to the Chamber of Commerce of Del Rio, of the county of Val Verde, and State of Texas, of the sum of $5,000 to be distributed by said chamber of commerce to the original donors.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to convey, by quitclaim deed, to the city of Gloucester, in the State of Massachusetts, all the proprietary right, title, and interest of the United States to and in that certain tract of land now known as Old Fort Defiance, which was ceded by gift to the United States Government by vote of a town meeting in Gloucester in 1794 for the purpose of erecting a fortification, and which is now no longer needed for such purpose.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, May 24, 1924, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate May 23 (legislative day of May 20), 1924

PROMOTION IN THE NAVY

Rear Admiral William R. Shoemaker, United States Navy, to be Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral, for a term of four years from the 7th day of June, 1924.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 23 (legislative day of May 20), 1924

MEMBER FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

A. C. Miller.

DIRECTOR WAR FINANCE CORPORATION

George R. Cooksey.

MEMBER UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD

Edward C. Plummer.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

George M. Young to be general appraiser of merchandise.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Henry S. Mathewson to be senior surgeon.
Edward B. Faget to be passed assistant surgeon.
Leo W. Tucker to be passed assistant surgeon.
John D. Reichard to be surgeon.
Forrest N. Anderson to be assistant surgeon.
Marvin P. Moore to be assistant surgeon.
Erval R. Coffey to be assistant surgeon.
Wilhelm R. Schilhammer to be assistant surgeon.

POSTMASTERS

ALASKA

Charles A. Sheldon, Seward.

ILLINOIS

Elliott O. Andrews, Belvidere.
Olive G. Woods, Hennepin.
Herman C. Hoefer, Park Ridge.
John N. Taffee, Pinckneyville.
Elizabeth R. Grant, Shabbona.
Edward P. Devine, Somonauk.
Kate M. Weis, Teutopolis.
Fay L. Quilter, Walnut.

KENTUCKY

John G. Fisher, Berry.
William M. Jack, Clenton
Mollie L. Allphin, Crittenden.
Agnes P. Simpson, Graham.
Edgar Renshaw, Hopkinsville.
Carley O. Wilmoth, Paris.
Minnie O. Tschiffely, Pewee Valley.

MICHIGAN

Edwin L. Groger, Concord.
Adrian J. Westveer, Holland.
Arthur G. Stone, Niles.
Frank N. Green, Olivet.

MISSOURI

Mary M. Wightman, Bethany.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, May 23, 1924

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. TILSON].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Father of us all, again Thou hast declared how great is Thy love by bringing us to the light and promise of another day. Therefore it behooves us to offer Thee our tributes of thanksgiving. Hear us, Lord, and accept the offerings that we bring. Subdue any thoughts or feelings in our breasts that may not be right and just. Let Thy blessed spirit move over our homeland, blessing and directing every institution that helps our fellows to better living and to more thorough patriotic devotion. Be with our President these arduous days; be gracious unto him and restore him to health and strength. Help us all, dear Lord, to meet our obligations, bear our burdens, and to be good. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CERTIFICATES OF CITIZENSHIP TO INDIANS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6355, and to agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 6355, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 6355) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates of citizenship to Indians.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like very much to have the gentleman's construction of the meaning of this matter as applied to State laws that will be affected by this act; that is, the question of suffrage.

Mr. SNYDER. I would be glad to tell the gentleman that, in the investigation of this matter, that question was thoroughly looked into and the laws were examined, and it is not the intention of this law to have any effect upon the suffrage qualifications in any State. In other words, in the State of New Mexico, my understanding is that in order to vote a person must be a taxpayer, and it is in no way intended to affect any Indian in that country who would be unable to vote unless qualified under the State suffrage act. That is the understanding. And also it goes to this extent, it does not in any way change the right of the Indian to any tribal relation or any property he now holds. It does not affect that in any way, but simply makes him an American citizen, subject to all restrictions to which any other American citizen is subject, in any State.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course the gentleman and his committee have looked into the legal questions involved as to what his property rights will be. As to the other matter I do not know, but it has occurred to me, if objectionable at all, it might be a somewhat anomalous situation in regard to property rights. However, the principal thing I wanted to ask about was with regard to suffrage rights. It is the construction, then, of the chairman of the committee, and speaking for the committee, that this in no way affects the suffrage rights under State laws.

Mr. SNYDER. That is the understanding of the chairman of the committee, and he is carrying to the House that understanding, after careful consideration on that particular question, by a unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. HASTINGS. And if the gentleman will permit me to suggest that this meets with the unqualified approval of the Department of the Interior and representatives of that department, so expressed to the Committee on Indian Affairs with reference to this matter when it was being considered.

Mr. SNYDER. And the commissioner as well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report for printing on the bill H. R. 5325, and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report on the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Provided, however, That the attorney or attorneys employed as herein provided may be assisted by the regular tribal attorney or attorneys employed under existing law under direction of the Secretary of the Interior"; and the Senate agree to the same.

HOMER P. SNYDER,
FREDK. W. DALLINGER,
W. W. HASTINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. W. HARRELD,
CHARLES CURTIS,
JOHN B. KENDRICK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5325) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes, submit the following statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On amendment No. 1, relating to the tribal attorneys: Strikes out the language which provides that the suit may be prosecuted by the regular tribal attorneys and provides that the regularly employed attorneys of the tribes may assist in the prosecuting of the suits.

On amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 are clerical changes made necessary by the adoption of amendment No. 1.

On amendment No. 7, the Senate recedes and accepts the language as passed by the House.

HOMER P. SNYDER,
FREDK. W. DALLINGER,
W. W. HASTINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EASTERN BAND OF CHEROKEE INDIANS

Mr. SNYDER. I desire to present a conference report for printing on the bill H. R. 3852, and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 3852) providing for the final disposition of the affairs of the Eastern Band of the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Ordered printed under the rule.

METROPOLITAN POLICE AND FIREMEN

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5855) and concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 5855) to fix the salaries of the officers and the members of the Metropolitan police and firemen of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman should not make that request. He should ask to take it from the Speaker's table and consider it and then vote on the question of whether to concur in the Senate amendments or not, but to ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments puts the House in entire agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland as modified? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the question on the amendments will be taken en bloc.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield me a minute?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this ought to give us the best police force and the best fire department in the United States, and I believe it will do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

CODIFICATION OF LAWS RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 4445, an act to amend section 115 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 4445 and agree to the Senate amendments. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PENSIONS

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this is the day on which private pension bills are in order. I call up H. R. 9246.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, a question for information. I grant that the request is of superior privilege because of the character of the gentleman who lodges it, but as a matter of right is this request so superior as to supersede the consideration of the agricultural bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular day for the consideration of private pension bills, and if no objection is made to it, and no higher motion is made, this motion will be entertained.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Shall we have additional time for the consideration of the agricultural bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not answer that question.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. If this sets aside the consideration of the agricultural bill I shall have to object to it.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, it is too late to make objection, except to the request for unanimous consent, because the bill has been taken up under the rule and reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska understands, I presume, that his objection would send the bill into Committee of the Whole with unlimited general debate, which will tend to retard the consideration of the agricultural bill.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Not because I am too late, but because a proper request has been made, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No objection is heard.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether any idea can be given as to how long this will interfere with the consideration of the agricultural bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that it will take about nine minutes to read the bill.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I submit another unanimous-consent request, that the committee amendments may be offered en bloc after the reading of the bill has been completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be offered en bloc after the reading of the bill has been completed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think at this juncture we ought to have a quorum, and I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of no quorum, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Maggie Riphenburgh, widow of William Riphenburgh, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Charles O. Rider, late of Captain McNulta's Company A, First Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and Company C, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Ellen McGarry, widow of Patrick McGarry, late of Company G, First Battalion Twelfth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary A. Sturtevant, widow of Benjamin A. Sturtevant, late of Company B, Twenty-third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Emma Urquhart, widow of David Urquhart, late of Battery B, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sallie M. Seaman, former widow of Patrick Fitzgerald, late of Eighteenth Independent Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Anna Ganderup, helpless and dependent daughter of James Sweeney, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Stella B. Irwin, helpless and dependent daughter of John C. Irwin, late of Company K, One hundred and eighty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Matilda B. Henson, widow of John Henson, late of Company F, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Caroline Day, widow of Leander J. Day, late of Company A, Thirty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Companies G, M, and I, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John C. Herron, late of Companies E and D, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Mary D. Bilbay, widow of Joseph Bilbay, late of Company E, Ninety-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Joseph Bilbay, helpless and dependent son of said Mary D. and Joseph Bilbay, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary D. Bilbay the name of said Joseph Bilbay shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Mary D. Bilbay.

The name of Levi Mott, late of Captain Nett's Company K, Fourteenth Regiment Missouri Home Guards, and Company A, Third Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Ellen Hanour, widow of Peter J. Hanour, late of Company A, Seventy-fourth Regiment New York Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah Brown, widow of William Brown, late of Company E, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elisha M. Chilson, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and Battery F, First Regiment United States Volunteer Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Frances A. Thomas, widow of John Thomas, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Caroline Murfitt, widow of William Murfitt, late of Companies F and C, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Eleanor G. Tiffany, widow of Henry D. Tiffany, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment New York State Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Fannie M. Gardner, helpless and dependent daughter of Jacob D. Gardner, late of Company G, First Regiment United States Veteran Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Nettie Campbell, widow of Henry Campbell, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Margaret J. Gano, widow of John S. Gano, late of Company A, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah M. Lyon, widow of Andrew J. W. Lyon, late of Company H, Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Emma J. Mooers, widow of Menander O. Mooers, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, any pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah Beason, widow of John A. Beason, late of Company B, Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Edith C. Oakley, widow of George W. Oakley, late of Company F, Ninetieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah E. McKeever, widow of Alfred L. McKeever, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lucy Centers, widow of Killis D. Centers, late of Company B, Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Mounted Infantry, and Company B, Eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Hubbard, widow of Larkin Hubbard, late of Company A, Forty-ninth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Julia Conger, widow of Harry Conger, alias Henry Stevens, late of Company K, Eighteenth Regiment, and Company A, One hundred and twenty-first Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary G. Russell, widow of Cashmere Russell, late of Company B, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Edith E. Doty, widow of James J. Doty, late of Company D, Ninety-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Phanettie Ormsbee, widow of Charles W. Ormsbee, late of Company B, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Josephine Albert, widow of James H. Albert, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Drenning, widow of Simon H. Drenning, late of Captain Dougherty's company, One hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Margaret C. Spealman, widow of David Spealman, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Pheby Houck, widow of Eli Houck, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Adaline Smith, former widow of David W. Brittson, late of Company F, Eleventh Battalion United States Volunteer Infantry, and Company E, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Esther M. Huffman, former widow of John Mann, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Cora I. Fisher, widow of John W. Fisher, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Medie M. Flanders, former widow of Charles C. Flanders, late of Company G, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah E. Howe, widow of John M. Howe, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Annie M. Bass, widow of James Bass, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary B. Barnes, widow of William H. Barnes, late of Company H, Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lovina Gilmore, widow of Ephraim C. Gilmore, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Elsa Gilmore, helpless and dependent daughter of said Lovina and Ephraim C. Gilmore, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Lovina Gilmore, the name of said Elsa Gilmore shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Lovina Gilmore.

The name of Martha Comstock, widow of De Witt Comstock, late of Company G, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frances E. Austeel, former widow of Francis M. Austeel, late of Company E, Forty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Louisa Woods, widow of Nathaniel G. Woods, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Martha J. Turner, widow of James H. Turner, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment, and Company H, Ninth Regiment, Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Shelby, widow of Rufus Shelby, late of Company G, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Nora V. McDaniel, widow of Orrin R. McDaniel, late of Company G, First Regiment United States Mounted Rifles, and Company H, Sixty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Philip Dieter, late of Company F, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and Troop D, Seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edward D. Henderson, helpless and dependent son of Jacob Henderson, late of Company B, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Laura A. Moore, widow of William T. Moore, late of Company D, Twenty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and landsman United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary L. Green, widow of James M. Green, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment United States Colored Heavy Artillery, and Company E, One hundredth Regiment United States Colored Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lizzie G. Chapman, widow of James C. Heater, known as Samuel H. Chapman, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah Loudermilk, widow of James Loudermilk, late of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Anna M. Craig, widow of John B. Craig, late of Company H, Fourteenth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of William C. Merritt, late of Company F, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Carrie E. Doane, widow of James W. Doane, late of Company H, Fifty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Jacob Myers, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Company G, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Christina Forsythe, widow of John A. Forsythe, late of Companies K and B, Seventieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Josephine Wood Martin, widow of Charles Martin, late of Company B, Twenty-seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and One Hundred and twenty-fifth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Shook, widow of Jacob Shook, late of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Albert C. Raymond, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Phoebe A. Chadsey, widow of George Chadsey, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Maria A. Carpenter, widow of Daniel Carpenter, late of Company C, Sixty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of George Hurtt, late of Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment, and Company I, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of John Scott, late of Company K, Fifty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and Company F, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Mary C. Thorp, widow of Thomas E. Thorp, late of Company H, Thirty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and forty-sixth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary D. Surber, widow of Augustus H. Surber, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and fifty-eighth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ada Thorp, widow of Isaac W. Thorp, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Tabitha S. Bennett, former widow of James O. Bennett, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Levi Barrett, helpless and dependent son of William Barrett, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Isadore Amos, widow of Benjamin F. Amos, late of Seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Newt Ford, helpless and dependent son of Patrick Ford, late of Company H, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Thomas J. French, helpless and dependent son of Edwin French, late of Company F, Third Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Elisa Peters, former widow of John Aday, late of Company G, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lulia M. Enngard, former widow of James Mason, alias Jacob M. Young, late of Company A, Thirtieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and fifty-fifth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah A. Wellman, widow of Richard N. Wellman, late of Company F, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of John Wellman, helpless and dependent son of said Sarah A. and Richard N. Wellman, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Sarah A. Wellman, the name of said John Wellman shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Sarah A. Wellman.

The name of Sarah E. Harkleroad, widow of Lewis Harkleroad, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Smith, widow of John S. Smith, late of Company E, Seventieth Regiment, and Company K, Thirty-third Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Allie W. Seeber, widow of Franklin Seeber, late of Company I, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ella L. Kipp, widow of Otis A. Kipp, late of Company C, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Johanna Garvey, now Dowling, former widow of Owen Garvey, late of Company D, Seventy-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lillie Beam, helpless and dependent daughter of Wesley Beam, late of Company G, One hundred and ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Alice Beam, helpless and dependent daughter of Wesley Beam, late of Company G, One hundred and ninety-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Eddy, widow of Goin Eddy, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lilly Albaugh, helpless and dependent daughter of James M. Albaugh, late of Company B, One hundred and eighty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Francis H. P. Showalter, helpless and dependent son of John H. Showalter, late major, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Cynthia M. Johnson, helpless and dependent daughter of William Johnson, late of Company I, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Lydia Rankin, widow of David Rankin, late of Company B, Eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of James H. Hoyt, alias James McCabe, late of Companies E and D, Fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Sarah M. Skinner, widow of Frederick D. Skinner, late of Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John R. Garstang, late of Lieut. J. W. Groff's company (D), Fremont's bodyguard, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Amelia Allen, widow of William Allen, late of Company C, Thirty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rebecca C. Vanderhoof, widow of Richard H. Vanderhoof, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lizzie Clay, widow of Daniel W. Clay, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of George P. Thomas, late of Company D, Ninth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Nellie Pratt, widow of James W. Pratt, late of Company F, Forty-ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Anna M. Pierce, widow of Thomas H. Pierce, late of Company E, Ninety-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah J. Kelton, widow of W. Alvin Kelton, late of Company B, Sixteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sallie R. Van Landingham, now known as Sarah R. Van Landingham, former widow of Lewis J. Van Landingham, late of Company H, Sixty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Jane E. Thorn, widow of George W. Thorn, late of Company G, Third Regiment, and Company L, Fifth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Angeline Stafford, widow of David W. Stafford, late of Company D, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ida Naile, widow of George Washington Naile, late of Military Telegraph Corps, Civil War, and pay here a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lueza A. Watson, widow of Samuel H. Watson, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Nancy J. Herd, widow of Jesse Herd, late of Company I, Forty-sixth Regiment Missouri Vounteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Malinda Herd, helpless and dependent daughter of said Nancy J. and Jessee Herd, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Nancy J. Herd, the name of said Malinda Herd shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Nancy J. Herd.

The name of Joseph Edwards, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Sophia M. West, widow of Lewis W. West, late of Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Maude P. Brown, widow of Thomas B. Brown, late of Captain Ahl's independent battery, Delaware Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Jane Hoover, former widow of William S. Clark, late of Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lewis Berry, helpless and dependent son of John W. Berry, late of Company B, Ninety-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Nancy A. Vickery, widow of Cyrus J. Vickery, late of Company K, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary J. Noland, widow of James F. Noland, late of Company I, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John Gately, late of the United States Marine Corps, Civil War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Nancy Jones, widow of James A. Jones, late of Companies L and C, First Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Julian A. Wheeler, helpless and dependent son of Edwin R. Wheeler, late of Company B, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Henry F. Correll, helpless and dependent son of John D. Correll, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Ellen N. Pearson, widow of Washington Pearson, late of Company G, Second Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and Captain John H. Morgan's Company A, Forty-fifth Regiment Enlisted Missouri Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Fanny M. Hubbard, widow of Benjamin S. Hubbard, late of Company I, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary Ellen McClaren, helpless and dependent daughter of James N. McClaren, late of Company K, Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Belle Huey, helpless and dependent daughter of George W. Huey, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Mary A. Smith, widow of Reddick Smith, late of Company F, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company G, Sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ella Orner, widow of George D. Orner, late of Company C, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Catherine Fuller, helpless and dependent daughter of Christian Fuller, late of Company A, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Frank Gentry, helpless and dependent son of James M. Gentry, late of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Anna McCombs, widow of John McCombs, late of Company A, One hundred and forty-fourth Regiment New York National Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John Sims, helpless and dependent son of Jackson Sims, late of Company A, Thirteenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of William Crawford, alias Thomas S. Carter, late of Company I, Second Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and Company K, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Martha R. White, widow of Wilson White, late of Eleventh Battery Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, and Company B, Ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Harrison, helpless and dependent daughter of Jared F. Harrison, late of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Twentieth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Anna E. Hemingway, widow of George R. Hemingway, late of Company B, One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Margaret J. McKendry, widow of Elijah McKendry, late of Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and landsman, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Harriet J. Cline, now known as Harrietta Dunlap, widow of John H. Cline, late of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Rhoda M. Stape, widow of George W. Stape, late of Company E, One hundred and seventh Regiment, and Company C, Two hundred and fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Douzilla Ashton, widow of Frederick Ashton, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Henry F. Dunn, helpless and dependent son of Patrick Dunn, late of Company C, Fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Thomas Debuke, late of Company I, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry and Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Emma C. Withers, widow of Daniel H. Withers, late of Company E, Two hundred and seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Carl Gilmore, helpless and dependent son of John Gilmore, late of Company D, Twenty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Pius Yingling, late of Company F, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Joanna Billman, widow of Alowis Billman, late of Company D, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Susan A. Bailey, widow of John F. Bailey, late of Company H, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Ethel Bailey, helpless and dependent daughter of said Susan A. and John F. Bailey, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Susan A. Bailey, the name of said Ethel Bailey shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Susan A. Bailey.

The name of George Cohen, helpless and dependent son of James Cohen, late of Company D, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Luella E. Felix, widow of William H. Felix, late of Company I, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Naomi G. Wilson, helpless and dependent daughter of Joseph M. Wilson, late of Company D, One hundred and ninety-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Margaret Murphy, widow of Boaz Murphy, late of Company K, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Isabell McLaughlin, widow of John H. McLaughlin, late of Company C, Thirty-fifth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Rebecca E. Fowler, widow of Abraham Fowler, late of Capt. Hiram B. Foster's Provisional Company, Adair County, Eighty-sixth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Flanagan, widow of Christian J. Flanagan, late of Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frances J. Whitten, widow of Charles T. Whitten, late of Company H, Nineteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Josephine F. Pequignot, widow of Charles Pequignot, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lydia J. Lawson, widow of John P. Lawson, late of Company F, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ada May, widow of Alexander May, late of Company H, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Goudy, widow of John S. Goudy, late of Burdsall's independent company Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Jane Allen, widow of Nathan Allen, late of Company I, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $70 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Joseph Allen, helpless and dependent son of said Jane and Nathan Allen, $20 of the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: Provided further, That in the event of the death of Fannie J. Allen, helpless and dependent daughter of said Jane and Nathan Allen, $20 of the additional pension granted herein shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of said Jane Allen, the names of said Joseph Allen and said Fannie J. Allen shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month to each of them, from and after the date of the death of said Jane Allen.

The name of Lovada Austin, widow of Andrew T. Austin, late of Company K, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Maude A. Norman, helpless and dependent daughter of John P. Norman, late surgeon Eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Rosa Boone, former widow of Joseph Blankhorn, late of Company C, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ruth J. Sorrells, widow of George W. Sorrels, late of Captain Crandall's Company A, Reserve Corps Missouri National Guard, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Alta Humphrey, widow of Robert Humphrey, late of Company, I, Thirteenth Regiment Vermont Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Hannah Doll, widow of Franklin A. Doll, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Yaple, widow of Giles Yaple, late of Company B, One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Catharine Jimason, widow of George Jimason, late unassigned, One hundred and forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Catherine Skinner, widow of George Skinner, late of Company G, Third Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Margaret A. Pool, widow of Benjamin T. Pool, late of Company K, One hundred and forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Louise Martz, widow of Gottfried Martz, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Clarie Herley, widow of William H. H. Herley, late unassigned, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Irvin E. Browning, helpless and dependent son of Wesley Browning, late of Company D, Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Frank Nelson, helpless and dependent son of Richard C. Nelson, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Ohio National Guard Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Katie Edds, helpless and dependent daughter of Finis Edds, late of Company C, Fifty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Annie Knappe, widow of Charles F. Knappe, late of Company E, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Nancy I. Ross, helpless and dependent daughter of Daniel Ross, late of Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Fannie I. Sanderson, widow of William Sanderson, late of Captain Larimer's company, One hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Bridgman, widow of Columbus Bridgman, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Amanda Fuller, widow of William C. Fuller, alias William Martindale, late of Companies A and D, Ninety-third Regiment, and Company B, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Issola L. Shipley, widow of William J. Shipley, late of Company A, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Rachel Smith, widow of John A. Smith, late of Company G, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Blanche Smith, helpless and dependent daughter of said Rachel and John A. Smith, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Rachel Smith, the name of said Blanche Smith shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Rachel Smith.

The name of Thersa J. Sunderland, former widow of Peter Sunderland, late of Company K, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Laura C. Rexroat, widow of William F. Rexroat, late of Company G, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Taylor, widow of Cephas P. Taylor, late of Company C, Eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lizzie McCormick, widow of William McCormick, late of Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Emma A. Jones, widow of Abram Jones, late of Companies A and C, Sixth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lucy Mitchner, widow of Morris Mitchner, late of Company B, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Isabella Knight, widow of Thomas L. Knight, unassigned, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frances M. Reynolds, widow of John Reynolds, late of Company K, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ellen N. Corbin, widow of George W. Corbin, late of Company D, Ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary E. Burg, widow of Charles H. Burg, late of Company A, Third Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Rebecca J. Klepper, widow of Jacob Klepper, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of M. Ellen Klepper, helpless and dependent daughter of said Rebecca J. and Jacob Klepper, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Rebecca J. Klepper, the name of said M. Ellen Klepper shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Rebecca J. Klepper.

The name of Mary E. Stinson, helpless and dependent daughter of Samuel Stinson, late of Company C, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Lucy J. Coburn, widow of Benjamin F. Coburn, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Kate E. Abbott, widow of Allen W. Abbott, late of Company B, Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Martha E. Collier, helpless and dependent daughter of John L. Collier, late of Company H, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Augusta M. Moseley, widow of John L. Moseley, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Reka Butts, widow of Milon Butts, late of Company G, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Delnora Deuel, widow of James F. Deuel, late of Company H, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary A. Huckaba, widow of John F. Huckaba, late of Company H, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Adaline Wiseman, widow of George P. R. Wiseman, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Abbie D. Washburn, widow of Oscar E. Washburn, late of Company H, Third Regiment Massachusetts Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Dorcas A. Reed, widow of George F. Reed, late of Company F, Fourteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Amanda J. Smith, widow of Milton Smith, late of Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Fifty-ninth Company, Second Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Julia A. Thornton, widow of Noah Thornton, late of Company E, Fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rutha Roach, widow of Benjamin Roach, late of Company F, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Phoby E. Sliger, widow of William G. Sliger, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Frances L. Row, widow of Michael Row, late of Company K, Two hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Brown, widow of Levi H. Brown, late of Company D, Twenty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Zilpah I. Eaton, helpless and dependent daughter of Jeremiah L. Rice, late of Company K, Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of George Grove, helpless and dependent son of Simon Grove, late of Company G, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anna W. Jones, widow of Walter N. Jones, late of Company D, One hundred and twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Malissa Sawyer, widow of Solomon Sawyer, late of Company G, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah A. Strawn, widow of Thomas J. Strawn, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Arkansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Adidamiah Reeves, widow of Laton D. Reeves, late of Company K, One hundred and fortieth Regiment, and Company H, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Laura C. Dupree, widow of John Dupree, late of Battery L, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Harper, widow of James M. Harper, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Adaline Laffolett, widow of John W. Laffolett, late of Company D, Thirty-third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Bell L. Duncan, widow of Andrew M. Duncan, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment, and Company H, One hundred and third Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Tedrow, widow of Douglas E. Tedrow, late of Company D, Seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ester C. King, widow of Martin A. King, late of Company C, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Margaret E. Farmer, widow of John N. Farmer, late of Companies H and C, Third Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Caroline E. Johnson, widow of Henry M. Johnson, late of Company F, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Annie E. Stauch, widow of Jacob H. Stauch, late of Company M, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Louisa T. Goans, widow of Samuel S. Goans, late of Company K, Ninth Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and Company M, Thirteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Schnarr, widow of Henry Schnarr, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Maria L. Johnson, widow of Daniel L. Johnson, late of Company C, Fifty-eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Theodore F. Cook, late of Company C, Second Regiment, and Company H, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Wood, widow of Abner P. Wood, late of Company E, Eighteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Coppins, widow of Culmer Coppins, late of Company D, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Maggie A. McKinney, widow of James McKinney, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Anna Sagendorf, widow of Jonas Sagendorf, late of Company B, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Amy E. Sagendorf, helpless and dependent daughter of said Anna and Jonas Sagendorf, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Anna Sagendorf the name of said Amy E. Sagendorf shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Anna Sagendorf.

The name of Wilhemina W. Dietrich, former widow of John Weiss, late of the First Independent Battery, Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Frances R. Swails, helpless and dependent daughter of Darius R. Swails, late of Company E, Twentieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Barbara Schlatter, widow of Henry Schlatter, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sopha Brown, widow of Edley Brown, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Richie A. Holmes, widow of Amos Holmes, late of Company E, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary M. Perago, widow of James S. Perago, late of Company A, Two hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Hattie A. McGuire, widow of George F. McGuire, late of Company I, Fifty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Noah Rickard, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Avilla Hough, former widow of Andrew Swartz, late of Company I, Eighty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Margaret J. Billig, widow of Charles V. Billig, late of Company G, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Jane L. Hewitt, widow of Daniel C. Hewitt, late coal heaver, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nancy J. Fuller, widow of James W. Fuller, late of Company C, One hundredth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Minnie Young, widow of George G. Young, late of Company I, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Martha Gruver, widow of Isaac Gruver, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah L. Headington, widow of Emmet Headington, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Alexander, widow of Robert Alexander, late of Company C, Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Thomas A. Smith, helpless and dependent son of Thomas D. Smith, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and Sixty-fourth Company, Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Mary Boylen, widow of Patrick Boylen, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nancy Leming, widow of Ephraim Leming, late of Company H, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Almira M. Mitchell, widow of James L. Mitchell, late of Company A, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Emma Kauffman, widow of Joseph S. Kauffman, late of Company K, Two hundred and third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Blanche H. Simms, helpless and dependent daughter of John Simms, late of Company E, One hundred and ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Mary J. Wilking, widow of Philip Wilking, late of Company G, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Bridget M. Carpenter, widow of William F. Carpenter, late of Company G, One Hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Nancy J. Bryant, widow of Martin V. Bryant, late of Company B, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary J. Kimbell, widow of Lorenzo A. Kimbell, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lottie A. Bowhall, widow of Nathan Rowhall, late of Company B, Twentieth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Louise E. Shull, widow of Frederick A. Shull, late of Company A, Eighty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary E. Tanner, widow of Richard M. Tanner, late of Company I, Third Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Christena J. Carter, widow of Thomas J. Carter, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lephe J. Barler, widow of Barnabas Barler, late of Company I, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Allen Y. Boggs, late unassigned Maine Infantry Volunteers, Civil War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, without deduction on account of former alleged erroneous payment of pension.

The name of Eliza A. Winters, widow of Jeremiah Winters, late of Company D, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Remetha H. Means, widow of George W. Means, late of Company E, One hundred and nineteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of John Sanders, late of Company B, Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Veteran Volunteer in same organization, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Mable Farnham, widow of Fred L. Farnham, late of Company C, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Pearl Falkinburgh, widow of William A. Falkinburgh, late of Company M, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Kate Bantz, widow of William A. Bantz, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Carrie M. Althouse, widow of John W. Althouse, late of Company H, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Laura Murdick, widow of Allen Murdick, late of Company D, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Sadie L. Treadwell, widow of Orrin L. Treadwell, late of Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Howell, widow of William H. Howell, late of Company H, Eighty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Alice Green, widow of Luther Green, late of Company F, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Benton Abbott, helpless and dependent son of David Abbott, late of Company H, Twenty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Sophia Albright, widow of John Albright, alias John Brown, late of Company H, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Corps Volunteers, and Battery C, Fifth Regiment United States Volunteer Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Minerva Kenney, widow of Samuel Kenney, late of Company H, Seventy-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and One hundred and seventh Company, First Battalion, Invalid Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Carra B. Jacobs, widow of John W. Jacobs, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ellen J. Goodnoh, widow of Edward C. Goodnoh, late of Company A, Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elvina Spangler, widow of Israel Spangler, late of Company C, One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jennie S. McIlhenny, widow of Robert K. McIlhenny, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah J. Prouty, widow of Frederick Prouty, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Eva G. Klug, widow of John W. Klug, late of Company K, Second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Maggie M. Finch, widow of Martin L. Finch, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary Myers, widow of Gottlieb Myers, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and Company G, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Susan A. Main, widow of Charles H. Main, late of Company B, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Esther A. Fero, widow of David Fero, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Julia B. Miller, widow of Joseph C. Miller, late of Company B, Battalion Engineers, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Catharin Murphy, widow of James Murphy, late of Company G, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $70 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of James Murphy, helpless and dependent son of said Catharin and James Murphy, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Catharin Murphy, the name of said James Murphy shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Catharin Murphy.

The name of Emma L. Maynard, helpless and dependent daughter of Chauncey J. Maynard, late of Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Mary E. Main, widow of Lemuel Main, late of Company G, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Joanna D. Potter, widow of Ames Potter, late of Company C, Ninety-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Verrelle S. Willard, widow of Manfred Willard, late of Company H, Sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Kundinger, widow of Theodore Kundinger, late of Company K, Fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Malissa Blair, widow of John W. P. Blair, late of Company A, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah A. Morris, widow of Charles B. Morris, late of Companies B and D, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Brittenham, widow of George W. Brittenham, late of Company K, Eighty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Palmer, helpless and dependent daughter of John Palmer, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment, and Company H, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment, Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Mary A. Force, widow of Washington P. Force, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Olive J. Hurst, former widow of Abram H. Hurst, late of Company B, One hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Fuller, widow of Henry Fuller, alias James Butler, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mahala Shaw, widow of Francis M. Shaw, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Josephine Roush, widow of Richard J. Roush, late of Company I, Fifty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Maria L. Reed, widow of Edwin W. Reed, late of Company F, Seventy-fifth Regiment, and Company A, Eighty-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Margaret S. Higgins, widow of William H. Higgins, late of Company D, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William A. Crampton, helpless and dependent son of Byron Crampton, late of Company I, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Jennie A. Davis, former widow of John L. Johnson, late of Company H, Thirty-eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Eva L. Wood, widow of Theodore Wood, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Yocum, widow of Henry N. Yocum, late of Company H, Third Regiment, and Company I, Ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary H. Templeton, widow of Dexter E. Templeton, late of Company A, Third Battalion, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Nancy Adams, widow of Gillespie Adams, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Eliza Ewing, former widow of Oliver Town, late of Company D, One hundred and ninety-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Walter Town, helpless and dependent son of said Eliza Ewing and Oliver Town, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Eliza Ewing, the name of said Walter Town shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Eliza Ewing.

The name of Jane E. Hart, widow of Albert T. Hart, late of Company H, First Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rachel Morris, widow of Eli T. Morris, late of Company G, Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Emma L. Dugent, widow of William Dugent, late of Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Fannie Teeple, former widow of Benjamin Teeple, late of Company K, Second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Josephine M. Downes, widow of Chauncey B. Downes, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Catherine Loriot, widow of Henry Loriot, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Steely, widow of Simon C. Steely, late of Company K, Twenty-sixth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of George Robinson, late of Company A, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Grace F. Briggs, widow of Barron W. Briggs, late of Company K, Thirty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Carrie S. Pierce, widow of Henry H. Pierce, late of Company H, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Eliza Prody, widow of Max Prody, alias Max Prodi, late of Company D, Tenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary W. McGuire, widow of William McGuire, late of Company F, Third Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Annie K. Doherty, widow of John C. Doherty, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Rhoda Hart, widow of Hector S. Hart, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Orominah Bates, former widow of John R. Russell, late of Company A, Tenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary A. Egolf, widow of Joseph Egolf, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ida Hall, widow of Alexander Hall, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah A. Thornburg, widow of William Thornburg, late of Company B, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Clifford Fiske, helpless and dependent son of William A. Fiske, late of Company I, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Mary Gaffney, widow of Philip Gaffney, alias Philip Murphy, late of Company I, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Henry J. Robinson, helpless and dependent son of William L. Robinson, late of Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Mary A. Enderle, widow of Joseph Enderle, late of Company K, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rosa E. Stephens, widow of Owen Stephens, late of Company B, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Melinda Suggs, widow of James Suggs, late of Company H, Fifty-ninth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Edward Zechman, helpless and dependent son of Joel Zechman, late of Company K, Two hundred and tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Margary Dotter, widow of Jeremiah Dotter, late of Company K, Sixty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary E. Applegate, widow of Edwin R. Applegate, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Delphina E. Blackwood, widow of Birchem W. Blackwood, late of Company E, Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Arminda Morgan, widow of Jacob Morgan, late of Company E, Second Regiment North Carolina Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Luren M. Carter, widow of Amos C. Carter, late of Company C, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary C. Triplett, widow of Joshua D. Triplett, late of unassigned Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Clara Wirtz, widow of George Wirtz, late of Company F, Twenty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Julia A. Kresge, widow of Amos Kresge, late of Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Minnie E. Crow, widow of Mark E. Crow, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Martha Hammond, widow of Philip Hammond, late of Company B, One hundred and sixtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ella F. Young, widow of George H. Young, late of Company F, Eighth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Cynthia Lillie, former widow of Lauriston Jones, late of Company B, Second Regiment, and Company D, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Anna M. Weber, widow of John Weber, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Vesta J. Hutsell, widow of Samuel Hutsell, late of Company H, Sixty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry (Enrolled Militia), and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Betsy A. Burke, widow of Thomas D. Burke, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah A. Elliott, widow of John B. Elliott, late of Company C, Fourth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Second Regiment West Virginia Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elmira L. Stone, widow of Wells C. Stone, late of Company F, Fifty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Amanda E. Fortney, widow of Christopher Fortney, late of Company I, Two hundred and ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Harriet Sadler, widow of James A. Sadler, late of Company K, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lucy A. Cox, widow of Augustus H. Cox, late of Company E, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Martha H. Raymond, widow of Gustavus Raymond, late of Company D, Forty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Caroline M. Fleming, widow of George B. Fleming, late of Company G, One hundred and ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth M. Cook, widow of George P. Cook, late of Company E, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Olive Hull, widow of William E. Hull, late of Company B, Seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Fannie F. Kennedy, widow of Daniel E. Kennedy, alias Samuel Cooper, late of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company K, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Rebecca J. Raburn, widow of Francis M. Raburn, late of Company H, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Frederick J. Dum, late teamster, Quartermaster Department, during Civil War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Louisa Jackson, widow of Hiram Jackson, late of Company I, Fifty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Plummer, widow of Zachary T. Plummer, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mandy Clapper, widow of William Clapper, late of Companies L and C, Nineteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Isaac Eads, late of Company F, Third Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Mary D. Brown, widow of George A. Brown, late of Company C, Forty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Conklin, widow of Samuel S. Conklin, late coxswain, United States Navy, Civil War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Polley Smith, widow of James C. Smith, late of Company M, Thirteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary E. Waitman, widow of Charles A. Waitman, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Katie Thompson, widow of Thomas Thompson, late of Company L, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Matilda Tedlock, widow of Pyrt Tedlock, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ray D. Ingersoll, widow of Orton Ingersoll, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Isabel D. Mann, widow of George W. Mann, late of Company I, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Martha A. McNeer, widow of James H. McNeer, late of Company E, Second Battalion Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Della Elder, helpless and dependent daughter of William T. Elder, late of Company G, Eighty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of John S. Nixon, helpless and dependent son of William S. Nixon, late of Company I, One hundred and forty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Elizabeth J. Stallings, widow of Henry C. Stallings, late of Company G, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah E. Bender, widow of Joseph C. Bender, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and Companies H and K, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Carrie Thompson, widow of Sanford S. Thompson, late boatswain's mate, United States Navy, Civil War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Metlin, widow of James C. Metlin, late of Company H, Sixty-third Regiment, and Company A, Eighth Regiment, Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Harriet E. Brothers, widow of Frank Brothers, late of Company B, One hundred and forty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Secrist, widow of Jesse Secrist, late of Company K, Third Regiment Pennsylvania Provisional Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Winn, widow of Joel T. Winn, late of Company A, Ninety-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and Battery L, First Regiment United States Volunteer Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Alice Gormley, widow of Daniel Gormley, late of Company E, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ella L. Norwood, widow of Howard J. Norwood, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Massachusetts Militia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Emeline Harvey, widow of William Harvey, late of Company A, Fourteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Nellie Mae Harvey, helpless and dependent daughter of said Emeline and William Harvey, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Emeline Harvey, the name of said Nellie Mae Harvey shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Emeline Harvey.

The name of Adelaide M. Clark, widow of Newell B. Clark, late unassigned, Sixtieth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Sarah E. Doan, widow of Marmaduke R. Doan, late of Company F, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary V. Sprague, widow of Albert H. Sprague, late of Second Independent Battery Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Hester A. McLuen, widow of James F. McLuen, late of Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Annie M. Marsh, widow of Augustus A. Marsh, late of Company H, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Lewis Grignon, helpless and dependent son of Andrew Grignon, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Hatch, widow of Charles Hatch, alias Charles H. Lord, late of Company B, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Harriet E. Goodale, widow of Jude Goodale, late of Company B, Fifty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and Company C, Eleventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Susan M. Lambert, widow of James A. Lambert, late of Company I, Second Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Emily Sanders, widow of Zachariah P. Sanders, late of Company E, Twenty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Eva L. Little, widow of William Little, late of Company H, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary J. Wimbles, widow of Henry P. Wimbles, late of Company H, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth M. Humphreys, widow of John W. Humphreys, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Susan K. Bentz, widow of Isaac E. Bentz, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Melissa Bigler, widow of John W. Bigler, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Margaret E. Ulrich, helpless and dependent daughter of George Ulrich, late of Company L, Fifteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Sarah L. Shill, widow of Thomas J. Shill, late of Company G, Twenty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary O. Shaw, widow of John S. Shaw, late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Erskine A. Cole, alias Charles Stickels, late of Company E, Tenth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and Company B, Fifty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month without deduction for former erroneous payments.

The name of Nancy Jane Bush, widow of Albert R. Bush, late of Company G, Fifty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Anna E. Ward, widow of James Ward, late of Company E, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Anna G. Murray, widow of Joseph Murray, alias John Townsend, late of Company K, Twenty-ninth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Bella M. Getty, widow of John F. Getty, late of Fourteenth Battery Ohio Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary A. Mathewson, widow of George Mathewson, late of Company C, Tenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Clarissa Stratton, widow of Samuel W. Stratton, late of Company E, Twenty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Kate G. Caton, widow of Henry T. Caton, late of Companies G and E, One hundred and twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Effie F. Myers, widow of James A. Myers, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Belle Boots, widow of Willard S. Boots, late of Company L, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Kitty A. Freeman, widow of Jesse K. Freeman, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jemima A. Taylor, widow of William L. Taylor, late of Company K, Sixty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Jane F. Cochrane, widow of Russell Cochrane, late of Fifteenth Battery, Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Julia F. Veats, former widow of John Gannon, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Julie Cowan, widow of Philo J. Cowan, late of Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary Stewart, widow of William A. Stewart, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, through a legally appointed guardian, in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Marion L. Tyler, widow of Elnathan B. Tyler, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and unassigned, First Battalion, Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary E. Goodsell, widow of Theodore W. Goodsell, late of Company C, Ninety-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Helen L. Huff, widow of William H. Huff, late of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary A. Bowman, widow of Peter A. Bowman, late of Company F, Two hundred and first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of William D. Bowman, helpless and dependent son of said Mary A. and Peter A. Bowman, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Mary A. Bowman the name of said William D. Bowman shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the death of said Mary A. Bowman.

The name of Emma Post, widow of Eldad Post, late of Company D, Forty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Annie C. Frazee, widow of Francis M. Frazee, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rebecca Murray, former widow of Moses Keeny, late of Company F, Ninety-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lurettie L. Morse, widow of Andrew J. Morse, late of Company E, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rosaline E. Palmer, widow of William Palmer, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Kate Irwin, widow of Isaiah T. Irwin, late of Company D, Second Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Augusta Chapman, widow of Abram Chapman, late of Company K, Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Corkett, widow of John K. Corkett, late of Thirteenth Independent Battery Wisconsin Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary H. Von Brandis, widow of William Von Brandis, alias William Brandis, late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Elizabeth A. Harrington, widow of Al C. Harrington, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary L. Danforth, widow of Lyman Danforth, late of Company H, Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Barbara Grant, widow of Henry N. Grant, late of Company F, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Catharine B. Bittle, widow of John Bittle, late of Company A, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Laura B. Smith, widow of Rhoades Smith, late of Company D, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Theresa A. Hunter, widow of William M. Hunter, late of Company B, Fifteenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Harriet E. Gould, widow of Harvey W. Gould, late of Company I, Fifty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Jeanette E. Ferris, widow of De Forest W. Ferris, late of Company E, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Rohama Crosley, widow of Ross Crosley, jr., late of Company E, Nineteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Catharine S. Wakefield, widow of Miles D. Wakefield, late of Company H, Forty-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Almaria Hemstreet, widow of Alvin L. Hemstreet, late of Company K, Forty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Daniel Burket, helpless and dependent son of Joseph Burket, late of Company E, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Elizabeth Thomas, former widow of Thoma Utz, late of Company F, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of John Charleston, late of Company G, Twenty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Sarah J. Burns, widow of James Burns, late of Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ella Littlefield, widow of Darwin S. Littlefield, late of Company A, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Mary Pfaff, widow of John Pfaff, late of Company K, Third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Mary Smith, helpless and dependent daughter of Frederick Smith, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month through a legally appointed guardian.

The name of Sarah A. Bryan, widow of Walter P. Bryan, late of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sarah Hall, widow of Ira D. Hall, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving as the natural guardian of Mattie Hall, a minor daughter of said Sarah and Ira D. Hall, $6 of the amount to cease and determine when the said minor daughter, Mattie Hall, attains the age of 16 years, or in the event of her death.

The name of Clarenda Brown, widow of Thomas Brown, late of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Eva D. Fuller, widow of Albert Fuller, late of Company C, Sixty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Isabella Rickman, widow of Nelson W. Rickman, late of Company A, Phelp's regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Susan Smitten, former widow of Edwin Chesley, late of Company A, Two hundred and sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Louesa Kontner, widow of Isaac D. Kontner, late of Company C, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lydia A. Gossett, widow of Newton J. Gossett, late of Company H, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Henry J. Andrews, late of Captain William H. Ferguson's company, Enrolled Missouri Militia, Civil War, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The name of Elizabeth Croft, widow of William M. Croft, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Infantry, and Company B, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Martha Thomas, widow of Henry Thomas, late of Company E, Thirty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Mary E. Thomas, helpless and dependent daughter of said Martha and Henry Thomas, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Martha Thomas, the name of said Mary E. Thomas shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $20 per month from and after the date of death of said Martha Thomas.

The name of Jane S. Gillingham, widow of James Gillingham, late of Company H, One hundred and fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Ida J. Black, widow of Hugh I. A. Black, late second class boy, United States Navy, Civil War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Ann C. Platt, widow of James W. Platt, late of Company K, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The name of Eliza A. O'Connor, widow of Robert O'Connor, late of Company D, One hundred and sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

This bill is a substitute for the following House bills referred to said committee:

H. R. 974. Maggie Riphenburgh.
H. R. 991. Charles O. Rider.
H. R. 996. Ellen McGarry.
H. R. 1028. Mary A. Sturtevant.
H. R. 1264. Emma Urquhart.
H. R. 1430. Sallie M. Seaman.
H. R. 1436. Anna Ganderup.
H. R. 1492. Stella B. Irwin.
H. R. 1505. Matilda B. Henson.
H. R. 1507. Caroline Day.
H. R. 1511. John C. Herron.
H. R. 1542. Mary D. Bilbay.
H. R. 1667. Levi Mott.
H. R. 1722. Ellen Hanour.
H. R. 1744. Sarah Brown.
H. R. 1748. Elisha M. Chilson.
H. R. 1771. Frances A. Thomas.
H. R. 1791. Caroline Murfitt.
H. R. 1801. Eleanor G. Tiffany.
H. R. 1838. Fannie M. Gardner.
H. R. 1845. Nettie Campbell.
H. R. 1968. Margaret J. Gano.
H. R. 1976. Sarah M. Lyon.
H. R. 2012. Emma J. Mooers.
H. R. 2073. Sarah Beason.
H. R. 2109. Edith C. Oakley.

H. R. 2121. Sarah E. McKeever.
H. R. 2180. Lucy Centers.
H. R. 2187. Mary Hubbard.
H. R. 2270. Julia Conger.
H. R. 2275. Mary G. Russell.
H. R. 2278. Edith E. Doty.
H. R. 2279. Phanettie Ormsbee.
H. R. 2294. Josephine Albert.
H. R. 2296. Elizabeth Drenning.
H. R. 2304. Margaret C. Spealman.
H. R. 2544. Pheby Houck.
H. R. 2547. Adaline Smith.
H. R. 2552. Esther M. Huffman.
H. R. 2572. Cora I. Fisher.
H. R. 2589. Medie M. Flanders.
H. R. 2643. Sarah E. Howe.
H. R. 2730. Annie M. Bass.
H. R. 3004. Mary B. Barnes.
H. R. 3020. Lovina Gilmore.
H. R. 3087. Martha Comstock.
H. R. 3099. Frances E. Austeel.
H. R. 3121. Louisa Woods.
H. R. 3128. Martha J. Turner.
H. R. 3134. Sarah J. Shelby.
H. R. 3325. Nora V. McDaniel.
H. R. 3462. Philip Dieter.
H. R. 3466. Edward D. Henderson.
H. R. 3481. Laura A. Moore.
H. R. 3569. Mary L. Green.
H. R. 3588. Lizzie G. Chapman.
H. R. 3606. Sarah Loudermilk.
H. R. 3654. Anna M. Craig.
H. R. 3760. William C. Merritt.
H. R. 3830. Carrie E. Doane.
H. R. 4017. Jacob Myers.
H. R. 4300. Christina Forsythe.
H. R. 4339. Josephine Wood Martin.
H. R. 4389. Elizabeth Shook.
H. R. 4415. Albert C. Raymond.
H. R. 4587. Phoebe A. Chadsey.
H. R. 4595. Maria A. Carpenter.
H. R. 4602. George Hurtt.
H. R. 4603. John Scott.
H. R. 4606. Mary C. Thorp.
H. R. 4648. Mary D. Surber.
H. R. 4686. Ada Thorp.
H. R. 4722. Tabitha S. Bennett.
H. R. 4723. Levi Barrett.
H. R. 4758. Isadora Amos.
H. R. 4781. Newt Ford.
H. R. 4788. Thomas J. French.
H. R. 4791. Eliza Peters.
H. R. 4872. Lulia M. Eungard.
H. R. 4885. Sarah A. Wellman.
H. R. 4922. Sarah E. Harkleroad.
H. R. 4940. Elizabeth Smith.
H. R. 4954. Allie W. Seeber.
H. R. 4956. Ella L. Kipp.
H. R. 5035. Johanna Garvey, now Dowling.
H. R. 5038. Lillie Beam.
H. R. 5041. Alice Beam.
H. R. 5043. Elizabeth Eddy.
H. R. 5044. Lilly Albaugh.
H. R. 5046. Francis H. P. Showalter.
H. R. 5069. Cynthia M. Johnson.
H. R. 5106. Lydia Rankin.
H. R. 5178. James H. Hoyt, alias James McCabe.
H. R. 5139. Sarah M. Skinner.
H. R. 5229. John R. Garstang.
H. R. 5245. Amelia Allen.
H. R. 5275. Rebecca C. Vanderhoof.
H. R. 5288. Lizzie Clay.
H. R. 5358. George P. Thomas.
H. R. 5360. Nellie Pratt.
H. R. 5373. Anna M. Pierce.
H. R. 5400. Sarah J. Kelton.
H. R. 5436. Sallie R. Van Landingham, now known as Sarah R. Van Landingham.
H. R. 5461. Jane E. Thorn.
H. R. 5463. Angeline Stafford.
H. R. 5508. Ida Naile.
H. R. 5547. Lueza A. Watson.
H. R. 5577. Nancy J. Herd.
H. R. 5757. Joseph Edwards.
H. R. 5768. Sophia M. West.
H. R. 5787. Maude P. Brown.
H. R. 5827. Mary Jane Hoover.
H. R. 5977. Lewis Berry.
H. R. 5969. Nancy A. Vickery.
H. R. 5972. Mary J. Noland.
H. R. 5988. John Gately.
H. R. 6040. Nancy Jones.
H. R. 6043. Julian A. Wheeler.
H. R. 6098. Henry F. Correll.
H. R. 6099. Ellen N. Pearson.
H. R. 6102. Fanny M. Hubbard.
H. R. 6108. Mary Ellen McClaren.
H. R. 6122. Belle Huey.
H. R. 6163. Mary A. Smith.
H. R. 6267. Ella Orner.
H. R. 6282. Catherine Fuller.
H. R. 6417. Frank Gentry.
H. R. 6457. Anna McCombs.
H. R. 6465. John Sims.
H. R. 6497. William Crawford, alias Thomas S. Carter.
H. R. 6511. Martha R. White.
H. R. 6528. Sarah J. Harrison.
H. R. 6567. Anna E. Hemingway.
H. R. 6616. Margaret J. McKindry.
H. R. 6641. Harriet J. Clise, now known as Harrietta Dunlap.
H. R. 6667. Rhoda M. Stape.
H. R. 6689. Douzilla Ashton.
H. R. 6693. Henry F. Dunn.
H. R. 6701. Thomas Debuke.
H. R. 6746. Emma C. Withers.
H. R. 6764. Carl Gilmore.
H. R. 6771. Pius Yingling.
H. R. 6797. Joanna Billman.
H. R. 6807. Susan A. Bailey.
H. R. 6840. George Cohen.
H. R. 6885. Lucila E. Felix.
H. R. 6917. Naomi G. Wilson.
H. R. 6931. Margaret Murphy.
H. R. 6940. Isabell McLaughlin.
H. R. 6958. Rebecca E. Fowler.
H. R. 6968. Sarah J. Flanagan.
H. R. 6970. Frances J. Whitten.
H. R. 7020. Josephine F. Pequignot.
H. R. 7028. Lydia J. Lawson.
H. R. 7029. Ada May.
H. R. 7046. Mary E. Goudy.
H. R. 7049. Jane Allen.
H. R. 7050. Lovada Austin.
H. R. 7058. Maude A. Norman.
H. R. 7085. Rosa Boone.
H. R. 7090. Ruth J. Sorrels.
H. R. 7096. Alta Humphrey.
H. R. 7098. Hannah Doll.
H. R. 7116. Mary Yaple.
H. R. 7125. Catharine Jimason.
H. R. 7134. Catherine Skinner.
H. R. 7159. Margaret A. Pool.
H. R. 7168. Louise Martz.
H. R. 7170. Clarie Herley.
H. R. 7171. Irvin E. Browning.
H. R. 7191. Frank Nelson.
H. R. 7198. Katie Edds.
H. R. 7199. Annie Knappe.
H. R. 7200. Nancy I. Ross.
H. R. 7201. Fannie I. Sanderson.
H. R. 7205. Elizabeth Bridgman.
H. R. 7213. Amanda Fuller.
H. R. 7225. Issola L. Shipley.
H. R. 7230. Rachel Smith.
H. R. 7246. Thersa J. Sunderland.
H. R. 7234 Laura C. Rexroat.
H. R. 7241. Mary Taylor.
H. R. 7242. Lizzie McCormick.
H. R. 7251. Emma A. Jones.
H. R. 7252. Lucy Mitchner.
H. R. 7275. Isabella Knight.
H. R. 7277. Frances M. Reynolds.
H. R. 7278. Ellen N. Corbin.
H. R. 7279. Mary E. Burg.
H. R. 7282. Rebecca J. Klepper.
H. R. 7286. Mary E. Stinson.
H. R. 7292. Lucy J. Coburn.
H. R. 7294. Kate E. Abbott.
H. R. 7295. Martha E. Collier.
H. R. 7332. Augusta M. Moseley.
H. R. 7337. Reka Butts.
H. R. 7347. Delnora Deuel.
H. R. 7371. Mary A. Ruckaba.
H. R. 7373. Adaline Wiseman.
H. R. 7374. Abbie D. Washburn.
H. R. 7386. Dorcas A. Reed.
H. R. 7387. Amanda J. Smith.
H. R. 7391. Julia A. Thornton.
H. R. 7392. Ruth a Roach.
H. R. 7393. Pheby E. Sliger.
H. R. 7397. Frances L. Row.
H. R. 7425. Mary J. Brown.
H. R. 7426. Zilpah I. Eaton.
H. R. 7428. George Grove.
H. R. 7429. Anna W. Jones.
H. R. 7434. Malissa Sawyer.
H. R. 7473. Sarah A. Strawn.
H. R. 7474. Adidamiah Reeves.
H. R. 7475. Laura C. Dupree.
H. R. 7481. Sarah J. Harper.
H. R. 7482. Adaline Laffolett.
H. R. 7484. Bell L. Duncan.
H. R. 7486. Elizabeth Tedrow.
H. R. 7487. Ester C. King.
H. R. 7488. Margaret E. Farmer.
H. R. 7509. Caroline E. Johnson.
H. R. 7510. Annie E. Stauch.
H. R. 7513. Louisa T. Goans.
H. R. 7519. Elizabeth Schnarr.
H. R. 7622. Maria L. Johnson.
H. R. 7625. Theodore F. Cook.
H. R. 7634. Elizabeth Wood.
H. R. 7640. Mary J. Coppins.
H. R. 7669. Maggie A. McKinney.
H. R. 7706. Anna Sagendorf.
H. R. 7709. Wilhemina W. Dietrich.
H. R. 7716. Frances R. Swails.
H. R. 7718. Barbara Schlatter.
H. R. 7722. Sopha Brown.
H. R. 7725. Richie A. Holmes.
H. R. 7739. Mary M. Parago.
H. R. 7765. Hattie A. McGuire.
H. R. 7768. Noah Rickard.
H. R. 7797. Avilla Hough.
H. R. 7799. Margaret J. Billig.
H. R. 7801. Jane L. Bewitt.
H. R. 7803. Nancy J. Fuller.
H. R. 7808. Minnie Young.
H. R. 7811. Martha Gruver.
H. R. 7814. Sarah L. Headington.
H. R. 7815. Mary E. Alexander.
H. R. 7829. Thomas A. Smith.
H. R. 7837. Mary Boylen.
H. R. 7844. Nancy Leming.
H. R. 7857. Almira M. Mitchell.
H. R. 7861. Emma Kauffman.
H. R. 7864. Blanche H. Simms.
H. R. 7865. Mary J. Wilking.
H. R. 7866. Bridget M. Carpenter.
H. R. 7867. Nancy J. Bryant.
H. R. 7872. Mary J. Kimbell.
H. R. 7874. Lottie A. Bowhall.
H. R. 7876. Louise E. Shull.
H. R. 7893. Mary E. Tanner.
H. R. 7897. Christena J. Carter.
H. R. 7902. Lephe J. Barler.
H. R. 7904. Allen Y. Boggs.
H. R. 7932. Eliza A. Winters.
H. R. 7939. Remetha H. Means.
H. R. 7940. John Sanders.
H. R. 7942. Mable Farnham.
H. R. 7943. Pearl Falkinburgh.
H. R. 7950. Kate Bantz.
H. R. 7958. Carrie M. Althouse.
H. R. 7970. Laura Murdick.
H. R. 7975. Sadie L. Treadwell.
H. R. 7979. Sarah J. Howell.
H. R. 7984. Alice Green.
H. R. 7993. Benton Abbott.
H. R. 8003. Sophia Albright.
H. R. 8004. Minerva Keaney.
H. R. 8008. Carra B. Jacobs.
H. R. 8010. Ellen J. Goodnoh.
H. R. 8015. Elvina Spangler.
H. R. 8030. Jennie S. McIlhenny.
H. R. 8033. Sarah J. Prouty.
H. R. 8038. Eva G. Klug.
H. R. 8041. Maggie M. Finch.
H. R. 8047. Mary Myers.
H. R. 8056. Susan A. Main.
H. R. 8061. Estheer A. Fero.
H. R. 8062. Julia B. Miller.
H. R. 8071. Catharin Murphy.
H. R. 8073. Emma L. Maynard.
H. R. 8075. Mary E. Main.
H. R. 8077. Joanna D. Potter.
H. R. 8098. Verrelle S. Willard.
H. R. 8099. Mary E. Kundinger.
H. R. 8104. Malissa Blair.
H. R. 8105. Sarah A. Morris.
H. R. 8106. Mary Brittenham.
H. R. 8107. Elizabeth Palmer.
H. R. 8122. Mary A. Force.
H. R. 8129. Olive J. Hurst.
H. R. 8130. Sarah J. Fuller.
H. R. 8131. Mahala Shaw.
H. R. 8132. Josephine Roush.
H. R. 8133. Maria L. Reed.
H. R. 8139. Margaret S. Higgins.
H. R. 8153. William A. Crampton.
H. R. 8156. Jennie A. Davis.
H. R. 8158. Eva L. Wood.
H. R. 8168. Elizabeth Yocum.
H. R. 8194. Mary H. Templeton.
H. R. 8198. Nancy Adams.
H. R. 8199. Eliza Ewing.
H. R. 8213. Jane E. Hart.
H. R. 8214. Rachel Morris.
H. R. 8219. Emma L. Dugent.
H. R. 8225 Fannie Teepie.
H. R. 8245. Josephine M. Downes.
H. R. 8246. Catherine Loriot.
H. R. 8255. Mary E. Steely.
H. R. 8256. George Robinson.
H. R. 8257. Grace F. Briggs.
H. R. 8260. Carrie S. Pierce.
H. R. 8261. Eliza Prody.
H. R. 8271 Mary W. McGuire.
H. R. 8274. Annie K. Doherty.
H. R. 8275. Rhoda Hart.
H. R. 8281. Orominah Bates.
H. R. 8287. Mary A. Egolf.
H. R. 8288. Ida Hall.
H. R. 8289. Sarah A. Thornburg.
H. R. 8290. Clifford Fiske.
H. R. 8291 Mary Gaffney.
H. R. 8293. Henry J. Robinson.
H. R. 8296. Mary A. Enderle.
H. R. 8299. Rosa E. Stephens.
H. R. 8302. Melinda Suggs.
H. R. 8310. Edward Zechman.
H. R. 8313. Margary Dotter.
H. R. 8317. Mary E. Applegate.
H. R. 8324. Delphina E. Blackwood.
H. R. 8327. Arminda Morgan.
H. R. 8338. Luren M. Carter.
H. R. 8342. Mary C. Triplett.
H. R. 8344. Clara Wirtz.
H. R. 8346. Julia A. Kresge.
H. R. 8347. Minnie E. Crow.
H. R. 8349. Martha Hammond.
H. R. 8358. Ella F. Young.
H. R. 8360. Cynthia Lillie.
H. R. 8362. Anna M. Weber.
H. R. 8363. Vesta J. Hutsell.
H. R. 8364. Betsy A. Burke.
H. R. 8365. Sarah A. Elliott.
H. R. 8383. Elmira L. Stone.
H. R. 8384. Amanda E. Fortney.
H. R. 8387. Harriet Sadler.
H. R. 8400. Lucy A. Cox.
H. R. 8403. Martha H. Raymond.
H. R. 8426. Caroline M. Fleming.
H. R. 8429. Elizabeth M. Cook.
H. R. 8430. Olive Hull.
H. R. 8431. Fannie F. Kennedy.
H. R. 8434. Rebecca J. Raburn.
H. R. 8435. Frederick J. Dum.
H. R. 8440. Louisa Jackson.
H. R. 8447. Mary Plummer.
H. R. 8448. Mandy Clapper.
H. R. 8451. Isaac Eads.
H. R. 8470. Mary D. Brown.
H. R. 8472. Elizabeth Conklin.
H. R. 8473. Polley Smith.
H. R. 8474. Mary E. Waitman.
H. R. 8483. Katie Thompson.
H. R. 8484. Matilda Tedlock.
H. R. 8496. Ray D. Ingersoll.
H. R. 8497. Isabel D. Mann.
H. R. 8504. Martha A. McNeer.
H. R. 8515. Della Elder.
H. R. 8516. John S. Nixon.
H. R. 8517. Elizabeth J. Stallings.
H. R. 8527. Sarah E. Bender.
H. R. 8534. Carrie Thompson.
H. R. 8537. Mary E. Metlin.
H. R. 8543. Harriet E. Brothers.
H. R. 8553. Elizabeth Secrist.
H. R. 8561. Mary A. Winn.
H. R. 8567. Alice Gormley.
H. R. 8569. Ella L. Norwood.
H. R. 8571. Emeline Harvey.
H. R. 8574. Adelaide M. Clark.
H. R. 8577. Sarah E. Doan.
H. R. 8590. Mary V. Sprague.
H. R. 8594. Hester A. McLuen.
H. R. 8596. Annie M. Marsh.
H. R. 8600. Lewis Grignon.
H. R. 8607. Elizabeth Hatch.
H. R. 8610. Harriet E. Goodale.
H. R. 8611. Susan M. Lambert.
H. R. 8612. Emily Sanders.
H. R. 8619. Eva L. Little.
H. R. 8621. Mary J. Wimbles.
H. R. 8624. Elizabeth M. Humphreys.
H. R. 8626. Susan K. Bentz.
H. R. 8631. Melissa Bigler.
H. R. 8632. Margaret E. Ulrich.
H. R. 8633. Sarah L. Shill.
H. R. 8634. Mary O. Shaw.
H. R. 8642. Erskine A. Cole, alias Charles Stickels.
H. R. 8648. Nancy Jane Bush.
H. R. 8649. Anna E. Ward.
H. R. 8669. Anna G. Murray.
H. R. 8670. Bella M. Getty.
H. R. 8675. Mary A. Mathewson.
H. R. 8691. Clarissa Stratton.
H. R. 8698. Kate G. Caton.
H. R. 8700. Effie F. Myers.
H. R. 8703. Belle Boots.
H. R. 8705. Kitty A. Freeman.
H. R. 8706. Jemima A. Taylor.
H. R. 8714. Jane F. Cochrane.
H. R. 8724. Julia F. Veats.
H. R. 8726. Julie Cowan.
H. R. 8729. Mary Stewart.
H. R. 8738. Marion L. Tyler.
H. R. 8739. Mary E. Goodsell.
H. R. 8742. Helen L. Huff.
H. R. 8750. Mary A. Bowman.
H. R. 8756. Emma Post.
H. R. 8760. Annie C. Frazee.
H. R. 8761. Rebecca Murray.
H. R. 8764. Lurettie L. Morse.
H. R. 8767. Rosaline E. Palmer.
H. R. 8772. Kate Irwin.
H. R. 8773. Augusta Chapman.
H. R. 8804. Elizabeth Corkett.
H. R. 8807. Mary H. Von Brandis.
H. R. 8808. Elizabeth A. Harrington
H. R. 8821. Mary L. Danforth.
H. R. 8822. Barbara Grant.
H. R. 8824. Catharine B. Bittle.
H. R. 8827. Laura B. Smith.
H. R. 8829. Theresa A. Hunter.
H. R. 8830. Harriet E. Gould.
H. R. 8831. Jeanette E. Ferris.
H. R. 8833. Daniel Burket.
H. R. 8846. Rohama Crosley.
H. R. 8847. Catharine S. Wakefield.
H. R. 8849. Almaria Hemstreet.
H. R. 8871. Elizabeth Thomas.
H. R. 8874. John Charleston.
H. R. 8877. Sarah J. Burns.
H. R. 8878. Ella Littlefield.
H. R. 8888. Mary Pfaff.
H. R. 8892. Mary Smith.
H. R. 8897. Sarah A. Bryan.
H. R. 8899. Sarah Hall.
H. R. 8900. Clarenda Brown.
H. R. 8903. Eva D. Fuller.
H. R. 8921. Isabella Rickman.
H. R. 8926. Susan Smitten.
H. R. 8927. Louesa Kontner.
H. R. 8948. Lydia A. Gossett.
H. R. 8950. Henry J. Andrews.
H. R. 8953. Elizabeth Croft.
H. R. 8967. Martha Thomas.
H. R. 8976. Jane S. Gillingham.
H. R. 8995. Ida J. Black.
H. R. 8999. Ann C. Platt.
H. R. 9090. Eliza A. O'Connor.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois offers committee amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. FULLER: On page 14, line 24, strike out the name "Isadore" and substitute in lieu thereof "Isadora."

On page 21, strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

On page 28, strike out lines 6 to 9, inclusive.

On page 40, line 19, strike out the word "betery" and substitute in lieu thereof the word "Battery."

On page 49, strike out lines 5 to 8, inclusive.

On page 65, strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RELIEF OF STARVING WOMEN AND CHILDREN OF GERMANY

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Government of the United States to make a gift of $10,000,000 to Germany with which to purchase foodstuffs for the women and children of Germany, who are said to be suffering for the want of sufficient food for their support and maintenance. From my point of view this proposition, for many reasons, is inexcusable and indefensible. It is clearly unconstitutional.

Article I, section 8, of the Constitution declares:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay debts, and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is very questionable whether any rights under the "general welfare" clause were ever intended or can be extended to embrace persons outside of these United States and its possessions who are not citizens of the United States. The question may also be asked how it would promote the general welfare of the United States to make a gift to the people of Germany of $10,000,000, when the German Government at this time owes the United States $255,000,000 for the occupation of the Rhine by the American soldiers, a debt it is amply able to pay but which it manifests no willingness to pay.

The proponents of the proposition probably know or care nothing about the Constitution, though the supporters of the same in the House base their support upon the ground that the "general welfare" clause of the Constitution includes authority to make this gift. For this reason I will not undertake a general discussion of this question. It is only necessary, as it seems to me, to quote Judge Story on the Constitution, who is one of the strongest defenders of the "welfare clause," to show that giving this money to Germany can not be included in it. To come under this "general welfare" clause such welfare must be that which affects the whole people, not a part, not a class, but all the people. It must be general, not partial or special. A law to assist the people of a state or a class of people would not be "general" but "special welfare." In his work on the Constitution he says:

A power to lay taxes for the common defense and general welfare of the United States is not in common sense a general power. It is limited to those objects. It can not constitutionally transcend them. If the defense proposed by a tax be not the common defense of the United States, if the welfare be not general but special or local as contradistinguished from national, it is not within the scope of the Constitution. If the tax be not proposed for the common defense or general welfare, but for other objects wholly extraneous—as, for instance, for propagating Mohammedanism among the Turks or giving aids and subsidies to a foreign nation to build palaces for its kings or erect monuments to its heroes—it would be wholly indefensible upon constitutional principles.

Congress has no right to give away the people's money. The Government owns no money. It has not a dollar. The money which is in the Treasury belongs to the people. The only way it gets any money is by taxing the people. If $10,000,000 is given to Germany, it will be the people's money, and it is taking it away from them without their consent. It is not only a misappropriation of the people's money, but, being an exercise of assumed power, it is usurpation. Unless there is some stop to this sort of legislation there will be a revolution in this country which no power on earth can terminate until and unless Members of Congress observe the Constitution of this Republic which, with uplifted hand, they have sworn to support.

In 1914 when cotton was selling at 4 and 5 cents per pound, the farmers of Georgia and other cotton-growing States appealed to Congress for temporary assistance to enable them to tide over the financial storm which then confronted them. Agents from the cotton-growing States came to Washington to plead the cause of the people before the President and Congress. They were told to assist the farmers as requested was class legislation and that Congress had no authority to enact class legislation. These people did not ask the Government to give them anything, or to make them a present of any money. They only asked that some machinery be set up by Congress or put in motion by the President under existing laws by which they could borrow money to pay their debts and support their families until the storm passed by, and yet no help was given, no hope was held out, and nothing was done, but now a Republican Congress, supported by many Democrats, sees no class-legislation ghost to frighten them, and while unwilling to make a loan to our own people when in distress, are willing to give the people of Germany $10,000,000. Such inconsistency is repulsive to me.

The German people can take care of their suffering women and children without this gift. Mr. Philip A. Kauffman, a noted writer who has been to Germany, in an article in the Washington Star says:

Germans are leading lives of luxury and extravagant ease and comfort, not in Germany alone but in every country of the European Continent.

A member of the American Consulate Service abroad estimates that Germans traveling abroad for pleasure have spent 10,000,000 American dollars.

The Dawes committee reports that millions and millions of dollars belonging to the German people have been removed from Germany. Reginald McKenna, formerly Chancellor of the Exchequer, states in the United States alone there is no less than $1,300,000,000 invested, outside of the German holdings in England, Switzerland, Italy, Holland, Spain, the Scandinavian countries, South America, and the Orient.

Hon. A. P. ANDREW, of Massachusetts, in a speech delivered in the House said:

I was in Germany last October and spent some time in the Ruhr. I found food in variety and abundance everywhere in the restaurants. I talked with many Germans of different walks in life. And the conclusion that I came to was that Germany was suffering not from a lack of food or wealth, but from its maladministration or maldistribution. The country as a whole had more wealth than it ever had before.

Maximilian Harden, a great German editor, made this statement in an interview published in the American Hebrew:

Germany is literally crammed with food. Half of last year's harvest is still untouched. If I were Mr. Hoover, I would not send a single bushel of grain until the stocks now in Germany were consumed.

A New York Republican Congressman is the author of this bill. It is generally believed that politics is behind the proposition and if this were not a presidential election year this bill would never have been introduced, the end to be accomplished being to capture the German vote not only in the State of New York, but in other States where the German vote is a factor. One of the issues of a Washington newspaper entitled "The Woman Patriot," which is "dedicated to the defense of the family and State," entertains this view. In the issue which is devoted to the proposed gift, this paper says:

The appropriation of $10,000,000 of the American people's money in the Federal Treasury as a political gift to a foreign nation, and as a political bribe to voters of one nationality in the United States, is the most obvious outrage on the Constitution and the taxpayers of the United States, and if not killed in the Senate, or vetoed by the President, or stopped by the courts, this outrage will serve as precedent for any other misappropriation of funds the most unscrupulous political corruptionist may desire.

If in good faith this gift is to be made in the name of charity, then I contend the mothers and children who are suffering for the necessities of life and the poor of our own country should be the first objects of our compassion and should have the first call upon this Congress.

The mothers in this country whose sons were called to engage in the World War, many of whom fought and died to defend it, are entitled by every rule of fair play and justice over the mothers of Germany whose sons fought and destroyed human lives in order to conquer it.

The mothers in this country gave their sons to engage in this war in order to keep the world free, while the people of Germany willingly sent their sons to the battle lines in order to enslave it.

While I am not unresponsive to human suffering, wherever it may exist and whatever may be the cause, yet I can not conscientiously reach the conclusion that the money of the people of the United States should be sent to a foreign nation and to an antagonistic people for any purpose whatsoever.

If the situation in Germany presents a real case of charity which their Government can not cope with, the people of this country can give out of their own pockets and of their own means, as they have heretofore frequently done, particularly when the earthquake broke upon Japan.

For Congress to give away the money of the people to a foreign country for any purpose is illegal.

To give the people's money away to a foreign country in the name of charity is likewise illegal.

To give the people's money to Germany in the name of charity to serve political purposes is not only illegal but infamous. [Applause.]

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes on the condition of the Treasury under the new revenue bill. I think it is quite an important matter and a number of the Members of the House have asked me about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the House, because I think the matter on which I am speaking so briefly is of sufficient importance that all the Members would like to hear it. This morning the Washington Post carried a statement of mine with reference to the effect of the new revenue bill upon the Treasury receipts and especially upon the question of whether the bill would create a deficit. One statement, however, is made in the newspaper article which is not entirely correct and which I did not make. I gave out a written statement to the reporters, part of which was published and part of which was not. The statement is contained in the newspaper reports that I said the Treasury would have a surplus of $138,000,000 for the next fiscal year, which is not correct. That was not my statement. It could, however, be reasonably inferred from my statement that we would have a surplus, but not the amount stated.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the statement which I gave to the papers may be read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The gloomy predictions for a deficit under the revenue bill as agreed to in conference will not be realized. I have obtained recent figures based upon actual Treasury receipts and also an estimate made by the Actuary of the Treasury for the fiscal year of 1925.

The original estimate of the surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, was $329,000,000. I am now advised by the Treasury Actuary that it will exceed that by more than $100,000,000. Deducting from that estimate the amount of the 25 per cent reduction of this year's taxes, which will be taken off in this fiscal year and which will be about $120,000,000, there will still be around $300,000,000 surplus carried over into the fiscal year of 1925, much more than sufficient to pay the amount of the annual bonus expenditures for the next two years, although those are much larger than the average annual bonus cost, the first year being the largest of all.

For the fiscal year 1925 the original estimates of the Treasury, made early last fall, are also far too small. In my judgment the customs receipts will only be a little less than those for this year, in which event they would be about $50,000,000 more than was originally estimated. But if they are only a little larger, I am advised by the actuary, that we may expect our receipts from taxes to show such increase that if our Budget estimates were followed the surplus for the fiscal year 1925 would be $138,000,000. This, of course, does not allow for a bonus payment, but I have already shown that the surplus of this fiscal year will be ample to take care of the first two years of the bonus. In this connection it should be remembered that the reduction of taxes in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, will not be as large as it will be in the next fiscal year. On the other hand, by that time we may expect a further increase in our receipts due to the natural increase of business and the stimulus afforded by a tax reduction which in the fiscal year 1925, although not as large as it will be in the fiscal year 1926, will amount to over $400,000,000.

While we can reasonably expect this increase, it is too early now to make any reliable estimates for 1926 beyond the fact, as I have already shown, that on the present basis we will carry over into that year a surplus after allowing for some increases over the expenditures as originally estimated, including the amount required for the bonus. On the whole, I do not anticipate any deficit for that year.

I note that some fear has been expressed as to the effect of the new estate taxes. The Treasury Actuary asserts that the increased payments caused by the change will only aggregate $10,000,000 per annum, which is scarcely any more than could be expected from the increase in the value of the estates subject to this tax as the wealth of the country increases.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This article is in accord with statements made to me over the phone by the Government actuary and a table of estimates for the fiscal year 1925 prepared by him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to also put in the RECORD, without reading, the statement for the fiscal year 1925 under the new law, as prepared by the Treasury Actuary.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman's time be extended two minutes more so we may have it read. I would like to hear the statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Estimated receipts, fiscal year 1925

Customs		$500,000,000
Internal revenue:
Individual and corporation income tax	$1,650,000,000
Miscellaneous taxes	814,000,000
Total internal revenue taxes		2,464,000,000
Miscellaneous taxes		473,000,000
Total ordinary receipts		3,437,000,000
Expenditures chargeable against ordinary receipts (Budget estimate of Dec. 3, 1923, and not including additional expenditures authorized or to be authorized since that date)		3,298,100,000
Surplus		138,900,000

To this surplus should be added whatever taxes are collected by the department on account of income and profits taxes for previous years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the estimate of receipts under the tariff in the statement just read, in my judgment, is at least $50,000,000 too small and, as I have already stated, the surplus of $138,000,000, as the gentleman will see, does not provide for the bonus, but I showed in the previous statement that the first two years of the bonus could easily be taken care of out of the surplus for the fiscal year 1924, ending June 30 next. Nor does this provide for some additional appropriations that have been made, but it is sufficient to cover them.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Not only that, but may I suggest to the gentleman that the taxes collected for back years, if they are in proportion to the estimate of the Treasury, will amount to at least $300,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not recall how much the Treasury originally estimated for such collection. I am informed by the actuary that the original estimates have been very much exceeded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes so that I may ask a question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WATKINS. From these figures, is it not indicated that there would have been sufficient revenue to take care of the Bursum bill if it had not been vetoed, which would have required a little over $50,000,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I could not say about that. I have not calculated to that extent, but I do not think that there would be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman estimated how much the figures would be increased if in aiding the farmers we would permit the manufacture of 2.75 beer? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; it is a question for information.

M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

Mr. RUBEY rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. When we adopted the rule the other day fixing the time of debate on the Haugen-McNary bill there were 15 hours given. This was divided among four Members, and we had 3 hours and 45 minutes apiece. I find it is absolutely impossible to accommodate the gentlemen who want to speak on this bill, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate on the Haugen-McNary bill be extended one hour, to be equally divided among the four gentlemen controlling the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time originally fixed for debate on the Haugen-McNary bill be extended one hour, to be divided equally among the gentlemen controlling the time. Is there objection?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman not think it would be better to get on to the reading of the bill?

Mr. RUBEY. There are gentlemen who are very much interested in this bill and who want to discuss it, and I think we ought to give them an opportunity to do so.

Mr. SPROUL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9033) declaring an emergency in respect of certain agricultural commodities, to promote equality between agricultural commodities and other commodities, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9033.

The question was being taken, and the committee was dividing, when,

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 330, nays 2, not voting 101, as follows:

YEAS—330

Ackerman	Cole, Iowa	Fulmer	Johnson, Wash.
Aldrich	Cole, Ohio	Funk	Johnson, W. Va.
Allen	Collier	Gallivan	Jones
Allgood	Collins	Garber	Jost
Almon	Colton	Gardner, Ind.	Kearns
Andrew	Connally, Tex.	Garner, Tex.	Keller
Arnold	Connery	Garrett, Tenn.	Kelly
Aswell	Cook	Garrett, Tex.	Kent
Ayres	Cooper, Ohio	Gasque	Ketcham
Bacon	Cooper, Wis.	Geran	Kincheloe
Bankhead	Corning	Gilbert	Kindred
Barbour	Cramton	Glatfelter	King
Beck	Crisp	Goldsborough	Knutson
Beedy	Croll	Graham, Pa.	Kopp
Beers	Crosser	Green, Iowa	Kurtz
Berger	Crowther	Greene, Mass.	Kvale
Black, N. Y.	Cullen	Greenwood	LaGuardia
Black, Tex.	Cummings	Griest	Lampert
Blanton	Dallinger	Griffin	Lanham
Bloom	Darrow	Hadley	Lankford
Bowling	Davis, Minn.	Hammer	Larsen, Ga.
Box	Davis, Tenn	Hardy	Larson, Minn.
Boyce	Denison	Hastings	Lazaro
Boylan	Dickinson, Iowa	Haugen	Lea, Calif.
Brand, Ga.	Dickinson, Mo.	Hawes	Leatherwood
Brand, Ohio	Doughton	Hawley	Leavitt
Briggs	Dowell	Hayden	Lee, Ga.
Browne, N. J.	Doyle	Hersey	Lehlbach
Browne, Wis.	Driver	Hickey	Lineberger
Browning	Dyer	Hill, Ala.	Linthicum
Brumm	Edmonds	Hill, Md.	Longworth
Buchanan	Elliott	Hill, Wash.	Lowrey
Bulwinkle	Evans, Iowa	Hoch	Lozier
Burdick	Evans, Mont.	Holaday	Luce
Burtness	Fairchild	Hooker	Lyon
Burton	Fairfield	Howard, Nebr.	McClintic
Busby	Faust	Huddleston	McDuffie
Byrns, Tenn.	Favrot	Hudson	McKenzie
Campbell	Fenn	Hudspeth	McKeown
Canfield	Fitzgerald	Hull, Iowa	McLaughlin, Mich.
Cannon	Foster	Hull, Morton D.	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Carter	Frear	Humphreys	McLeod
Casey	Free	Jacobstein	McNulty
Chindblom	Freeman	James	McReynolds
Christopherson	French	Jeffers	McSweeney
Clague	Frothingham	Johnson, Ky.	MacGregor
Clancy	Fulbright	Johnson, S. Dak.	MacLafferty
Clarke, N. Y.	Fuller	Johnson, Tex.	Magee, N. Y.
Magee, Pa.	Porter	Shreve	Tinkham
Major, Ill.	Pou	Simmons	Treadway
Major, Mo.	Prall	Sinclair	Tucker
Manlove	Purnell	Sinnott	Underhill
Mansfield	Quin	Sites	Underwood
Mapes	Ragon	Smith	Upshaw
Martin	Rainey	Smithwick	Vaile
Merritt	Raker	Snell	Vestal
Michener	Ramseyer	Snyder	Vincent, Mich.
Miller, Wash.	Rankin	Speaks	Vinson, Ky.
Mills	Rathbone	Spearing	Voigt
Minahan	Rayburn	Sproul, Ill.	Wainwright
Montague	Reece	Sproul, Kans.	Ward, N. C.
Moore, Ga.	Reid, Ill.	Steagall	Watkins
Moore, Ill.	Richards	Stedman	Watres
Moore, Ohio	Roach	Stephens	Watson
Moore, Va.	Robinson, Iowa	Stevenson	Weaver
Morehead	Robsion, Ky.	Strong, Kans.	Wefald
Morgan	Rogers, Mass.	Summers, Wash.	Wertz
Morris	Romjue	Sumners, Tex.	White, Kans.
Morrow	Rouse	Swank	Williams, Ill.
Murphy	Rubey	Swing	Williams, Mich.
Nelson, Me.	Sabath	Swoope	Wilson, Ind.
Nelson, Wis.	Sanders, Ind.	Taber	Wilson, La.
Newton, Minn.	Sanders, N. Y.	Tague	Wilson, Miss.
Newton, Mo.	Sandlin	Taylor, Tenn.	Wingo
O'Connor, N. Y.	Schafer	Taylor, W. Va.	Wolff
O'Sullivan	Schall	Thatcher	Woodruff
Oldfield	Schneider	Thomas, Ky.	Woodrum
Oliver, Ala.	Scott	Thomas, Okla.	Wright
Paige	Sears, Fla.	Thompson	Wurzbach
Parker	Sears, Nebr.	Tillman	Young
Parks, Ark.	Seger	Tilson	Zihlman
Peery	Shallenberger	Timberlake
Phillips	Sherwood	Tincher

NAYS—2

Bland	Deal

NOT VOTING—101

Abernethy	Eagan	Michaelson	Sanders, Tex.
Anderson	Fish	Miller, Ill.	Stalker
Anthony	Fisher	Milligan	Stengle
Bacharach	Fleetwood	Mooney	Strong, Pa.
Barkley	Fredericks	Moores, Ind.	Sullivan
Begg	Gibson	Morin	Sweet
Bell	Gifford	Mudd	Taylor, Colo.
Bixler	Graham, Ill.	Nolan	Temple
Boies	Harrison	O'Brien	Tydings
Britten	Howard, Okla.	O'Connell, N. Y.	Vare
Buckley	Hull, Tenn.	O'Connell, R. I.	Vinson, Ga.
Butler	Hull, William E.	O'Connor, La.	Ward, N. Y.
Byrnes, S. C.	Kahn	Oliver, N. Y.	Wason
Cable	Kendall	Park, Ga.	Weller
Carew	Kerr	Patterson	Welsh
Celler	Kiess	Pearey	White, Me.
Clark, Fla.	Kunz	Perkins	Williams, Tex.
Cleary	Langley	Perlman	Williamson
Connolly, Pa.	Lilly	Quayle	Winslow
Curry	Lindsay	Ransley	Winter
Davey	Little	Reed, Ark.	Wood
Dempsey	Logan	Reed, N. Y.	Wyant
Dickstein	McFadden	Reed, W. Va.	Yates
Dominick	McSwain	Rogers, N. H.
Drane	Madden	Rosenbloom
Drewry	Mead	Salmon

So the motion was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. White of Maine with Mr. Fisher.
Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Kunz.
Mr. Wood with Mr. Reed of Arkansas.
Mr. Cable with Mr. Dickstein.
Mr. Bacharach with Mr. Mooney.
Mr. Anthony with Mr. Salmon.
Mr. Welsh with Mr. McSwain.
Mr. Little with Mr. Williams of Texas.
Mr. Ward of New York with Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina.
Mr. Mudd with Mr. O'Connor of Louisiana.
Mr. Curry with Mr. Logan.
Mr. Madden with Mr. Bell.
Mr. Fredericks with Mr. Stengle.
Mr. Gifford with Mr. Vinson of Georgia.
Mr. Temple with Mr. Mead.
Mr. Perlman with Mr. Kerr.
Mr. Yates with Mr. Eagan.
Mr. Britten with Mr. Lilly.
Mr. Fairchild with Mr. Cleary.
Mr. Winter with Mr. Oliver of New York.
Mr. Moores of Indiana with Mr. Carew.
Mr. Graham of Illinois with Mr. Weller.
Mr. Kahn with Mr. Clark of Florida.
Mr. Butler with Mr. Park of Georgia.
Mr. Wason with Mr. Rogers of New Hampshire.
Mr. Fish with Mr. Buckley.
Mr. Connolly of Pennsylvania with Mr. Celler.
Mr. Patterson with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Fleetwood with Mr. Barkley.
Mr. Kendall with Mr. Howard of Oklahoma.
Mr. Winslow with Mr. Harrison.
Mr. McFadden with Mr. Tydings.
Mr. Reed of New York with Mr. Dominick.
Mr. Boise with Mr. Abernethy.
Mr. Morin with Mr. Quayle.
Mr. Ransley with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Gibson with Mr. Drewry.
Mr. Vare with Mr. Milligan.
Mr. William E. Hull with Mr. Lindsay.
Mr. Wyant with Mr. Hull of Tennessee.
Mr. Kiess with Mr. Sullivan.
Mr. Stalker with Mr. O'Connell of Rhode Island.

Mr. Begg with Mr. Davey.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. O'Connell of New York.
Mr. Perkins with Mr. Sanders of Texas.
Mr. Bixler with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Sweet with Mr. Garrett of Texas.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON THE TAX BILL

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a number of gentlemen have asked me this morning when it is likely that the conference report on the tax bill will be taken up. I have just heard that the Senate intends to act on it on Saturday. Therefore, if that is done, the first business on Monday morning will be the consideration of the conference report on the tax bill. This being the last day which the District of Columbia will have under the rule, I intend to ask unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. VOIGT. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Agricultural Committee of the House, of which I am a member, has had under consideration this and other proposed farm legislation for two months, and was in executive session considering this bill for over two weeks. I entered upon this hearing with an open mind and with only one purpose in view, and that was to evolve a bill that might redound to the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of the American farmer in upbuilding the agricultural interests of this country. No one knows the precarious condition of agriculture better than I, and no Member of Congress is more anxious to vote for legislation that will serve this purpose any more than I.

I have the honor to represent in this House one of the greatest diversified districts in the United States, and I am anxious to see a bill passed that will do something for the farmer and not to the farmer. This bill, in my judgment, is the most complicated, far-reaching, uncertain piece of legislation that has been proposed to this House in 50 years. [Applause.] The complexities of it, both national and international, no human mind can grasp. In order to define my position toward this bill and other farm legislation I ask your indulgence in making a personal allusion.

I was born and reared on a farm in Kentucky and in the tobacco district. My boyhood days were somewhat uneventful, and can be summed up in one line of Gray's Elegy, "The short and simple annals of the poor." Most of my boyhood days were spent in the tobacco fields raising tobacco and selling it at such a low price that left me in debt at the end of the year. I had an ambition to obtain an education, so that I might place myself in a position to hold some office of honor and trust, and thereby render some service to my country and my fellow men. My greatest obstacle in obtaining an education was the question of finance, and I, together with other tobacco raisers of the "dark patch," was ground down by the iron heel of the American and Imperial Tobacco Cos. This sad experience not only makes every impulse of my being in sympathy with the farmer but almost makes me resentful when I contemplate those hardships which were so unjustly visited upon me. In view of this experience I could have no other purpose to serve but to vote for some legislation that would help the farmer. I realize that agricultural interests in almost every part of this country are in a precarious condition, and that this condition is brought about by no fault of the farmer, and I want to do something to alleviate his condition.

I have studied this bill more than any bill since I have been in Congress, and if you will indulge me for a while I will try to tell you what it is. It proposes to create a corporation consisting of five members, with the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman. The other members are to be appointed one from each of the three Federal land-bank districts, as numbered in the bill, by the President of the United States, with confirmation by the Senate. These four members are to receive a salary of $10,000 each per year, and to employ whatever force that is necessary to enforce the provisions of this bill and to fix the salaries of each. This corporation is organized for the purpose of stimulating the price of agricultural products, of which we produce a surplus in this country. The products mentioned in this bill consist of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any other food products of cattle, sheep, or swine, and under section 2 of the bill, when this corporation finds that there is an exportable surplus of any one of these products and that product is not bringing the ratio price, which I shall later discuss, in the domestic market, it is then the duty of the corporation to immediately certify this fact to the President of the United States, and when that is done the bill provides that the President shall by proclamation declare that a special emergency exists as to such agricultural product.

How does the corporation arrive at the ratio price? Let us take wheat, and the same process is used in arriving at the ratio price of every other commodity mentioned in the bill. The corporation first gets through the Agricultural and Labor Departments the average price of wheat during the years 1905 to 1914, inclusive. It then gets the average price of 404 other commodities from 1905 to 1914, and that is on the basis of 100. It then gets the current all-commodity price of these 404 commodities. Then the ratio price of wheat is to the average commodity price of wheat from 1905 to 1914 as the current all-commodity price of the 404 commodities is to the all-commodity price of the 404 commodities from 1905 to 1914 on the basis of 100: Wheat is now selling around $1 per bushel. The ratio price under these circumstances would be about $1.50 per bushel, but the farmer does not get all the $1.50, because all the loss in the sale of the export surplus and the cost of administration of this bill, with a horde of Federal officers invading, if necessary, every home in the country, comes out of the farmer first. Still the proponents say that this is a farmers' bill. It is a packers' bill, a millers' bill, and a bill for the big wheat dealer. They do not suffer any loss—not on your life! The five big packers of this country, with 200 other small packers, have to-day processed meat that is worth hundreds of billions of dollars in cold storage which they purchased at the present low price of livestock. When the ratio price is declared on hogs, for instance, it is proposed to increase the price from about 7 cents per pound to 11½ cents per pound, and when this increase is established these packers are ready to deliver it to the corporation or sell it to the public at the rate of 11½ cents per pound, which will make them a profit from $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 overnight.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am sorry, but not now. The big flour mills of the country have hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of flour on hand now made out of $1 wheat, and the large grain elevators have on hand over 50,000,000 bushels of wheat bought at $1. When the corporation establishes the ratio price raising the price of wheat from $1 to $1.50 per bushel, and flour in proportion, they will overnight unload on this corporation or the public their surplus products, making a net profit of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and you and I and the farmers, laboring people, and other consumers of the country will pay it.

Not a packer nor a packer's lawyer appeared before the Agricultural Committee in all these hearings protesting against the passage of this bill. When we had under consideration the packers' bill, which we passed at the last session of Congress, these packers and their attorneys, and they have the smartest ones in the world, were before our committee for weeks protesting against its passage. Even Mr. Wilson, of the Wilson Packing Co., was before our committee for about two days protesting. So you can see why the packers would not seriously oppose this bill. There is one fundamental proposition upon which all of us agree and which should be taken into consideration here. That is, when you increase the price of a product you not only stimulate its production but you curtail its consumption. You will remember that in 1922 hogs were bringing a good price. This stimulated the production to such an extent that there were 14,000,000 more head of hogs slaughtered in 1923 than in 1922. Of course, the more you stimulate the production of a commodity in this bill the greater will be the exportable surplus, and, therefore, the greater will be the equalization fee which the farmer has to pay and the less he will receive for that product.

In the year 1921 we exported over 309,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour. And the more you stimulate the price of wheat the greater will be our exportable surplus and the greater will be the loss to the producer. I have told you how the corporation will establish the ratio price. It will then establish the equalization fee, and here is where it gets the farmer. The corporation will make an estimate of what its loss is going to be on the exportable surplus which it will buy here at the ratio price and sell at the world's price. And I remind you that the corporation will have to buy all the products that are offered it. It will then make an estimate of what it will cost to administer this law, and when these estimates are made it will then establish what is called the equalization fee, every dollar of which must be paid by the producer. Proponents say that this is not a price fixing bill. It is nothing but a price fixing bill, and price fixing has proved a failure not only in this country but in every country that has tried it.

The bill plainly provides that the corporation must buy at not less than the ratio price of each commodity and can not sell any of it in this country at less than the ratio price. Then all the loss that accrues on its investments, together with the expenses, is assessed against the farmer in the form of scrip. Of course, the bill uses a little softer word than scrip; it is now called a receipt. After the ratio price is fixed upon the various articles, then every transaction in an article upon which the ratio price is fixed the buyer of the article must retain the equalization fee and give to the seller a receipt for same. If the seller refuses to accept the receipt or the buyer refuses or fails to tender a receipt—and I ask the advocates of this bill to say whether I am wrong—then both the seller and the buyer are subject to arrest by a Federal officer and to be taken to the Federal court and fined not over $5,000 or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both. I remember how the Republicans of Congress and throughout the country yelled and applauded President Harding when he said he wanted "more business in Government and less Government in business." What are you going to do with this bill? I believe there would be at least 50,000 extra officeholders appointed, running over the country, meddling in almost every transaction that the farmer makes, arresting farmers and purchasers and taking them to the Federal court because they refused to accept or offer the equalization receipt. And do not forget that the salaries and expenses of all these officers comes out of the farmers' products in the equalization fee he has to pay every time he sells a commodity upon which the corporation has levied a fee. No one before the committee could guess within a million dollars annually what it would cost to administer this law. I believe that the American people are getting tired of the Federal Government and Federal officeholders trying to run their business, and I believe the American farmers would resent the interference of Federal officeholders under this bill.

While this is a price-fixing measure, yet do not overlook the fact that the farmer is not guaranteed the ratio price. Not only the loss on the exportable surplus on his products sustained by the corporation and the cost of the administration of the law, including the salaries and expenses of the horde of Federal officeholders, must first be taken out, but the freight upon his products to the central market must also be deducted. You will understand that when the corporation establishes a ratio price upon these commodities that price will obtain only in the central markets of the country.

I believe that if the price of wheat should be stimulated as the proponents of this bill claim that within a year there could easily be an exportable surplus of wheat of from 350,000,000 to 400,000,000 bushels. I come from a tobacco district. As you all know, the great tobacco States of this Union are Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. And the tobacco growers have to plant the best land they have in tobacco. Tobacco is not included in this bill, and therefore the tobacco raisers will not be benefited at all. So if wheat becomes more profitable to raise than tobacco, what is going to keep the tobacco farmers from planting their tobacco land in wheat, and wheat can be grown on practically every acre of land where tobacco has grown in these States. The potato and corn growers will do the same. You can thus see that there can be enough exportable surplus of wheat in this country to make the equalization fee so large that it will take all the profits the farmer might obtain from raising wheat to pay this fee.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I can not now. This corporation will sell its exportable surplus on the markets of the world in Europe, which will permit the laboring people of Europe to get the benefit of it at a low price and the costs of it will come out of the American farmer, whom you say you are going to help under this bill.

Everyone who has studied this bill knows that it is absolutely impossible for it to benefit the corn raisers of the country. Why do I say that? Every bushel of corn that is raised in this country, 94.5 per cent of it, is consumed on the farm and never goes into interstate commerce, so under the provisions of this bill not a cent of the equalization fee will be paid on the corn consumed on the farm.

The other 5½ per cent is practically all exported, which amounted in 1922 to over $117,000,000 worth. So where is the equalization fee coming from to pay the loss sustained by the corporation in buying the corn here at the ratio price and selling it at the world's price? There is only one source from which it can come, and that is out of the $200,000,000, which will be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States under the provisions of this bill. So you see that within a short while, if the corporation should try to make this bill workable as to corn, it would soon go broke. I can imagine that the corn farmer will not be very enthusiastic about this bill when he learns the true facts about it so far as it pertains to his product.

Now, let us take meat. You can not export cattle, hogs, or sheep on foot. The packers know that. So what power under the bill has the corporation to process meat for export? If you will read section 42 of the bill, you will see that the only power the corporation has is to acquire the rights of operation facilities for processing and to make contracts for the processing of such agricultural commodities. So the corporation will have to have Federal employees in all the stockyards of the country to buy the thousands of head of hogs, cattle, and sheep when they come in. Then when the stock shall have been bought the corporation will go to the packers and ask how much they will charge to process this meat. Suppose they say 6 cents per pound. The corporation of course will say "We can not pay this." The packers will say, "You process it yourself, then." What facilities will the corporation have to process meat? None, of course. Do not you see that the corporation is at the mercy of the packers, and will have to pay them their price, all of which will come out of the equalization fee paid by the farmer? The corporation has one other alternative in the matter. Under section 44 (a) of the bill the corporation has the power to buy processed meat from the packers, but if it does buy the processed meat it is compelled to pay the packer the ratio price for it. Then the corporation, of course, will be compelled unless it can sell it here at not less than the ratio price, to export the processed meat to the countries in Europe and sell it at the world's price. However, as soon as the ship lands in any European country with this meat the five big packers will have their representatives there and will say to the corporation, "We are now ready to buy back our meat from you which you bought at the ratio price, but we will pay you only the world's price."

The loss of this transaction, as usual, comes out of the farmer. These five packers have in the European countries over 28 agencies with their cold storages and other facilities to take care of and sell the processed meat in the world's market. I can see the representatives of these five packers at every European seaport looking with longing eyes for the ships from the United States laden with processed meat which the packers sold to the corporation at the ratio price, and ready, willing, and anxious to buy it at the world's price so they can make another enormous profit on it. The pathos of it all is that the farmers which this bill is supposed to help will pay all the loss.

My opinion is that there will never be a ratio price declared upon beef, because the report of the Tariff Commission shows, under date of April 11, 1924, that we imported cattle and cattle products in the year 1923 to the value of over $65,000,000, and exported only to the value of a little over $25,000,000, so there will be no exportable surplus of beef and therefore no ratio price declared on it. This was put in the bill to fool the cattle raisers of the country. This same proposition applies to sheep also. For, in 1923, according to the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, we exported 2,000,000 pounds of mutton and imported 6,000,000. It can not apply to wool, because there has never been a day since you and I were born but what two-thirds of the wool consumed in this country was imported. Oh, my friends, these articles were put in this bill for vote-getting purposes only.

However, I want to call your attention to a significant fact: Under section 301 of this bill the President of the United States has the power not only to fix a prohibitive tariff but to place an embargo upon any and all commodities mentioned in this bill, or any derivative thereof, or any competitive substitute therefor. America is a great shoe manufacturing country. And as outrageous and iniquitous as the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill is, yet it places no duty on hides. Yet, when this bill becomes a law, the President will not only have the power, but, in my judgment, he will be compelled to put a prohibitive tariff or embargo on hides. The direct result will be that the price of shoes of the American people will increase from 10 per cent to 25 per cent. I presume that seven-eighths of all the hides of this country are owned by the packers. Therefore they will receive another generous gift and benefit by reason of this law to the cost of the American public who wear shoes.

I want to give you a concrete illustration, and I want it to apply to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], because he says he is not only a wheat farmer but that he is very much for this bill and has spoken for it. Let us take his neighbor who lives across the fence from his farm. This neighbor has 20 fat hogs for sale. The local hog buyer comes to the neighbor and says, "I want to buy your hogs. What will you take for them?" This neighbor will say: "The ratio price, to wit, 11½ cents per pound." The buyer will say, "I can not pay this price for them." The neighbor will say, "That is the price that has been fixed by the corporation under the McNary-Haugen bill." "But," the buyer will say, "That price was fixed at the central market at Kansas City, and you are 300 miles, perhaps, from the central market. The freight rates on your hogs will have to come out of that. Also, the corporation has levied an equalization fee to pay for the operation of the law, including the loss on exportable surplus of meat, and it will have to come out of this price. Also, you can not ship these hogs yourself, because you do not have a carload of them." Remember the hog buyer does not have to pay the ratio price, but has a right under this bill to buy them from the farmer as cheap as he can. The buyer then buys the hogs at practically his own price, because the neighbor is not accessible to the central market. He will then retain from the neighbor the equalization fee and tenders the neighbor the scrip for the equalization fee. The neighbor will protest and say that he wants all of his selling price in cash. The buyer will say, "It is against the law for me to pay you the equalization fee in cash, and if I do not give you this scrip and if you refuse to take it, a Federal officer will come here and arrest you and me both and take us to Federal court and fine us not over $5,000 and not less than one year imprisonment, or both." The neighbor will say: "I saw two of these Federal officers in this neighborhood yesterday. Who is paying their salaries and expenses?" The buyer will say, "You and the rest of the farmers who are selling products upon which a ratio price has been fixed." The buyer finally pays him the agreed price, less the equalization fee, and gives him a receipt for it and takes the hogs.

The neighbor then goes to his town to buy shoes for himself and family for the winter. He begins to price the shoes and finds that they have increased from 10 to 20 per cent in price. He asks the merchant what is the cause of this increase; the merchant will tell him that there has been recently placed a tariff or embargo upon hides and that the packers of the country have increased, by reason of this tariff or embargo, the price of hides to such an extent that the shoe manufacturer had to increase the price of his shoes. He spends all the money he received for his hogs for shoes for himself and family and goes home. When he gets home he is informed by his wife that they are out of flour. The neighbor then goes over to the farm of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], and tells Mr. TINCHER he wants to buy some of his wheat. Mr. TINCHER, of course, will be anxious to sell his wheat at the ratio price, but his neighbor will inform Mr. TINCHER that he has spent all the money he received for his hogs for shoes for his family and the only thing he has with which to pay for the wheat is the scrip he received from the hog buyer. "Oh," Mr. TINCHER will say, "I don't want the scrip; and, besides, it is nonnegotiable." The neighbor will say, "I didn't want the scrip for my hogs, but the hog buyer told me if I didn't take it I would be violating the law and subject to a fine and imprisonment." Mr. TINCHER will be bound to say, "That is true." The neighbor will then ask Mr. TINCHER if he did not vote for the McNary-Haugen bill which compelled him to take the scrip for his hogs. Mr. TINCHER will tell him, of course, that he did and that he spoke for the bill. The neighbor will then ask Mr. TINCHER what must he do with the scrip. Mr. TINCHER can only tell him, "You must hold it and perhaps after a while, if there is anything left after paying the cost of the administration of the law the corporation may pay you a little something for it." The neighbor will ask Mr. TINCHER what the scrip is worth. Mr. TINCHER will be bound to tell him, "I don't know. It may not be worth anything." The farmer sad and disheartened will then go home without his wheat and relate these facts to his good wife, and I am sure when he has told her the facts there will be one joyous chorus of the family go up and in one accord they will all say, "Glory to TINCHER in the highest, peace on earth and good will to the 'Merely-Hoggin' bill." [Applause.]

There will be authorized to be appropriated the sum of $200,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States which will represent the entire capital of this corporation. This will be the only asset the corporation will have to buy anywhere from $800,000,000 to $850,000,000 worth of the exportable surplus commodities mentioned in this bill annually. I want you to understand that the corporation will be compelled to buy all the commodities that are offered it upon which a ratio price has been fixed. This means that the $200,000,000 will not be a drop in the bucket, and the proponents of this bill know it, with which to properly finance this corporation. But in order to hide their faces on that proposition there is a provision in the bill giving this corporation the right to sell bonds and notes to five times that amount, but it is specifically provided that the Government shall not assume any obligation for the payment of the notes or bonds, and that the notes and bonds and the income from them are subject to tax, both State and Federal. Now, figure this corporation that is in the losing business with only a $200,000,000 capital having the right to issue bonds or notes for five times that amount, $1,000,000,000, with the only thing behind these notes and bonds is the $200,000,000 capital that is likely to be wiped out at any time, when the world's price of the commodities drops after the corporation shall have bought these commodities at the ratio price. Yet the proponents of this bill would have you to believe that the corporation is going to be able to go out in the market and sell banks and other financiers these notes and bonds to the extent of $1,000,000,000 with no Government guaranty behind them, with the only asset of the corporation the $200,000,000 and with these notes and bonds and the income from them subject to State and Federal taxes. Can not you imagine this as a fertile field for the investment of the money lenders of this country? I will tell you what is going to happen if this bill ever becomes a law. About next December, and from time to time thereafter, this corporation will be coming back to Congress and asking for an appropriation of from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000 out of the Treasury, because the corporation will be broke and the farmer's market destroyed by that time.

When you increase the price of the commodities mentioned in this bill, then the all-commodity prices, to wit, the 404 commodities, are going to increase. You will then have a pyramid of prices which will affect all the people, including the farmers of this country. If it were possible for the farmers to receive the full ratio prices for the commodities enumerated in this bill, then they would not receive the cost plus the reasonable profit for them. I wrote the Tariff Commission, which recently made an investigation of wheat, and asked them to send me the cost prices of the production of wheat. This report shows that in the Wheat Belt area of this country, taking 16 places, that the average cost to produce a bushel of wheat is $1.47. The proponents of this bill will say, in effect, to the farmer, that you have been raising wheat at a loss of 50 cents per bushel, but we propose to fix it so you will only lose 25 cents per bushel. If the proponents think this bill will be of benefit to the farmer and can be successfully operated, why do they not provide in it the ratio price, plus a reasonable profit to the farmer? But they decline to do it. Hon. Gray Silver, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, stated before the committee that the ratio prices provided for in this bill are not high enough to give a farmer cost plus a reasonable profit. The farmer never received his proportionate price for his commodities between 1905 and 1914. Why? Because the Dingley tariff bill and the Payne-Aldrich bill were in operation during that time robbing the farmer the same as the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill is robbing him now. [Applause.] Nearly all of the gentlemen who appeared before the committee in behalf of this bill when I asked them if they did not think that the American farmer was paying too much for the manufactured products which he buys, would answer, "Yes"; but none of them wanted to disturb the sweet-scented tariff barons of the country by reducing the tariff upon the manufactured products which the farmer has to buy. This bill does not seek to reduce this tariff, but it intends to put a tariff all around the United States upon all the articles mentioned in this bill, together with their derivatives and substitutes. If this bill is ever put into operation, it will affect every tariff schedule in the present law, except metals and chemicals. It will increase the price of everything that the consuming public has to eat and wear. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee stated that the estimated custom receipts for the next year will be $500,000,000. I serve notice on him now that if this bill becomes a law and an embargo is put on all these articles this country will not get $500,000,000 from the customs receipts, or any amount near it.

The proponents of this bill say, "If you are not for this bill, what is your remedy for the farmer?" I will give you several remedies; and this administration can enact these remedies into law, and I am willing to stay here until the frost falls if necessary in order to enact sound, economic legislation that will be of benefit to the farmer.

I would repeal the high tariff rates of this damnable Fordney-McCumber tariff bill and thereby increase the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar instead of trying by an artificial stimulant to give him more dollars to buy at prohibitive prices. [Great applause.] You say that this would not be of immediate benefit to him. You lower the prices of the manufactured articles which he has to buy for himself, family, and the operation of his farm and you will find out very quickly that he will be benefited by it. I would reduce the freight rates on agricultural products of this country. [Applause.] The railroads are making more money than they ever made before. You talk about getting back to "normalcy" under these conditions! To-day you can ship a carload of wheat or corn from the Grain Belt of the Northwest to the Atlantic seaboard, and the freight on that carload is worth more than the wheat or corn. You can ship a ton of coal from my district to the cold regions of the Northwest, and the freight on that coal is worth more than the coal. What is the inevitable result? We have the anomalous economic situation that the coal operators and miners in my country are practically broke for the want of a market, and the wheat growers of the Northwest are burning corn and wheat to keep their families warm, and the teeming millions along the Atlantic seaboard are hungry for the flour.

A MEMBER. Wheat will not burn.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But corn does; and some of the Members of this House will if they persist in trying to fool the farmer by voting for this bill.

Congress should also pass the truth in fabrics bill now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I would develop Muscle Shoals. [Applause.] Whether you give it to Henry Ford or some one else, it should be developed at once in order to afford the American farmer a cheaper fertilizer. Taxes, both Federal and State, should be reduced.

I would do another thing. I would pass a national cooperative marketing association bill in this country. [Great applause.] I give to you as my candid judgment that if this bill becomes a law the cooperative marketing associations of this country will have to go out of business. What is the purpose of the cooperative marketing associations? It is to improve the marketing facilities so the spread will be narrowed from the producer to the consumer, thereby helping the producer to get more for his products. This bill does not undertake to narrow the spread between the producer and the consumer. Why would a farmer remain in a cooperative marketing association, paying the cost of the operation of same, including salaries, storage, rent, and other necessary expenses, when the purpose of this bill is to do the same thing for the farmer as he hopes to obtain by maintaining the expense of a cooperative marketing association, to wit, to get a better price for his products? If the Federal Government would assist the various cooperative marketing associations of the country in narrowing the great spread in prices that exists between what the producer gets and the consumer pays it would help the producer and the consumer both. Do you know that last year the American farmers received seven and one-half billion dollars for the food products that they raised, while the American consumers paid twenty-two and a half billion dollars for the same products, and between those producers and the consumers there were 3,000,000 jobbers, retailers, and others that received the fifteen and a half billion dollars profit? I submit to you if it is not fair for the American farmers to have received at least a half of that fifteen and a half billion dollars profit which the middlemen got. In my judgment the only way we can narrow that spread is through a system of cooperative marketing, assisted by the Federal Government, on every product that the American farmer raises. This is fair, this will be beneficial, and will be constructive.

This law is supposed to continue in force five years. What will happen when this emergency terminates? With all commodities at the peak of prices and you strike the props from under this great temporary superstructure at that time, it will produce the greatest panic that the world ever saw in any country.

But the high-tariff advocates say that if we repeal the high protective tariff law we will lower the standard of American living, and that the wages of the laboring man will be reduced. You can not have in this country a permanent prosperity by stimulating by the way of a tariff, thereby eliminating the law of supply and demand for the benefit of a few people, without you do it to the detriment of the many.

This administration threw a sop at the American farmer by placing a tariff upon the agricultural products, and said at the time that this would solve all the ills of the farmer. Every agricultural product upon which a tariff was placed in the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill is selling at a less price to-day than it was the day the bill became a law, excepting wool. A tariff was placed upon wheat in the bill, which is nothing more nor less than a millers' tariff. The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill gave the President the power, after an investigation of the Tariff Commission, to increase the tariff upon wheat. A few weeks ago the President increased the tariff from 30 cents per bushel to 42 cents per bushel, and within a week after he announced the increase wheat decreased in price 7 cents per bushel.

To-day everything the American farmer sells he sells in an open market, and practically everything he has to buy for himself and family he buys in a protective market; and in my judgment prosperity will never be brought to him until the high tariff upon the things he buys has been reduced.

No one wants to lower the standard of American living or reduce the wages of American labor. Does the high protective tariff maintain the high wages of the American laborer? Let us see: The railroad men, the miners, the plasterers, the bricklayers, and the painters are getting decent wages to-day in spite of the tariff, but are paying most of their wages out for the high-priced commodities, made so under the protective tariff law, which they must have for themselves and families. The three highest protected industries of this country under the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill are cotton goods, woolen goods, and textiles; and the fact remains that the poorest and lowest paid laborers in the United States to-day are those who work in these highly protected industries. England is a free-trade country, and yet she pays her laborers more than France does, and France has a tariff. She pays her laborers more than Germany does, and Germany is the highest protective country in Europe. We all know that there is not a chance for this bill to become a law, and that the President of the United States would veto it, unless he repudiates the utterances of his December message to Congress. In that message he said in part:

> No complicated scheme of relief, no plan for Government fixing of prices, and no resort to the Public Treasury will be of any permanent value in establishing agriculture. Simple and direct methods put into operation by the farmer himself are the only real sources of restoration. The acreage of wheat is too large. Unless we can meet the world market at a profit, we must stop raising for export.

Everyone knows that the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill destroyed the foreign market for the farmers' product. The exchange of European countries has depreciated to such an extent as to be practically valueless. This tariff wall is so high that it prohibits European manufacturers shipping their products here and selling them in competition with the home manufacturers and procuring American money with which to buy the surplus products of the farmer. After this administration has killed and destroyed the foreign market for the farmers' products the President comes and says that the only remedy he has is to raise less.

It has been stated on the floor of the House that labor is for this bill. Representatives of the various railroad organizations came before the committee and indorsed the Norris-Sinclair bill. No representative of labor came before our committee indorsing this bill, excepting Mr. Wallace, of the American Federation of Labor, who indorsed it only in principle and made the patriotic statement that labor wanted to assist the American farmer.

Who are the principal advocates of this bill? Mr. Brand, in the Agricultural Department, seems to have written this bill, and he is the same Mr. Brand that the Federal Trades Commission showed in its hearings represented the packers in an effort to defeat the Borland resolution, which would have prohibited the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the packers. Another good advocate of the bill is Mr. Peek, of the Moline Plow Co., who has been selling the farmers plows at a greatly increased price by reason of the tariff on steel. The latest and most enthusiastic advocate of the bill is Mr. Otto Kahn, the great international banker of New York. I am sure that the farmer will take courage when he receives the news that this "great agriculturist" is advocating a bill for his benefit.

Another great advocate of the bill is Mr. John R. Mitchell, banker and ex-member of the Federal Reserve Board, who admitted that he represented the business interests of St. Paul, a city in which the great packing plants are located, and the principal business of the city.

Another great friend of the farmer!

Who are some of the people opposing this bill, and opposing it on the ground that it is unworkable and will do more harm to the farmer than anything that could happen to him? Judge Robert W. Bingham, of Louisville, owner of the Courier-Journal and Times, a man who has spent more time and money to build up a cooperative system in this country than any man of my acquaintance, and who is now chairman of the National Council of the Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Association, has this to say:

I hope the McNary-Haugen bill will not pass, because I think it is unworkable and would not only not help the farmers but would greatly injure them and the country at large. It is an attempt on a large scale to nationalize the agricultural industry of the United States and to substitute Government control for private initiative and Government price fixing for the law of supply and demand. Such projects have failed in the past and will fail in the future. It is a dangerous form of class legislation which should never be tolerated. The farmers have a right to equal privileges with other citizens, and the demands of justice for them must be met. Recent legislation providing cooperative marketing, broadening the Federal reserve system to meet the needs of farmers for long-time credits, and establishing intermediate credit banks is all in the right direction and has proven of the utmost value. In addition, the War Finance Corporation has rendered service of inestimable value in the agricultural crisis prevailing after the war. These measures were based upon sound economics and have justified themselves. However, the plan for dumping surplus products abroad will inevitably bring reprisals from foreign countries and will thus deprive us of the only market we have for our surplus. It involves an enormous expense, with increased taxation, the very things the farmers as well as the rest of the country want to escape. I believe the McNary-Haugen bill is unsound economically, is impractical, and will result in the gravest injury to the very people it is designed to help.

I received a letter from Hon. Geoffrey Morgan, who has just retired as secretary of the Kentucky Farm Bureau Federation, of Kentucky, who has a national reputation in this line of work and who has the following to say:

I notice from the papers that you voted against the McNary-Haugen bill. I want to congratulate you, as I have come to the conclusion that you did exactly the right thing. I was at first inclined to be favorable to it, but after studying it carefully I am convinced that it is a menace.

I have here a telegram the excerpt of which pertains to this bill. It is as follows:

PETALUMA, CALIF., May 21, 1924.

JULIUS H. BARNES,
President United States Chamber of Commerce,
Washington, D. C.:

California agricultural legislative committee, composed of 35 farm-commodity organizations having over 65,000 grower members at last directors' meeting, with presiding officers of State farm bureau, grange, and Farmers' Union present, unanimously disapproved the McNary-Haugen bill as fundamentally wrong in principle.

PETALUMA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
POULTRY KEEPERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. Chairman, you can not help the farmer by trying to raise him up by his own boot straps. You will have to repeal laws that are discriminatory against him in order that this great country of ours may get back to the place where it belongs. The Rules Committee refused to make in order the Curtis-Aswell cooperative marketing bill, but I am glad to say that every Democratic member of that committee voted to make it in order. Gentlemen, if you will vote down this bill, I believe that Congress will not adjourn until it passes some kind of farm legislation. [Applause.] You vote down this bill and in my judgment it will not be a week before the Agricultural Committee will bring in a bill that will help the farmer that will be sane and constructive.

This bill if passed, I believe, will destroy the present system of marketing the farmers' products in this country and the export business of the farmers' products upon which a ratio price is declared. This corporation will have to handle all the export business of these products or guarantee exporters against loss from handling.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman given any thought to the form that this certificate of equalization will take? Would it be marked legal tender?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, no; it would not be legal tender, and it is also nonnegotiable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it bear the name of the United States of America?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know anything about the form of it. That matter will have to be attended to by the corporation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There will be some expense incurred there.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, yes; there will be a tremendous amount of expense, and the Government Printing Office will be printing the scrip which the farmer will be compelled to take, and this scrip will be worth about as much as a German mark. However, all the cost of the printing will come out of the farmer.

Mr. Chairman, if the House will indulge me, I would like to cite another concrete example as to the workings of this bill. Nearly all over this country the farmers have what is called wayside marketing, and we have a great deal of it in Kentucky. When this bill becomes a law, one of my farmers will kill a hog and start out to sell it to his neighbors and regular customers. Of course, the ratio price will have been established on every part of the dressed hog. He will meet his neighbor, and the neighbor will want to buy some of the dressed meat. The farmer will say he will be glad to sell him any part of it he wants provided the neighbor will issue him the regular receipt and retain the equalization fee, and he will ask his neighbor if he has a blank receipt. The neighbor will say, "What receipt?" He will then be told by the farmer that he must have a receipt printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington for the equalization fee. The neighbor will say he never heard of this character of receipt before, but will say to the farmer, "I will just write you an ordinary receipt for the equalization fee." The farmer will reply, "Oh, no; if we do that you and I will be arrested by a Federal officer and taken to the Federal court and will be subject to a fine or imprisonment, or both." So these two neighbors can not trade on account of this law. The neighbor will then ask the farmer, "How much is the equalization fee and the ratio price on your hog?" "Well," the farmer will say, "that depends upon what part of the hog you want to buy. The ratio price will be different on hams, ribs, shoulders, and chitlings." Therefore this farmer, in order to have customers for his wayside marketing, will have to see that each of them has beautiful blank receipts from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington, the cost of the same to be paid by the farmer himself. This illustration is not an exaggeration. There are millions of these transactions every year, and I cite it to show you how impracticable and impossible it would be for this bill to work.

Let us vote down this bill and have something constructive. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman object now to anybody getting a receipt for the amount that he pays into the fund?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I am objecting to the whole bill, because it is not workable and will hurt the farmer more than it will help him.

Mr. HAUGEN. Why do you deny the farmer the receipt for the amount that he pays in?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not want to deny the farmer the receipt for the amount he pays in, but I want the packers and grain men, who are going to reap the benefits of this bill, to pay for the benefits they receive.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not the farmer entitled to a receipt for the money he pays in?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Certainly. He can then use it as a rain check, because, in my judgment, it will never be worth a cent to him after all the expenses of the operation of this law are paid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is that receipt negotiable in any way?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Oh, no; the Federal Government under this bill is going to say to the farmer that he must take the receipt and that he will have to keep it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has it any value whatever?

Mr. KINCHELOE. After all of the costs of the administration of this law are paid, including the loss on the exportable surplus and expenses of the corporation, then if anything is left it will eventually trickle down to the farmer who holds the receipt.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How long would a man have to keep the receipt before getting anything?

Mr. KINCHELOE. About a year, if he got anything at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Can he take it to the bank and cash it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Not on your life.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not negotiable?

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is not negotiable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What value?

Mr. KINCHELOE. As I have just stated, the farmer has to hold the receipt until the expenses are paid, and no one can tell what the value of the receipt will be, if anything.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Is not that principle involved in every cooperative organization in the United States, and why should the gentleman object to the same principle being applied in this great national organization that is applied to every cooperative organization?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Because in a national cooperative-marketing system of farmers Mr. Packer does not come with the elevator man and the big miller and each get theirs and walks off with it, but the farmer gets whatever profit by way of increase of price for his products.

Mr. AYRES. I understood the gentleman to say that the millers and packers were for this legislation; if so, why are we receiving letters constantly from grain men and millers opposing this bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know that I have received any against it, but let me say to the gentleman if he has he should not take their protest too seriously.

Mr. AYRES. I have received dozens.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to make the European countries the dumping ground for the surplus agricultural products of this country and to prohibit, if necessary by embargo, any other country shipping any of its agricultural products into this country. What will happen? These European countries will enact retaliatory laws by placing an embargo upon our surplus agricultural products. If this is done, then this law falls of its own weight and with a great business catastrophe. The price of American wheat is now fixed in Liverpool, but England is not compelled to have American wheat. Every province she has raises wheat; besides, she can go to Russia and other European countries for the balance of her supply.

I am one who believes that in this great country of ours, where love and hope have combined and erected a family altar, the breadwinner of that family should have an equal chance with his fellow men in the race of life. This can not be in this country so long as we enact discriminatory laws. Let us repeal these discriminatory laws already on the Federal statutes instead of enacting more. The protective tariff laws of this country have always robbed the consumers of a great proportion of their earnings. They have fostered trusts and combines and are doing so to-day to the detriment of every man who toils. When I contemplate these discriminatory laws and how unfair they are to every laboring man in the country, I am reminded of Kipling's Cry of Toil, which represents the teeming millions of the toiling masses of this country, saying to the trusts and combines—by paraphrasing a little:

We have fed you all for a thousand years,
And you hale us still unfed;
Though there is not a dollar of all your wealth
But marks the maker's dead.
We have done our best to give you rest
And lie on crimson wool;
But if "tariff" be the price of all your wealth,
Great God! we have paid it in full.

There's not a mine blown skyward now
But we're buried alive for you;
There's not a ship blown shoreward now
But we're its ghastly crew;
Go reckon our dead by the forges red
And the factories where we spin;
For if "tariff" be the price of all your wealth,
Great God! we have paid it in full.

We have fed you all for a thousand years,
And that's our doom, you know;
Since first you chained us in the fields
To the strike of a week ago.
You have eaten our lives, our babes and wives,
And you say that's your lawful share;
But if "tariff" be the price of all your wealth,
Great God! we have bought it fair.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I do not think that the above is an exaggeration.

In conclusion, and as one whose every heartbeat has always been and is now in sympathy with the American farmer, I want to appeal to you to defeat this legislation that would revolutionize the economic life of this country and be an indescribable detriment to the American farmer; and let us pass sound and economic legislation that will be to his benefit. It can and should be done before this Congress adjourns. Let us not try to fool the farmer by holding out a false hope, as this bill does, but let us take him into our confidence and be frank with him. Let us repeal the discriminatory laws which I have heretofore mentioned and enact a great cooperative marketing law which will redound to the happiness and prosperity of every American farmer and his family. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know the gentleman wants to be fair and wants to correct his statements——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will yield me some time I will be glad to answer any question he may want to ask.

Mr. HAUGEN. I want the gentleman to speak the facts.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the trouble; he stated the facts.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Gentlemen of the House, I want to extend to you my sincere thanks for this great attendance here and for your patient attention, which you have so graciously given me. [Great and prolonged applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire in reference to how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 50 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Missouri has an hour and 55 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Louisiana has an hour and 11 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Wisconsin has 27 minutes remaining.

Mr. VOIGT. I want to make a correction there. I was informed last night that I had 34 minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman yielded seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky this morning.

Mr. VOIGT. But I got an additional 15 minutes of the additional hour.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no additional hour granted; that unanimous consent was not granted.

Mr. VOIGT. I was so informed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made in the House to that request, so no additional time was granted.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend 30 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. JOHNSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, unfortunately, our Government, like other Governments of the past and present, has given less consideration to the real interests and needs of agriculture than to any other factor which enters into our commercial life. The farmer is the last to have our helping hand, and the first to feel the effects of any catastrophe or depression.

Particularly may I refer to what happened to the farmer covering the period of our late war and just after it. He, as we know, was the last to receive any appreciable advance in what he produced, and when he was permitted to realize an advance in prices for his products, it was niggardly compared with the advance for the products and contributions of others. When peace was declared what happened? The price and value of the farmer's property and products at once, and immediately, began to fall—and these falling prices and values have so continued until this very hour.

The farmer's property and the products therefrom are now at or below the pre-war market prices, while, on the other hand, every commodity purchased to-day by the American farmer is priced to him at or near war prices. He is actually selling his products at pre-war prices and buying his needs on a war market.

The American farmer is a unique individual. He is a member and component part of the greatest single commercial factor in our commercial life. He does not buy a single necessity of life or perform a single act or deed requiring the expenditure of money that the other fellow does not fix the price. He sells nothing except what the other fellow will buy, and that at a price named for him in advance of sale. All the farmer is allowed to do is to produce, then sell, if he can, at a fixed price, and then buy what he needs at a price likewise fixed for him in advance.

Since the World War, compared with property values of 1919, agriculture has sustained a loss of over $32,000,000,000—a staggering loss—an average loss to the American farmers of over $8,000,000,000 each year. What other factor of our commercial life or what line of industry has been called upon to withstand such a staggering financial blow during this same period? Not a single one, as I shall show. Why has this great loss and burden been placed upon the shoulders of our farmers? This is not all; while he has sustained this enormous loss, his yearly basic products, his grains and his meats, have been going lower and lower until the dollar realized in the sale of these products have a purchasing power in the markets in payment for what he must buy of about 60 cents. His taxes are no less than in 1919, and in some instances higher; the machinery he has to buy is priced to him at the same high mark; his farm equipment and all other necessary commodities have been maintained at the same high cost price to him; and his freight rates on the products he ships are war rates, with a small percentage decrease, and the passenger rates are substantially the same.

The average American farmer constitutes a class of our people different, perhaps, in many ways from any other. It is the largest single class; their daily problems are largely the same; their needs, their likes and dislikes are similar; and in almost every way they are the same wherever you find them. They live the same kind of life whether in the East, North, South, or West. There are reasons why this is so. As a rule they are the happiest and most contented. Their wants are simple. Their love for home and country should be envied. Their loyalty to the flag and to their country is not surpassed, and in few instances equaled. So far they have not conspired to be crooked and corrupt in business, big or little. So far they have asked little or no favors at the hands of our Government; they have never asked or received alms and they are not now doing so. I for one do not believe that the American farmer will ever ask favors of this Government unfair or unjust to others.

The American farmer is, as a rule, thrifty and saving. Prior to the World War he was moderately prosperous, and by economy he had accumulated something, and during the war he was permitted again to add a small stipend to his pre-war earnings, so that at the close of the war the average American farmer found himself with a small bank account. Then it was that the period of readjustment began, and then it was that the downfall of our farmers took root and began to grow.

Every other industry or factor in our commercial life in one way or another was permitted or enabled to hold its own. Most of them have not been called upon to contribute a penny on the road back to normal conditions, but, on the contrary, have been so situated, favored, and protected as to be able to earn handsome returns on their investments, while their property values since 1919 have not shrunk in value but increased.

The era of loss and falling prices, so far as the farmer was concerned, continued, and in order to meet this loss he began to draw upon his savings and continued to do so until his savings are gone.

His personal property and his farm were next. In order to stem the tide, as he thought, and in the hope that something would be done for him, he mortgaged these properties. Unable to redeem the mortgage when due, these properties were and are now being sold—sold on a market and to a public already loaded down with similar property. In most cases these properties are sold to the owners of these mortgages for even less than the amount of the mortgage. Banks which have dealt largely with the farmers are closing their doors, not only daily but hourly. Hundreds of them have failed and will fail. Farmers are borrowing money from our Government with which to buy seeds and pay the expense of planting. In some instances they have asked loans with which to buy the necessities of life. School children are kept from school because they do not have the necessary clothing and not sufficient food for the noonday meal. Suicides are not now uncommon among these farmers, a thing unheard of in years of prosperity. Well-to-do and respected farmers, with their wives and children, are daily forced from their natural habitations and compelled to take refuge in congested centers and there surrounded by entirely different conditions and influences of which they know little or nothing. God only can picture the final result.

The word "bankrupt" or "bankruptcy" is distasteful to the average American farmer. He is inherently honest, and somehow the word to him has a meaning and significance different from what it has to most of us. The judicial records under normal conditions show that the per cent of farmers who become bankrupt is far below that of any other class.

The storm and cyclone of the farmers' disasters began to be felt over a year and a half ago, and since that time it has spread rapidly and widely. It began in the Northwest. It is now felt everywhere and in every farming country.

I believe unless we, as Representatives of the people, deal with this situation and deal promptly and quickly a disaster will befall this country the like of which we have never experienced before. Not alone will the farmer feel it and suffer but every part of our commercial, industrial, financial, and social world will be affected and shaken to their foundation.

History reveals the fact that if you make and keep the farmer prosperous, or even let him get by, you have a prosperous condition in all lines of industry. Take away from him his share of prosperity and make of him a bankrupt, then you have pulled down upon your own heads the pillars upon which rest the success, prosperity, and happiness of all the world.

Already the present economic situation and the efforts of or results from readjustment since the World War have plunged into bankruptcy or forced to the very verge of bankruptcy over 600,000 American farmers, and unless this Congress shall wake up at once and do something for him and correct this situation you will find that this is a small beginning.

Labor without a happy and prosperous farmer can not live and prosper on the high plane it now rightfully enjoys. Wall Street and big interests will no longer control the finances of the world if it shall withhold its support from our farmers and stand in an attitude of indifference. Manufactures will reap its reward in the shutting down of its plants and the deterioration of its property and in the loss of a market for its finished products when the farmer shall have been deprived of his place in the commercial world on the same parity with it.

Transportation companies will have little need for their rails, boats, and motor power when the farmer fails to produce and offers no freight.

It is not for me at this moment to change the governmental policy or evolve some different economic plan whereby we shall be able to come back more quickly to normal conditions. So far as the American farmer is concerned at this moment he is forced to accept the policy and plan, and try to adjust his condition to the present situation. He neither has the time nor the power or influence to change this policy. I prefer to try to work in some sort of harmony with these policies and plans, though I do not mean to say I approve of all of them.

The commercial life of our country as now constituted is made up of four factors, and our present governmental policies are meant to and should apply to all alike, as follows: Agriculture, transportation, manufacturing, and labor.

The first and most important of these factors is that of agriculture. In and through this factor the basic products of life are produced.

The next, if I may designate, is that factor known as transportation, for without the means of transportation the farmer's products could not be delivered to points of consumption and for manufacturing purposes; and, again, the redistribution of the finished products throughout the consuming world could not be maintained without these arteries of distribution.

Then, next, the manufacturer, who receives the farmer's raw material and converts the same into the finished products ready and fit for consumption by the consuming public.

The last, labor. This enters alike into all three of the other factors, and they could not function without labor's contribution.

Whether right or wrong, there has gradually grown up in this country a policy which has to do with the enactment of laws beneficial to certain interests and to certain classes of our people. In the face of such legislation we find that the law of supply and demand is made inoperative. In other words, because of special or class legislation the law of supply and demand has been to a more or less degree set aside and made naught. While this policy is personified by the Republican Party, it is in a less degree to be found in the Democratic Party. One for protection, the other for revenue.

I do not want to be understood now and here as criticizing any party or any law. What I say is for the purpose of showing how certain interests and classes have been protected and benefited while others just as important, possible more so, have been ignored and excluded.

The peak of protection of one of our four commercial factors mentioned was reached in the passage of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law. This law, briefly and boiled down, enables the manufacturer to name and regulate the price at which he may sell his finished products, and thus return at least a reasonable profit on his investment. Often this same finished article is sold in the foreign markets in competition with the world at a less price than to the consuming public here.

This is simply a guaranty by law of a return to the manufacturer for his labor and upon his investment satisfactory to him. By this law he is protected in his business. That is not all. We have a "Tariff Commission," so called, appointed by the Federal Government, and the salaries of this commission and all expenses are paid by the Government. This commission has for its purpose the investigation and adjustment of tariff rates from time to time. Is this Government in business or not? What is the difference between a tariff commission to look after the interests of the manufacturers and a farmers' commission to look after the farmers' interests?

The property values of this protected factor in our commercial life have not shrunk one dollar, and the value to-day is more than the value in 1919, while during the same period farm values have shrunk more than $32,000,000,000. This factor is calling upon the farmer to carry this enormous burden in this period of readjustment and at the same time protesting that it should still have a greater return than it now receives.

Under the Esch-Cummins law the transportation act and through the administration of the Interstate Commerce Commission this necessary factor is protected and given a guaranty of a reasonable return for labor expended, capital or property invested. Under this legislation this factor can have its rates fixed and established so as to yield a satisfactory return to its stockholders. This is done by law.

Only recently some of these companies have been so successful and prosperous that they granted a voluntary increase in wage to some of their employees. Indeed, so prosperous have they been since 1919 that they not only have experienced no loss in shrinkage in the value of their property but, on the contrary, have found their property in some instances more valuable than at the beginning of 1919, while at the same time, and since 1919, the American farmer has been called upon to shoulder and carry a loss of over $32,000,000,000.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is a governmental agency operating under a law passed by Congress, directing and controlling the operation of a business. The expense of this commission, like the Tariff Commission, is paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. They are governmental commissions, or agents, vested with power to enter into and direct private business.

Labor, still another of these factors, has not been overlooked by our Government. During this period of adjustment, since 1919, labor has not suffered on the whole to any serious degree, though at times it has had its struggles. It has not felt the shock nor the burden as has the farmer. It enjoys the Adamson eight-hour law passed by our Congress; it receives benefit from and is more or less protected by our immigration laws and, as others would have it, by our tariff law.

Of the four factors which go to make up our commercial life we find that three of them are protected and aided by Federal laws, and in two instances at least our Government is now and has been, by its commissions and agencies, entering into and aiding in the operation thereof; and if the Howell-Barkley bill passes every factor in the whole commercial life except the American farmer factor will have been by law put under the guidance and protecting wing of our Federal Government, and all of this at the expense of the Government.

Congress has not seen fit to pass a single constructive legislative measure which has for its object or would even tend to put the agricultural industry on the same footing or plane as the other factors to which I have referred. It has adopted a certain policy, but in adopting it—to our shame—Congress has limited its operation to certain commercial factors and denied it to the farmer.

The farmer and his friends are not to-day bearing arms against nor making war upon these protected factors because of this inequality and advantage. He and his friends do not desire to tear down, but rather build up. He is not for destruction but for construction.

His claim, demand, and fight is that the same consideration shall be accorded to him as is accorded to those who are so vitally concerned and closely associated with him.

THE BILL

In approaching a discussion of this bill and its merits I do so having in mind the words spoken, and the thought expressed, by Abraham Lincoln:

> The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they need to have done but can not do at all, or can not so well do, for themselves in their separate and individual capacities.

Many weeks of hearings were held by the Agriculture Committee. Farmers, cooperative organizations, and men in all walks of life, and labor organizations from every section of the country appeared and gave testimony of the condition of the American farmers of to-day. Millers, packers, and brokers from different sections also appeared and gave testimony. Notwithstanding the many different viewpoints, everyone admitted the deplorable condition in which the farmer finds himself, and all agreed that unless something be done to relieve this depressed and bankrupt condition of the agriculture industry it will only be a short time until there will be a general disorganization, destruction, and disintegration of the whole agriculture fabric.

From what has heretofore been said it became necessary, in the judgment of the committee, to formulate some measure which would tend to relieve the situation, correct the evil, and thus save the farmer.

There were three different views advanced tending to correct this situation. One of these views was incorporated in a bill looking to making better and wider markets, and at the same time develop farm cooperative organizations and other agencies of sale for the farmer. It is apparent that no such measure would be of much relief to the farmer. Highly organized agencies for the handling of the farmers' products and additional markets will not avail him now. If to-day the farmers' products were sold in all the markets of the world under the most highly organized agencies, and no charges be made for these services, and no freight rates be charged for hauling the products to the markets, still the farmer would be getting less for his products than he could afford to take. He would still go into bankruptcy. He would still receive less than the ratio price. It is not this that the farmer needs. What he needs is higher prices. He wants his dollar of equal value in the commercial world with that of other dollars.

Then there was another view, and measures were introduced along this line. It was urged that the Government should form a corporation and purchase the farmers' products on behalf of the Government, at a price to be fixed which would return the farmer a reasonable profit for his products. The corporation was then on behalf of the Government to sell these products in the domestic and foreign markets at whatever price they could obtain and charge the loss to the Government. This temporarily would doubtless relieve the farmer, but in the end it would break the Government. This was Government head over heels in business.

Out of these various measures, and from the various viewpoints urged, the present bill now before Congress was agreed upon as the most feasible and practical solution.

The present bill does not ask that the Government shall take charge, through its corporation, of the business of the farmer. It does not call upon the Government to expend one single cent in the administration of this law or in any loss that might be sustained in its operation.

There are just three things that this bill asks of the Federal Government.

First. The Government, through the President, with the consent of the Senate, shall name four directors—no more than two directors shall come from the same political party. They are to receive a salary of $10,000 per year. Their duties are to handle and dispose of largely, if not entirely, the exportable surplus of the farmers' products mentioned in this bill after an emergency is declared. Of course, they stand ready to see that the ratio price established is maintained for the products of the farmer.

Second. A corporation is to be formed, which is fully described in the bill, and the stock in this corporation to the extent of $200,000,000 is to be subscribed and paid for as needed by the Government. This, in effect, is simply a loan to the corporation to enable it, through the directors, to be ready and able at all times to purchase at the ratio price the basic products of the farmer upon which an emergency has been declared. The $200,000,000 would be paid back at the end of five years.

Third. The Government, through the President, declares an embargo upon any of the farmers' products upon which there shall be declared an emergency, and which will come under the operation of this bill.

It is apparent that the bill would be inoperative without the declaration of an embargo upon these emergency products, for as soon as our domestic markets began to pay more for the farmers' products than realized in the world markets, then a great flow of the farm products produced in foreign countries would flood our shores and bankrupt the corporation. This embargo must be declared and maintained in order to keep out and prevent the foreign products from coming in competition with these products in the domestic market. This is not a new proposition and is not one concerning which my Democratic friends should very seriously question, for this same embargo was enacted into law by and used during a Democratic administration.

Let me illustrate: This country produced about 800,000,000 bushels of wheat last year. We consume about 600,000,000, leaving 200,000,000 bushels as an exportable surplus. The price at which this surplus is sold in the world market controls the price at which the 600,000,000 bushels are sold in the domestic markets. The world's market was around $1 per bushel and this establishes a price for wheat on our domestic markets. If you apply the ratio price under the bill—which I shall mention later—wheat on the domestic market would bring $1.59 per bushel. Had the corporation been in operation the 200,000,000 bushels of wheat would have been sold in the markets of the world at $1 per bushel, while the domestic market would have been paying $1.59 per bushel. The corporation in the purchase and sale of the 200,000,000 bushels in the world markets would have lost $118,000,000. How is this loss to be met? The law provides that the corporation shall fix an equalization fee to be collected by the purchaser from the seller of, say, in the case 15 cents per bushel on the entire 800,000,000, realizing the sum of $120,000,000, and out of this the $118,000,000 is paid and $2,000,000 left for expenses of the corporation. The corporation can establish a less or greater fee to meet this loss and expense. It is conservatively estimated that 10 per cent of the ratio price on every product under the measure will be amply large to meet all loss and all expense.

If the farmer has 1,000 bushels of wheat for sale, he knows and is advised as to what the ratio price for this wheat is, and he sells this wheat to anyone desiring to purchase at the ratio price, or for more or for less. He makes his own sale and his own bargain. He is not compelled to take less than the ratio price, for the corporation will pay that price. The party to whom he makes this sale will pay him the price agreed upon and deduct therefrom the 15 cents per bushel. If there are 1,000 bushels, he would deduct $150 and pay him in cash for the balance. The farmer is given a receipt showing the payment of this $150—his contribution of the equalization. This fund and a receipt therefor is sent to the corporation and deposited by it in a special fund, known in this case as the "wheat account." At the close of the year the loss and cost of operating is ascertained and paid out of this equalization fund. The balance is then distributed back to the farmer in proportion to the amount he has paid on account thereof.

The operation of the bill and the handling and disposing by the corporation is practically the same and just as practical and feasible as to all other farm products under the bill.

This bill asks less assistance from Congress and excludes our Government from private business more than many other measures which have been passed for the purpose of keeping certain of our industries on a high plane of efficiency, productiveness, and profit. It simply extends the present governmental policy to the products of agriculture.

The framers of this bill, at the request of the farmers, have not asked that this policy be extended to them for an indefinite period. The farmer still thinks that if he is given some temporary relief for a limited time during this readjustment period that he can then take care of himself. Therefore, the farmer asks that you extend to him this policy, by this bill, for a period of five years. He has suffered for the past four years without this policy.

This bill does not become operative upon any of the farmer's products mentioned therein until there has been declared by the President that an emergency exists as to the particular product affected. There may be times during the five years of the life of this bill when there will be no emergency upon any article, and then the bill will be inoperative in its entirety; and there may be periods when it will operate only as to one or two of the products. My judgment is, that when it once becomes a law it will not operate upon more than two of the farmer's products, and perhaps only one.

The bill proceeds on the fundamental fact that the price of agricultural commodities should bear a proper relation to the prices of other commodities. In other words, farm products are to have a fair exchange value in terms of all commodities.

The ratio price, which I have previously referred to, is the price that gives the farmer's commodities the same percentage of increase in price, when compared with the pre-war period, 1905-1914, as is shown by the advance in price of "all commodities," about 400 in number (included in Bureau of Labor statistics index numbers). In other words it gives the purchasing power of a hundred cents to the farmer's dollar, whereas now it has relatively but a 60-cent purchasing power in the commercial world.

The constitutionality of this measure has been questioned. It has been urged by the departmental lawyers and other eminent attorneys that the law is constitutional; on the other hand we find lawyers of equal ability urging the unconstitutionality of the act. I see no reason why I should at this moment enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of this measure. My judgment or opinion might possibly influence some votes, but it would not make the bill constitutional. I shall be content in casting my vote in behalf of this measure in the thought that upon both sides of this question we have eminent lawyers differing, and in the end this question, if raised, must be settled by the courts. Upon a question of this character, when lawyers of ability differ, I feel that the lawmaking body in the passage or nonpassage of such a measure should give little heed and little consideration as to the ultimate constitutionality or unconstitutionality thereof. I should rather give my time and thought in pointing out the relief that this measure will bring to the farmer and the crumbling agriculture world.

If you apply the ratio price, as provided for under this bill, and if this bill had been and were in full operation to-day, the farmer would be receiving for his products the following prices, subject, however, to any loss and expense, which I have heretofore mentioned:

Chicago markets—Prices

WHEAT

Per bushel if bill in operation, 1923:
January	$1.65
February	1.66
March	1.68
April	1.68
May	1.65
June	1.62
July	1.59
August	1.59
September	1.65
October	1.62
November	1.61
December	1.60
Per bushel if bill in operation, 1924:
January	1.60
February	1.60
March	1.59
Actually received, 1923:
January	1.23
February	1.30
March	1.27
April	1.29
May	1.24
June	1.15
July	1.01
August	1.01
September	1.10
October	1.15
November	1.08
December	1.10
Actually received, 1924:
January	1.12
February	1.16
March	1.13

HOGS

Price if bill in operation, 1923:
January	11.69
February	11.75
March	11.80
April	11.91
May	11.72
June	11.51
July	11.30
August	11.26
September	11.53
October	11.48
November	11.41
December	11.33
Price if bill in operation, 1924:
January	11.35
February	11.37
March	11.25
Actually received, 1923:
January	8.29
February	7.95
March	8.25
April	8.11
May	7.53
June	7.01
July	7.52
August	8.18
September	8.83
October	7.72
November	7.65
December	7.00
Actually received, 1924:
January	7.20
February	7.08
March	7.36

CATTLE

Price if bill in operation, 1923:
January	10.74
February	10.88
March	11.67
April	11.80
May	11.67
June	11.55
July	11.35
August	11.68
September	12.22
October	11.58
November	11.33
December	11.00
Actually received, 1923:
January	9.17
February	8.86
March	8.83
April	9.01
May	9.41
June	9.94
July	10.05

Actually received, 1923—Continued
August	$10.48
September	10.12
October	9.90
November	9.36
December	8.92

CORN

Price, if bill in operation, 1923:
January	.99
February	1.00
March	1.01
April	1.01
May	.99
June	.98
July	.96
August	.95
September	.98
October	.97
November	.97
December	.96
Price, if bill in operation, 1924:
January	.96
February	.96
March	.95
Actually received, 1923:
January	.71
February	.74
March	.74
April	.79
May	.81
June	.84
July	.86
August	.88
September	.88
October	1.01
November	.84
December	.75
Actually received, 1924:
January	.76
February	.80
March	.77

The farmer undoubtedly would be benefited very materially under the operation of this bill. Yet that benefit justly and rightfully belongs to him, and he has been denied this for a period of four years.

Without the farmer, and that is what will happen unless we help him, the rest of these classes will suffer—more than you or I can now anticipate. When you once break down the great agriculture industry, you strike at the very existence of our Government. When you disorganize the farmer and drive him out of his natural habitation, you have simply torn down the foundation upon which all other industries thrive and all the rest of our social, financial, and economic structures rest.

The present organizations, and I refer to the farm organizations, cooperative organizations, and so forth, will not suffer in any degree or to any extent through the operation of this act. On the contrary, the evidence conclusively shows that these organizations will not be injured, but much aided and benefited. They will function the same and be used by the corporation in its operation.

There have been before the Agricultural Committee, urging the passage of this bill, many men in various walks of life and individuals representing strong organizations. I am safe in saying that these representatives spoke for at least 75 per cent of our population, including the farmers; and not a single one protested against any possible increase to them in the cost of living. The transportation companies and the manufacturers have not appeared, and it is fair to assume that the people they represent have no serious objections to the enactment of this bill into law. The miller, the packer, and the broker—selfish and representing a very small percentage of people—were the real opposers to this measure. There were some few farm organizations represented by certain individuals who appeared in opposition to the bill, but this class consists largely of those who urge that the Government itself shall take charge of the farmer's products, be the purchaser and seller at the same time, and charge back whatever loss there may be against the Treasury of our Federal Government.

There are 6,500,000 farms in the United States. The farm values thereof, including personal property, has shrunk in value to the extent of $32,000,000,000 in the past four years. This amount is equivalent to that expended by us in the World War.

Already over 600,000 American farmers have failed during the past two years. Hundreds of banks in the agricultural sections have gone to the wall.

During the past four years the average total loss per farm, by reason of this shrinkage, has been $5,000, or at the rate of $1,250 per year. This condition can not remain much longer. It is getting worse instead of better, and the storm and cyclone of farm destruction is spreading so rapidly that it is felt in every agricultural section.

In conclusion, let me say that I realize that the farmers are the most depressed class of our citizenship; that unless immediate relief is afforded them there is but one end, and that is the crumbling and destruction of the agricultural industry.

I see no other relief in sight; I realize the plight and present situation of the farmer, and I know he must have relief. My judgment is that this bill will afford him relief. I must, therefore, regardless of consequences, support and vote for this measure.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PURNELL). The gentleman from Maryland makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ten Members present, a quorum.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska 30 minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I did not expect to take the time of the House in the consideration of this bill, but after listening to the discussion for two or three days concerning the application of this bill to the livestock industry, with which I have been identified more or less for a great many years, I concluded to discuss briefly the provisions of the bill as they apply to livestock.

Of course, I can not answer the imagination and the rhetoric of gentlemen in discussing this bill, but I attempted to make some notes of those statements that come down to the real facts concerning the bill.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] who preceded me in an eloquent speech touched on three points that apply to the livestock industry. He said that the packer if this bill was put into effect would have an opportunity to reap a tremendous profit because of the advance in the price of hides. The gentleman has forgotten that there is no tariff on hides, that hides are on the free list, and if you put the tariff under this bill as high as Haman the packers would not receive a cent of profit upon hides because of the passage of this bill. Last year we imported $59,000,000 worth of hides, and they came in free. The bill would have no effect whatever on the price of hides.

He claimed a loss of revenue would occur if this bill became a law. The gentleman from Kentucky said that under an embargo, or if we raised the tariff on the products mentioned in the bill, there might be a loss to the Treasury of $500,000,000. Now, there is no revenue received by the Government from tariff on wheat, no revenue from the tariff on pork or pork products, and very little revenue collected by the Government because of the tariff on beef. So if the bill was put into operation it would have no effect upon the revenues of the Government. You take nothing from nothing and you have nothing left.

Of course, the packer is made the goat in all this discussion. He is not a popular individual, and so you try to prejudice members against the bill and deny the farmer help by pointing to the packer as one who is going to receive great benefits because of it. The gentleman from Kentucky talks about the great profit that the packers might make by buying up the exported surplus in Europe. Those products will be sold over there on the open markets of the world. The packer would have to pay the price when he bought that the foreigner would pay the corporation, and that is the highest European price obtainable. So the gentleman from Kentucky would have the packer buying the products of the exporting corporation and then selling them again to the foreign buyer at the same price they paid for them. While we do not admire the packer, we know that he is not an imbecile. The imagination of the gentleman from Kentucky conjured up an impossible conspiracy.

We all listened to the speech delivered by the able and distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], which I think was the most effective speech delivered against the bill. I have heard others express the same opinion. We saw the leader of the opposition, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], rising in the House and saying that he knew that the gentleman from Wisconsin knew more about the bill than any other man in the House. Or did he say that gentleman knew more about the bill than any man in America, or was it more than any man now living. So that we have the right to assume that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], so far as his remarks were addressed to this bill, speaks the wisdom and the last word of those who are in opposition to it. I want to touch briefly upon the fundamental feature of his speech. He spoke for over an hour, and the speech has not yet appeared in the RECORD. In that speech he particularly referred to three cardinal features of the bill. In the first place, he admitted that the bill would work as to wheat. We have them fairly whipped as to wheat. Even the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] said that it would work as to wheat, and the gentleman from Wisconsin admits that, and he has introduced a bill here to apply the same principles to wheat. He objected to the other features of the bill for three reasons.

First, he said that it is a price-fixing bill.

Second, he said that it is a bill that would not work as to hogs.

Third, he stated that it will greatly raise the cost of living to the consumers of the Nation. I want to discuss those three points particularly.

First, as to price fixing. Of course this a a bill to adjust the prices of farm products in this country, so that they shall be fair and reasonable as compared to the prices of other basic products, but it is not a price-fixing bill such as the Government established during the war. As I said the other day, when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] was discussing this bill, during the war the Government fixed the price on wheat and beef and pork because wheat products and pork products are the foods which the soldiers of our Nation and our allies needed. The Government fixed a price which the farmer had to accept for those food products without regard to the price of any other product. The Government wanted those products to feed our Army and the armies of the allies because we had to furnish our allies with food for their armies, and by the way, we have not gotten our pay for it yet. The Government took the farmers' wheat and pork and beef at a price that was fixed by the Government, and the Government made a tremendous profit upon the food products which it took from the farmers at its own price. All of the money that our Government gave to the people of Europe was part of the profit that the Government made upon the farmers' products which it took at its own prices during the war. The Haugen bill is not a price-fixing measure. It is a price-adjusting bill, just the same as was the so-called bonus bill, which we passed over the President's veto. That bill was not a bonus. A bonus is a gift. Adjusted compensation is to be paid the soldiers to adjust the losses that the men suffered who fought the Great War for the Nation. This bill is not a price-fixing bill; it does not grant a bonus to the farmer, but it is an attempt to adjust the price paid to the farmer for his food products, so that he will receive a fair return for his labor in comparison with that which others receive in other lines of industry. It is a price-adjusting bill. The principle in this bill is the principle that Theodore Roosevelt laid down as the fundamental principle of his ideas of social and political justice. That was the principle of the square deal, and that is what this bill provides for. I admit that the working of the bill is based upon the tariff. Democrats do not like the tariff, but, gentlemen, we have the tariff and we are dealing with a tremendous emergency. Some say that excessive freight rates is an evil to be eliminated. I am one of those who think that, but you are not going to change freight rates or tariffs this year; it may take several years before you will get rid of them. We have an emergency with us now, and this is emergency legislation.

I admit that this bill will give the farmer the benefit of the tariff, but you gentlemen who live in the East, you gentlemen who live in the great manufacturing centers, who are fighting this bill, have been eating pie for 20 years at the tariff table, and this bill simply proposes to give the farmer a chance to get a bite of that pie. I am a Democrat and against the tariff as a general principle, but I am for this bill because it is the only plan that will give immediate and necessary relief to the farmers of the Nation while the present tariff rates are in effect. The gentleman from Wisconsin said that the bill would not work as to hogs. He drew quite a vivid picture of 85,000 hogs arriving upon the market of Chicago on a certain day, and I think he told you of the tremendous number of hogs produced in America. The volume and number of hogs sold on our markets each week is tremendous. I shall put some figures in the RECORD showing this. The gentleman told you that the big packers might say on that day when 85,000 hogs had arrived at Chicago that they would take only 50,000 hogs at the ratio price of 11 cents a pound, but as to the other 35,000 hogs they might say that they did not want them, but that they would pay 4 cents a pound for them, and that the corporation could take it or leave it. Then the gentleman said that he challenged any man in this House to deny the proposition that they would have to take it. The gentleman dramatically called for an answer. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] rose modestly, as he always does, and said that he would answer the question of the gentleman, and told the gentleman from Wisconsin what the owners of the hogs would do. He said they would ship them to some other market, and at that Members of the House laughed. Mr. Chairman, they should not have laughed at the gentleman from Iowa, they should have laughed at the gentleman from Wisconsin, because the gentleman from Iowa told exactly what would happen. The five great packers do not buy half of the hogs of America. There are five big packers buying hogs in Chicago, and there are 10 other packers buying there and more than 30 order buyers buying hogs upon the open market every day and shipping them to other packing-house cities in the United States. Surplus hogs above local consumption are produced in only limited sections of the country, and the packing houses in Boston, Baltimore, Buffalo, Cincinnati, or in any other city in the country where packing is done, have their buyers on the market in Chicago, in Kansas City, in Omaha, or St. Joseph buying hogs in competition with the packers.

The big packer is always a bear on the market. He is trying to bear the price of hogs on foot, and these other buyers stand there ready to buy, if the packers will not pay the market price. If the packers refused to buy those 35,000 hogs, which the gentleman from Wisconsin was going to sell them at 4 cents a pound, there would be others to buy them. It happens over and over again on certain days on the market that the big packers will not buy. They declare the price is too high, and they leave the yards and refuse to buy. But business does not stop, and no one is permitted to steal the hogs at 4 cents per pound. Other buyers buy them, and after a while when the packers find that they can not bear down the price they come back on the market. If the big packers were to absolutely refuse to buy any more hogs, it would affect the price of hogs but a short time. Gentlemen, there are 200 other packing houses in the United States, and the American people are bound to eat those hogs. If the five big packers went out of business, the other packers would expand their establishments and in record time the American business men would adjust themselves to the situation, and the business would go on without the big five packers, and perhaps it will in any event. For the big packers have suffered big losses because of the fall in prices of meat products along with the farmer. And so the picture which the gentleman drew was a thing which could not happen, that does not happen, and that never did happen, and that never will happen.

Having disposed of that part of his picture, I want to take up the one of overproduction. That is the thing that is held up as a frightful prospect if this bill becomes a law. They try to show you that overproduction is bound to follow if you advance the price of hogs and other livestock. I am going to show you that price does not determine the number of livestock in the United States. That rule for causing overproduction can not apply to them, never has applied to them, and never will. It is easy to talk about multiplying the number of hogs in the United States. Of course, the gentleman from Wisconsin told you that if you put the price of hogs up to $11 a hundred, it would increase the number of hogs 200 or 300 per cent. He said that he had a farm, and that he would go into the hog business heavily if this bill became a law. Increase of hogs can not be brought about by increase of price alone. There are three things that are the determining factors as to the number of hogs in this country.

The first factor is the law of nature. A sow has but two litters a year and only a certain average of pigs are saved. The weather is the second factor. The weather is much more important than price. I do not know how many pigs will be produced this year, but I will wager there will not be as many pigs in America on the 1st of next January as there were on the 1st of last January. Why? Because we have had the worst weather this spring for saving the spring pigs that we have had in 20 years, so the pig crop will not be as big next year as last. The last and most determining factor is the price of feed. You feed a hog for profit; you do not keep him for fun; and as the price of corn goes up the profit in feeding the hog goes down. We produce a lot of hogs in Nebraska, but we will not have as many next year, because high-priced corn caused loss on every hog we fed. Hogs in Nebraska lost money to the farmers last year because the price of corn was out of line with the price of hogs. The price of corn was too high in relation to the price of pork. Would anybody believe if the price of hogs went up 3 or 4 cents farmers would increase the number of hogs in the United States by 200 per cent or 300 per cent. Yet that is what the sage from Wisconsin claimed. Let us take the Department of Agriculture figures. In 1919 there were 74,584,000 hogs in America, and they were worth the average price per hog $17.85 at Chicago. In 1920 the number had fallen to 59,344,000 and the price per hundred was $13.91. Do you know why the price went down? Well, I will tell you. In 1920 the greatest deflation in history was forced upon agriculture in America, and it suffered the greatest blow it has ever known. The Federal reserve banking system began refusing credit to the farmers and insisting that the banks loaning to these farmers should compel them to pay up their loans. They did so and so they were forced to sell, and to sell at once, and the result was that hogs, cattle, and sheep went down like a falling stone. The farmers were forced to liquidate. In such times you can not sell your land or your home to settle your debts, but you can put your cattle, your hogs, or your sheep on a railroad train and sell them in the open markets of the world. When the Federal bank began to put on the screws the farmers had to put their sheep, cattle, and hogs upon a flooded market, and the loss to the American farmer was greater than he had ever suffered before. Now, to return to the figures. Hogs dropped in numbers from 74,000,000 in 1919 down to 59,000,000 in 1920. In 1921 the number of hogs was 56,000,000 and the price was $8.51. In 1922 the number was 58,000,000 and the price was $9.22.

In 1923 the number was 68,000,000, and the price went down to $7.55. In other words, instead of the number of hogs going up as the price went up those figures show that as soon as the rush to market in 1920 and 1921 was over the number of hogs increased, with a falling price. In 1922 the price was $9.22 and the number of hogs 58,000,000; and in 1924 there was 65,000,000, and the price only $7.55. In six years the number of hogs of America never varied 10,000,000, but the price declined $10 per hundred. The claim that an advance in price of $3 or $4 per hundred would result in overproduction is absolutely absurd and has no foundation in fact. The same rule holds good as to sheep. The number of sheep in the United States in 1919 was 48,000,000; in 1920, 39,000,000; 1921, 37,000,000; 1922, 36,000,000; 1923, 37,000,000; 1924, 38,000,000. So the number did not vary a million in all those years after 1920, and yet during that time every sheepmen got so sick because of falling prices and bankruptcy that he could not look a sheep in the face; but now sheep have risen so high in price that the fleece is golden as well as the hoof. Yet the variation in number between 1919 and 1924 was only a million. There is nothing whatever in the scarecrow of overproduction; there is nothing in that claim whatever as applied to livestock.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I can not now. The cattle proposition is one that apparently bothers some gentlemen. The price has varied more than $7 a hundred in six years, yet the number remains constant. Some one said here that the cattlemen are all broke. Well, they may be all broke, but they still keep right on raising cattle to feed the Nation. The number has decreased only 3,000,000 head in six years.

Gentlemen, the number of cattle in America has not been materially affected by the price, any more than sheep or hogs. It is determined by the laws of nature, feed, and weather, the same as other animals. Now, in regard to the matter of exports of hog products. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER] called attention the other day to the fact that because the packers handle this export makes the bill more workable as to hogs than with other products.

Now, gentlemen, the five great packers sell practically all the export pork products that America furnishes to the rest of the world. Of all the hogs we produce in America, we exported only 10 per cent in 1922, and in 1923 we exported 14 per cent. Because all our pork products sold for export abroad are handled by the big packers this Government corporation will easily determine the amount of loss on hog products exported because of the ratio price paid the American farmer. And if the loss is 2 or 3 cents a pound upon the exported product, the corporation will reimburse the packer for loss. The equalization fee may be a cent a pound or it may be half a cent a pound, but whatever it is it will be charged back to the farmer who sold the hogs. [Applause.]

Ninety per cent of all the hogs produced in the United States are consumed by the American people. After all, the packer is only a business machine through which the hog is processed at the cheapest possible price to prepare him for public consumption. If the Big Five Packers attempt to dominate the market, they quickly lose it to the hundreds of competitors that would spring up in every stockyard center in the country.

The gentleman from Massachusetts made an eloquent and persuasive speech in opposition to the bill. He complained bitterly of the probable raise in food costs to his people while thousands of spindlers were standing idle in the mills of New England.

There is no market for products of the mills in New England because economic conditions have destroyed the best market they ever had; the agricultural people do not manufacture.

The best market for American goods is not to be found beyond the seas. The greatest market in all the world is in the 48 States of this Union. The purchasing power of one-third of our population has been destroyed because of the disaster that has come to agriculture.

I listened to the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], in which he pictured in glowing terms that all was well in America. It may be all right in Louisiana, but it is all wrong in the great agricultural region of the United States that produces the food products of America and is in fact the granary and the meat market of the world. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] told you of the bank failures and bankruptcies that have fallen upon the people of the West and Middle West and that are bound to spread throughout the country unless checked by some relief to the farmer as provided in this bill.

He spoke of the panics that always followed in the wake of war. I have seen four panics in my lifetime. I saw the panic of 1873. I saw the panic of 1893. I saw the panic of 1907. But none of them brought such disaster and distress to the farming industry as has the depression of 1924.

It is all very well for the gentleman from Louisiana to boast of the prosperity that has come to the sugar planters of Louisiana bulwarked behind the wall of a protective tariff and taking their profits from the pockets of the American people. This bill will give the farmers of America who produce the foodstuffs that feed the Nation the benefit of the protection and the price fixing that others now enjoy under the favor of the tariff.

Gentlemen tell us that the remedy is rather to repeal the tariff and reduce high freight rates than to pass this bill.

But we have the tariff and the freight rates remain far above war levels, and we are not going to get them changed for the next two or three years, and agriculture must have help now or it will perish.

The bill, if put into effect, will materially advance the prices of the basic farm commodities the corporation deals in. The corporation will have the funds and will control the public market. It can advance the price of farm products which it elects to buy.

It may advance them 20 per cent, as estimated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] in his speech, or 40 per cent, as assumed by the gentleman from Wisconsin in the second section of his speech.

But no matter whether the advance totals one billion, two billions, or three billions, the farmer is going to get the benefit of it, and that is the exact purpose of the bill.

If this Congress is honest in its desire to help the farmer, the only way that he can be helped in the present situation that confronts him and the country is to see that he secures a better price for the products of his toil.

I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that we ought to greatly reduce the excessive tariff that now robs not only the farmer but all the rest of us that have to buy the necessities of life.

But this Congress is not going to repeal the present tariff law. So this bill by its provisions gives the farmer the benefit of the tariff, which now fails to benefit him in the slightest degree.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me perhaps I can call attention to some features of this bill not yet discussed in detail upon this floor.

I assume that every Member of this body realizes that agriculture is in distress and that every Member of this body is anxious to do something for the relief of farmers.

Banks in the West are failing. They may have too many banks there, but that does not account entirely for the fact that so many of them are failing. Banks have commenced to fail in the Middle West, and they do not have too many banks there. Already factories in New England are commencing to slow down, and all this means that the buying power of the farmers is disappearing. Frozen assets in the banks of the agricultural sections bring about, from every quarter in those sections, the crash of failing banks. Less purchasing power for farmers brings about the slowing up of factories in the East. All are anxious to do whatever is possible for the relief of this situation.

I live in a farming section. I represent here a farming constituency. I am a farmer myself, live on my own farm, and farm it myself. If I were able to look at this bill from the viewpoint of its proponents and could be led to believe that it would accomplish the wonders that are claimed for it, I would be most enthusiastic in my support of it. But I can not convince myself that this bill will accomplish the miraculous results claimed for it. There are other measures pending before the committee which will accomplish some measure of relief. I myself, within the last two days, have introduced a bill which I will explain to the committee if I have time now, but if not I will attempt to do so under the five-minute rule. My bill, I think, will bring immediate relief to the farmer, and it does not embrace within its provisions any of these objectionable provisions about which we hear so much.

Now, let me insist, first of all, that this bill will produce the very thing we want to avoid. It will produce an overproduction, a greater production, if it works, and I am making this impossible assumption that it is going to work and that the ratio prices are going to be established and sustained. If the farmers can be made to believe it is going to work it will have the same result, it will result in overproduction.

In 1917, we slaughtered over 57,000,000 hogs in the United States, but the price went up, and in 1923 we slaughtered 81,000,000 hogs. This increase in the production and slaughter of hogs was brought about by a price increase. The increase amounted to 24,000,000 or nearly 50 per cent.

The average production of corn from 1903 to 1914 was 2,500,000,000 bushels; in 1923 it was 3,000,000,000 bushels—an increase in production of nearly 25 per cent, all on account of the increase in the selling price of corn. From 1909 to 1913 we produced an average of 600,000,000 bushels of wheat; in 1922 we produced 886,000,000 bushels, all due to the increase in the price of wheat.

If you can make the farmers believe they are going to get a bigger price for these things they are going to produce more. You have a check in this bill which is almost ridiculous in its terms. The check you propose for over-production is that this corporation shall send out information to farmers telling them of the dangers of overproduction and of the increased amount of losses the corporation will sustain if there is an overproduction, to be charged back against them. What difference does that make to farmers? Advise them over the radio as much as you please, or by documents that you send out, not to produce so much; if at the same time you advise them you are going to pay them more, of course, they will produce more.

Now, you are going to export a surplus. You are going to buy it in this country at the ratio price and you are going to keep on exporting a surplus which, during the period of five years, will keep getting ever bigger and bigger, and you are going to sell it in the foreign market at the best price obtainable and the best price obtainable means the cheapest price. You are going to dump it on the foreign markets and charge back to the farmers, through the equalization receipts you give them, the amount of the losses, and you must estimate what they will be.

Many of you are supporting this bill because you say the farmers want this bill. Many of you are supporting it because you say nothing better has been proposed. I am opposing it because nothing worse than this could be proposed.

Let me tell you what is going to happen. We have in our tariff laws what we call a countervailing duty. You will find it in section 303 of the Fordney bill. We provide that if any foreign nation gives in any way a bounty for anything produced in that nation and they send it over here the Secretary of the Treasury takes notice of that fact and estimates how much that bounty is, and then our tariff duties immediately increase—and Congress does not have to be in session to do that—to the amount of the bounty. That is our tariff law. If any other nation should try to dump any surplus in this country that is what the law would require the officials of this Government to do. We enforced this provision once against Russia.

Would you be surprised to know that this theory of countervailing duties is not our theory at all but that we borrowed it from other nations? It has been in every tariff bill we have passed commencing with the bill of 1897 down to the present time. We borrowed this idea from France. They have it there. Japan has the same sort of a law containing exactly our provisions; Belgium has the same sort of a law; Portugal has the same sort of a law, and I do not know how many other nations of this world have that law, but many of them have.

I have mentioned four commercial nations which consume our foodstuffs when we send them abroad, and every one of these four commercial nations produces the exact foodstuffs we are sending abroad, except Japan, and Japan produces rice in large quantities. When they exercise their right, and it is obligatory on their officials to impose this countervailing duty against us, does not that limit our foreign market for the produce we are going to send out? As soon as you commence to dump this surplus in any of these countries I have mentioned, and I might mention others, at once they put up their tariff as against these identical articles by just as much as your bounty amounts to, and your bounty on wheat, you say, is going to amount to 50 cents a bushel. They increase, then, their tariff 50 cents a bushel. Our relations with Japan are strained enough now, and when you commence to give bounties to rice producers, or try to do it, Japan imposes that same sort of countervailing duty against us, and you can not export to Japan. In other words, the immediate effect of these dumping provisions in these bills will be to limit the possible markets of the world where we can dump these surplus products.

I do not know what the law is in Germany. I do not know what sort of a countervailing duty they have there, but I know they have a tariff commission composed of 50 or 60 members, professors of universities and State officials, and they can adjust their tariffs whenever they want to in order to meet this sort of condition. But they have not any money to pay for anything we might send over there, whether they have these countervailing duty provisions in their law or not.

Therefore, as soon as you put this law into effect, you have a very small part of the world in which you can sell this surplus. As soon as they interpose these tariff walls against us, and they can, you increase by an amount which it would be difficult to estimate the losses of this corporation. Your "emergency receipts" would not amount to anything, and in less than six months of time, or at any rate in less than one year of time, the entire capital stock of your corporation would be entirely wiped out and a financial crash would come—carrying down first of all the farmers.

I know of no great financier in the country, I know of no great economist who is not opposing this bill, who does not declare that it is unworkable in all its provisions and that it is economically unsound, that it will bring with it ruin and destruction. I received as a part of the propaganda in favor of this bill a day or two ago what purported to be an extract from a letter written by Otto Kahn, and they called attention to the fact that the statement is not true that financiers are generally opposing this bill "because here is what Otto Kahn of New York, one of the world's great bankers has said about it." I now want to read you what Otto Kahn has said about it in a letter to me dated April 22, 1924. Referring to this letter that is being circulated, he said:

> I was not aware that my letter to Secretary Wallace was being circulated by farm bureau organizations, as I have given no authority to that effect to any such organization. That letter was not meant to be, and in fact is not, an indorsement of the McNary-Haugen bill as it stands. There are indeed several features in that bill in the shape in which I last saw it to which I take decided exception.

I will put the entire letter in the RECORD so that you may all read it.

The letter referred to follows:

> KUHN, LOEB & CO.,
> New York April 22, 1924.
>
> Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
>
> DEAR CONGRESSMAN RAINEY: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 21st instant and thank you for sending me the inclosed copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, containing your correspondence with the Illinois Agricultural Association, which I shall peruse with great interest and from which I feel sure I shall derive valuable enlightenment.
>
> I was not aware that my letter to Secretary Wallace was being circulated by farm bureau organizations, as I have given no authority to that effect to any such organization. I did inform Secretary Wallace, in reply to an inquiry from him, that he was perfectly at liberty to use my letter in any way he desired.
>
> That letter was not meant to be, and, in fact, is not an indorsement of the McNary-Haugen bill as it stands. There are, indeed, several features in that bill in the shape in which I last saw it to which I take decided exception; but as to the justice of the theory upon which the proposed measure rests, I do not see, in the light of such knowledge as is available to me thus far, how I can conscientiously modify the views as stated in my communication to Secretary Wallace. Perhaps you may be interested in perusing the inclosed copy of a letter which I wrote recently to a gentleman who had criticized my attitude concerning the McNary-Haugen bill.
>
> I can only hope and believe that full, free, and fair public discussion will finally lead to a solution reasonably satisfactory to all concerned.

I expect to be in Washington in the early future and shall not fail to endeavor, as you suggest, to further acquaint myself with the situation, and I hope particularly to have the pleasure of meeting you on that occasion.

Believe me,

Very faithfully yours, OTTO H. KAHN.

Mr. RAINEY. So the proponents of this legislation do not even have this banker to sustain them.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY

Farm bureau organizations are attempting to obtain support of the dairy industry by representing to them that the bill now under consideration is the only relief for the wheat farmers of the Northwest, and that if it fails the wheat farmers of the Northwest will take up dairying, thus presenting increased competition in this field. In other words, they have resorted to a species of intimidation. As a matter of fact, if this bill goes into operation and can be made to work, as they say it will, the dairy industry in this country will receive a blow from which it will never recover. This industry depends largely upon the by-products of wheat, which can be obtained now at a very reasonable price. I am receiving letters from millers all over my district and in other States asking my opinion as to whether this bill will pass or not, and whether or not the plan can be operated. If the bill passes, and the plan can be put into operation, they expect, of course, to limit their production of flour to the home demand. At the present time, nearly every mill manufactures for export—both little and big. When flour is manufactured for export the by-products—bran and shorts—remain here and are available for the dairy industry. Without these by-products it would be exceedingly difficult to make dairying profitable. Whenever the mills are grinding for export these by-products are especially cheap. When the mills are not grinding for export these by-products are high. If the wheat which is now milled here for export goes to the port mills of Europe for grinding, as it will under this bill, the by-products will be disposed of there. The same ships which carry to the port mills of Europe wheat for milling can carry the by-products to Holland and Denmark. Holland and Denmark now provide the serious competition presented to the dairy industry of this country. They are producing dairy products there now cheaper than we can produce them here. Dumping wheat abroad as contemplated in this bill gives our dairy competitors in Denmark an opportunity to produce dairy products cheaper than there. In connection with my farm I operate a dairy with over 100 head of purebred Holstein-Fresian cattle. If this bill becomes a law my entire herd will be for immediate sale at a very low price, I assure you. Dairy prices depend on how much we can export. When we were exporting powdered milk and canned milk in large quantities we obtained our best prices. In these countries they have also by standardizing pork products developed the strongest competition our hog producers ever had. These by-products of wheat make excellent feed for hogs. The effect then of the operation of this bill would be to furnish our hog producers with a competition they have not had before. From almost any viewpoint this bill is bad.

HOT-AIR SPEECHES AND THE FARMERS' PROBLEMS

Promotion of measures to help the farmers commenced in the Sixty-sixth Congress with the emergency tariff bill and the organization of the farm bloc. In the Sixty-sixth Congress we had a Democratic President, and the farmers' emergency tariff bill was vetoed. It could not be passed over his head. I was a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress and voted against this bunk measure. The Sixty-eighth Congress, however, was a Republican Congress. I was not a Member of that Congress. We had a Republican Executive and the farmers' emergency tariff measure became a law immediately. It was the first of the "gold bricks" handed to farmers, but other "gold bricks" were handed out in rapid succession, and there were more "hot-air speeches" made in the House in the interest of farmers during the Sixty-seventh Congress than had been made in all the prior years since the adoption of the Constitution. Courageous Members of Congress grandly went "over the top" for farmers. Mails were loaded down with speeches made for farmers. With disgusting frequency farmers all over the United States found these speeches in their mails. Six or seven of these alleged farm-relief bills were passed, the object of all of them being to enable the farmer to borrow more money to increase his overhead. Farmers know now how many of them were fooled by these measures. All of these received the hearty support of the American Farm Bureau Association, with its high-salaried officials—swivel-chair farmers, all of them. I wonder if any Member of Congress who perpetrated speeches of that character during the Sixty-sixth Congress and during the Sixty-seventh Congress is going to make a campaign for reelection on account of the record he made in supporting these bunk measures. The American Farm Bureau Association has abandoned them all and does not point with pride to its support of any of them, and the crowning "gold brick" proposition of all was embraced in the tariff protection features of the Fordney Act, which pretended to give protection to farmers. Before the election in 1920, I remember that Senator Nelson announced on the floor of the Senate: "You will sweat great drops of blood before you pass another tariff bill unless it contains also protection for farmers," and the Fordney bill contained this protection. All the protection afforded by the farmers' emergency tariff bill was carried over into the Fordney bill with its higher rates on the things the farmers are compelled to buy. The protection given to farmers, of course, did not work, because the farmer exports and can not limit his exportations as the manufacturers can. The higher rates given the manufacturers did work, and therefore the purchasing power of the farmers' commodities is not what it was before the Fordney bill went into effect. Now comes the bill we are considering—the biggest "gold brick" of all for farmers, the proposition which is to win for Members of Congress who support it the farmers' vote. Fortunately for those who vote for it, it can not pass. If it does pass, it can not be operated. But if it does pass and can be operated, a financial crash will come in the near future such as no nation has ever experienced, and will carry down, first of all, with it the farming industry.

FARMING THE FARMER

This bill was not drawn by the Committee on Agriculture. It was originally known as the Peek plan, and was the creation of John N. Peek. Later it became known as the Brand plan, for the reason that Charles J. Brand drafted the present bill and has superintended all of its amendments. I have had occasion before to tell who Charles J. Brand is and to discuss his questionable relations with the packers. In remarks I have extended in the RECORD, and which can be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 9, 1924, I had occasion to discuss him; and later on in my interview published in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat on May 13, 1924, which I will reprint in the Appendix to this speech, under the general leave to print which has been given. The connection of George N. Peek, however, with this bill is not quite so well known, and he has not been discussed as yet to any extent. George N. Peek was for a long time prominently connected with Deere & Co., manufacturers of farm implements. At the end of the war he accepted a very large salary tendered him by the Moline Plow Co. and became the president of the Moline Plow Co. at a very large salary, indeed, which I have heard estimated all the way from $50,000 to $100,000 a year. He withdrew all his investments in the Deere Co. and invested with the Moline Plow Co. and assumed the management of the Moline Plow Co. If the bill we are considering and for which he is to such a large degree responsible does not work any better than the Moline Plow Co. has been operating under his management, it will be a tremendous failure. The Moline Plow Co. has failed under his management and is now in the hands of its creditors. His salary has been greatly reduced, and I have heard that he is now receiving the very moderate salary of $10,000 or $12,000 a year. His authority, however, has been greatly restricted by the creditors' committee which now has charge of the Moline Plow Co. The investigation conducted by the Federal Trade Commission recently demonstrated conclusively a combination between all the manufacturers of farm implements to increase the price of those implements to farmers. From 1914 to 1918 the price of farm implements to farmers increased to 73 per cent. Among the men who have been actively engaged in farming the farmers George N. Peek has always been most prominent. Both Mr. Peek and Mr. Brand are swivel-chair farmers, helping always to devise and develop the methods and practices which have contributed so much toward bringing about the conditions from which farmers suffer to-day. If they can succeed in putting over this bill, all that they have done heretofore in the direction of bringing about conditions so destructive to farmers will fade into insignificance when compared with the injury this bill will do.

POSSIBLE MATERIAL FOR FUTURE INVESTIGATIONS

I have never seen as much evidence of propaganda, as much evidence of large expenditures of money in the promotion of any economic problem as is now in evidence in the efforts to pass the McNary-Haugen bill. I am wondering where it all comes from. Not long ago there was contributed through the Council of Grain Exchanges $100,000 toward farm bureau organizations. It will be interesting to know how much of this sum was contributed by those grain dealers who now have large stocks of wheat on hand. It will be interesting to know how much was contributed by packers who now have large stocks of meat on hand. These grain dealers and packers will be handed at once and overnight $500,000,000 if this bill becomes a law; and if it operates at all, it will operate long enough to yield them this profit. After that the crash will come. It will be interesting to know how much the packers and the grain dealers are contributing now. In the appendix to this speech I will print a letter I have just received from B. F. Yoakum, an economist of national reputation, who is the originator of the Yoakum plan, which is embraced in the Curtis-Aswell bill. It will be noted that in this letter Mr. Yoakum discusses the benefits which a few people will reap to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars during the brief period this bill may possibly operate, if it passes. Mr. Yoakum is a capitalist with large and varied interests and is in a position to know what he is talking about. There comes also in this connection rumors that two grain firms in Chicago, now practically bankrupt, one of them connected also with the packing interests, are to be revamped and reestablished to act as marketing agencies in connection with this bill, if it passes. There are also rumors of a great marketing company, even now in operation, which is to be used in connection with this bill, if it passes and can be operated, and connections are hinted at which will make it possible to utilize in connection with this company the inspection possibilities of the Department of Agriculture. When the crash comes, if this bill can be operated, there may be interesting investigations connecting up all the propaganda which is now being exercised for the bill with some, if not all, of the propositions I have mentioned. There are many Members of Congress who think they are now, in supporting the bill under consideration, "playing safe" who may be fortunate, indeed, if the bill fails. In a recent interview Doctor Jardine, president of the Kansas State Agricultural College, said:

> Were this measure to be enacted into law its practical working out would leave the men who fathered it without a shred of reputation. If I lured the farmers into following any such fantasy as the McNary-Haugen scheme, when the inevitable reaction came my usefulness would be destroyed, and I would be ruined utterly.

There is no Member of Congress who is supporting this measure to whom the slightest suspicion of wrongdoing can ever attach. I am simply calling attention to conditions which may arise and which will arise if this bill passes and can be operated for even a brief period of time, which will, I am afraid, make it difficult to defend a vote for this measure. [Applause.]

APPENDIX

Under the general permission to extend remarks in the RECORD, I print in connection with my speech my explanation of the farmers' bill for emergency relief, which I have introduced, but since printing and distributing this explanation among Members I have reintroduced and simplified it by leaving out the price-fixing features. The bill is numbered 9382.

Following that I print the letter I have just received from Hon. B. F. Yoakum, of New York City, dated May 23, 1916.

Following that I print my interview in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat to which I have referred in my speech:

A SIMPLE PLAN FOR IMMEDIATE FARM RELIEF

(By HENRY T. RAINEY)

Something must be done for the farmer. From the West and the Middle West there comes the crash of failing banks—farmers' notes, frozen assets. The mills of New England are no longer running in three shifts. Many of them are closed—the buying power of farmers is failing. The key industry, agriculture, is in distress. Something must be done at once. The McNary-Haugen bill will not furnish relief. It will only hasten and intensify the impending calamity.

A SIMPLE PLAN

I propose a simple, workable plan. It does not involve an initial charge on the Treasury of $200,000,000. It does not involve an issue of bonds and notes by a Government-created corporation of $1,000,000,000. It does not involve the creation of a new department of the Government with many thousand employees. There is in it no labored, perhaps impossible, plan to restore pre-war purchasing power of the farmer's basic products by artificially raising prices and attempting in a complicated, perhaps unworkable and impossible, way to relate those prices to the oil commodities of to-day. There are no penalties to be inflicted upon farmers in my plan; no emergency "scrip" or receipts. No attempt to charge back to farmers losses which will evidently be enormous and perhaps appalling. The plan I propose can be operated for a year for less than $50,000. My plan involves no suspension of economic laws. It will not destroy or injure existing primary markets.

THE PLAN

Commission: The bill I introduced last night provides for a commission to consist of the Secretary of Commerce, who shall be chairman; the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall be vice chairman; the chairman of the United States Tariff Commission; and an administrative commissioner to be appointed by the President from not less than three individuals recommended to the President by the Secretary of Agriculture, the administrative commissioner to receive a salary of $1,000 per month during the period he acts as such commissioner and to engage in no other employment actively during that time. The commission may appoint a secretary at a salary of $500 per month, and shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia in some room at the disposal of the Secretary of Commerce, to be designated by him. For the expenses of this commission the sum of $50,000 is authorized to be appropriated.

Emergency: Whenever the commission finds that there will be, during the period of one year after the passage of this act, at any time a surplus for export of wheat or flour or food products of swine, the commission may request the President to declare an emergency. When the emergency ends the commission may request the President to declare the emergency ended.

Customs scrip: The commission may prepare and issue customs scrip in convenient form and denominations, to be printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and to be accepted in payment of customs dues, and to be legal tender for no other purpose, the "scrip" to be canceled after its use.

Cost of production and selling price abroad: The commission is required to estimate the cost of production of wheat and swine, and to add a profit of 10 per cent for farmers. The commission also estimates the probable average price in world markets, outside of the United States, of said products, for a period of a year, and if the commission finds that the average selling price abroad will be less than the average cost of production in the United States plus 10 per cent, the commission shall thereupon declare the price difference, which shall be known as the export deficiency price. Thereupon, all purchasers of swine and wheat from farmers shall be required under such rules as the commission may prescribe to pay to the farmers the cost of production plus 10 per cent.

Rebate of export deficiency price: Whenever during said emergency period wheat, flour, or food products of swine are exported the exporters shall receive a rebate of the export deficiency price on each shipment in customs "scrip" in such manner as the commission may by its regulations determine.

Deficiency price not to apply to products on hand: The export deficiency price shall not in any manner attach to stocks of grain or flour, or food products of swine, in primary markets, or in the possession or ownership of grain dealers, millers, or packers, at the time of the passage of this act.

Publishing price: The export price and the deficiency price shall be published in such manner as the commission may determine on the first day of every month during the existence of the emergency, and the export deficiency price may be changed by the commission, if necessary, on the first day of any month during the period of any emergency.

Penalties: There are no penalties, except for counterfeiting or altering the "scrip." But any purchaser from a farmer who evades, and so forth, the payment of at least the emergency price for said products shall be fined not less than $100 and not more than the emergency price he should have paid.

This is all there is to the plan. I invite attention to my bill. If a parliamentary situation can develop during the consideration of the McNary-Haugen bill which will permit it I will attempt to substitute my plan.

WHAT MY PLAN DOES NOT APPLY TO

My plan does not apply to corn. Our exportations of corn are negligible, and corn goes up as the price of hogs goes up. It does not apply to wool. We import wool. It does not apply to beef products. Our exportation of beef products is not great, and the price is not now the subject of much complaint. The spread between feeders and the finished beef animals is not as great as it ought to be. There is a method of reaching this which I will discuss on the floor.

My plan will bring immediate relief to farmers. It will stop the bank panic which seems to impend in the West and in the Middle West. By restoring the buying power of farmers it will start again the mills of New England. Farmers will buy when they have money with which to buy.

EFFECT ON REVENUES

The effect on our revenues will be negligible. Last year we exported $116,000,000 of wheat. We will have less for export this year. In my section of Illinois half of the winter-wheat area has been plowed up. It was winterkilled. It will be planted to other crops. Assuming that the ratio price suggested in the hearings on the McNary-Haugen bill will also be the cost of production plus 10 per cent, the amount of customs scrip paid in at our custom houses will probably not exceed $30,000,000. In 1922 we exported $200,000,000 worth of pork products. We exported more than that in 1923. We will export less than that this year. The breeding stock has decreased at least 12 per cent. The acceptance of the Dawes plan may restore the buying power of Germany within the next 12 months. Before the war Germany took enormous quantities of our pork products. She takes practically none now. The export price difference as to pork products will be less, on account of the possible increase in the price in world markets due to the demands Germany may make. Customs scrip accepted on account of pork products exported will probably not exceed $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. Perhaps it will amount to much less than that. By restoring the buying power of farmers and by adding some hundreds of millions of dollars to the income of farmers, we make possible larger customhouse receipts to offset a part, and perhaps a considerable part, of the loss occasioned by the cashing in of customs "scrip." By restoring to farmers the incomes they did have and the incomes they ought to have now, many thousands of them will again enter the income-tax paying class, and those that are now so fortunate as to be in that class will pay more taxes, and it may be that we will find the decrease in custom receipts entirely met by the increased revenues from these other sources.

TARIFF ADJUSTMENTS

My bill, of course, provides for such tariff adjustments by the President as will make possible the effective operation of the plan during the period of emergency.

DEFEAT OF THE M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

In the event of the defeat of the McNary-Haugen bill, if I am not able to substitute my plan for it on the floor, I expect to present it immediately to the committee for consideration. It will require no extended hearings. The hearings already had have developed all the facts in the case. The majority report and the minority report are real encyclopedias on the subjects they cover. My bill was hurriedly drawn yesterday afternoon, but I believe it to be workable, and that it will need few changes. If the emergency is not over in a year from now, Congress can extend the operation of the plan over such periods as may be necessary, or apply it to other agricultural products, if it seems to be necessary.

DOES NOT INTERFERE WITH OTHER PERMANENT RELIEF PLANS

My plan attempts only to give emergency relief. It does not interfere with any of the very workable and excellent plans suggested for the permanent relief of agriculture. The Yoakum plan as embodied in the Curtis-Aswell bill can also be put into operation whenever Congress desires to do it. Under a permanent and orderly system of marketing agriculture ought always to be a profitable industry. It would not interfere with the operation of the Norris-Sinclair bill, if that should be determined upon as the ultimate method of permanent relief, with its proposed cheaper methods of distribution. It would not interfere with the plan which Senator SMITH of South Carolina has introduced, or expects to introduce in the Senate, which seems to combine the marketing system of the California Fruit Growers' Association with the restricted production plans of the tobacco growers of this country or the coffee producers of Brazil.

FARMERS SEEING "RED"

In some sections of the United States farmers are beginning to see "red." Can you blame them? The doors of hope to them appear to be closed. We must restore to them the opportunities they ought to have, and we must do it at once. My plan will do it. I ask the cooperation of Members of the House of Representatives.

Very truly yours,

HENRY T. RAINEY.

Dated May 20, 1924.

NEW YORK, May 23, 1924.

MY DEAR MR. RAINEY: I have received and read carefully your bill—H. R. 9382. It possesses much merit, and I wish Congress had more time to consider real important farm legislation. The enactment of your bill would fill a very important gap. It would go a long way toward taking care of the distressed farmers who need temporary relief. I trust that Congress can be impressed with the importance of its passage.

With many the impression prevails that the President of the United States is vested with the power to declare emergencies and carry out the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill. This is an error, as under the operation of the bill it provides that under special emergencies, if the corporation—which is to be composed of the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman and four others to be appointed by the President—finds that there is a surplus for export of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or the products thereof, under estimates made by the corporation, it shall immediately notify the President in writing of its findings. Upon such notification from the corporation it shall be the duty of the President by proclamation to declare that such an emergency exists.

Whenever the corporation finds that the emergency no longer exists it shall notify the President in writing, and it shall be the duty of the President by proclamation to declare the emergency terminated.

After the declaration of an emergency in respect to any agricultural commodity coming under this bill the corporation may designate a price for such commodity under what is known as the "ratio price," thus fixing the price of that commodity. This process of price fixing is repeated monthly under computations made by the Secretary of Labor as soon as practical after the passage of this act, based upon "pre-war commodity prices" during the period 1905 to 1914, inclusive.

The bill does not contemplate any change in the board of directors, as their appointment extends during its corporate existence and the board exercises the exclusive and absolute control of $200,000,000, paid for its stock, in addition to which it is authorized to borrow money, issue bonds, notes, or other evidence of indebtedness to the extent of five times the amount of the original stock of $200,000,000, making the total authorization $1,200,000,000, or an amount $419,000,000 greater than the total farm value of the entire wheat crop, the entire rice crop, and the entire value of sheep for the year 1921. (Department of Agriculture.)

There has probably never been as much propaganda money expended on any economic problem to influence the passage of any legislation as has been expended on the McNary-Haugen bill. Therefore some people and some interests are far more interested than the farmers in the enactment of this bill, which under its operation makes it possible for others to reap benefits to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars during any period of its operation.

The producers of wheat are being deceived through the belief, as stated in a newspaper report of this morning, that wheat now selling at $1.09 a bushel would bring to the producers under this bill $1.48 a bushel.

Section 202 of the McNary-Haugen bill provides that the corporation shall prepare estimates in respect to agricultural commodities as to the probable price obtainable for the exportable surplus, the probable losses of the corporation from its transaction, and the expenses of the corporation.

The corporation shall determine as nearly as may be the total amount of such expenses and losses which will be incurred or sustained attributable to the operation of the corporation in respect to each agricultural commodity during each operation period. Such amounts are to be known as equalization fees, and the equalization fees shall be paid under such regulations as the corporation may prescribe upon every sale of such agricultural commodity made for or on account of the producer. To avoid this charge against the producer being neglected the corporation requires the purchaser of the product to collect such equalization fees from the producer, and it may require the purchaser to issue a receipt to the producer.

Furthermore, the corporation may require both the producer and the purchaser to file under oath the terms of their transactions that the corporation may determine the disposition of the equalization fees paid by one and collected by the other, in connection with any other facts which the corporation may deem necessary to properly check all transactions between the purchaser and the producer. Every producer or purchaser who violates these regulations or fails to pay or collect the equalization fees shall be liable to such fee and a penalty equal to one-half of the fee, such fee and penalty to be recovered in a civil suit brought by the corporation against the producer and purchaser.

The funds from the equalization fees are to be deposited to pay all operating expense of the corporation. If there is a surplus after taking care of all expenses, losses, etc., in connection with this "blind pool" that the farmers are invited to enter, the corporation shall pay the balance pro rata to the persons from whom the equalization fees have been collected and deposited in the pool.

Therefore the producer can not be certain of the amount that he will receive, either in cash or participating receipts. In other words, the producer is going into a partnership, known in a commercial sense as a syndicate issuing participating receipts, the cash value realized under the participating receipts depending largely upon the managers of the syndicate. In this copartnership between the Government and the producer the producer places the entire management under the control of the directors of the corporation as syndicate managers, and at some time during the process of marketing the producer's products, after paying all expenses and losses, the producer will be advised the result of the syndicate operation and the amount due each of the producers.

Section 301 provides that if the President of the United States finds that the importation into the United States of any commodity placed under the emergency clause is increasing materially or is likely to increase materially the losses of the corporation, he shall by proclamation declare such fact; and then it shall be unlawful, until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress, to import into the United States any such commodity, except under such regulations and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President may prescribe.

After the President ascertains what rate of duty added to the then existing rate of duty on such commodity would be sufficient to prevent such losses, he shall in such proclamation declare such fact, and on and after the day following such proclamation and until the termination of such special emergency, or until otherwise ordered by the President or Congress, the rate of duty so ascertained shall be levied, collected, and paid upon such commodity, when imported, in addition to and in the same manner as the then existing rate of duty; but in no case shall any rate of duty under the then existing tariff law be reduced. This places in the hands of the corporation the power to change our established tariff practically without notice.

With my best regards, I am,

Very truly yours, B. F. YOAKUM.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

[Article appearing in the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Tuesday morning, May 13, 1924]

CONGRESSMAN RAINEY REPLIES TO RUBEY ON MCNARY-HAUGEN BILL—ILLINOISAN DECLARES MEASURE CAN NOT ACCOMPLISH WHAT IS CLAIMED FOR IT AND WILL NOT BE ENACTED

(By Charles P. Keyser, Globe-Democrat staff correspondent)

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Representative HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois (Democrat), differs widely from Representative THOMAS L. RUBEY, Missouri Democratic member of the House Committee on Agriculture, in his view on the McNary-Haugen bill, creating an export corporation capitalized by Uncle Sam, who furnishes all the money and fixes prices on agricultural commodities. RAINEY was inspired to write a statement by the summary of the bill, which appeared in last Sunday's Globe-Democrat from RUBEY. RAINEY declares it is impossible for the bill to pass either the House or Senate, and that if by any chance it should pass, the President would veto it. The bill is sure to occupy a conspicuous place in the public interest in the next few days. In RAINEY'S words, "something will happen which will give it for some days a front-page position in all newspapers."

RAINEY handed to the Globe-Democrat correspondent a detailed statement of his views on the McNary-Haugen bill, intended as a reply to RUBEY or to anyone else advocating the passage of the bill. It follows:

TEXT OF STATEMENT

"If I could make myself believe that the McNary-Haugen bill would accomplish what its proponents claim for it, I would be shouting for it from the housetops. All my investments are in the farming industry, and I therefore have a strong personal interest in legislation of this character. A great many farm organizations are vigorously opposing the McNary-Haugen bill. A great many farm newspapers are also opposing it. Every financier and economist in the United States whose opinion is worth anything regards it as impossible, unworkable, and dangerous—especially to the farmers. The Illinois Agricultural Association, however, is a vigorous supporter of this legislation. The American Farm Bureau Association is also supporting it, and many exceedingly important farm papers. Most wonderful things are claimed for it. It is the Aladdin's lamp which is to accomplish wonders, greater even than were ever dreamed of in old Bagdad.

"I am not on the committee which has this bill under consideration. Therefore I am not leading any movement for it or against it. However, I will attempt as briefly as I can to call attention to some features of the proposed legislation which really, it seems to me, should be eliminated from any farmers' relief bill. I have had some experience in bill drafting and in legislation during my long and somewhat strenuous service in Congress. Inasmuch as I had a fair degree of intelligence, I hope, when I entered Congress, I ought to be as well qualified to discuss this bill at least as those farm-bureau officials who claim so much for this bill and who have had no experience in matters of this kind at all.

AN ARMY OF OFFICEHOLDERS

"The bill creates a corporation with four directors, who are to receive salaries of $10,000 a year each. These directors are authorized to appoint as many officers, employees, and agents as they may deem necessary; to fix their compensation at any amount which may appeal to the directors; to fix their tenure of office and to remove them at any time. The corporation starts out with $200,000,000 in good money to be contributed by the Federal Government, and the corporation can then issue a billion dollars of its own notes and bonds and float them on the market in such way as the directors may deem proper. The principal office of the corporation is in Washington, but the directors can establish as many agencies or branch offices in various parts of the United States as they may think necessary.

"These directors are given most unusual powers. The bill, after specifically conferring upon the corporation many general and special powers, concludes by giving the corporation all the 'powers,' it may think it requires, 'not specifically denied by law'—a blanket clause most unusual. The bill clothes the corporation it creates with more drastic powers than has ever been given to any governmental agency since the days of the Stuart Kings. No man can hazard a guess as to how many employees will be needed, but when I describe the working of the bill a little those who read this article can imagine how many agents, officers, and employees there will be. What the farmer wants accomplished are the results claimed in this bill. But the time has come when he must think for himself and determine for himself whether this bill will accomplish these results, and he ought to understand how it will work.

HOW BILL WILL WORK

"May I suggest following illustration: There is, let us say, a washerwoman who lives in the outskirts of a city who has raised a pig. She concludes to sell the animal to a butcher. The pig belongs to her. Ordinarily she would have the right to make a sale at any price which might appeal to her, and at any time, and to any person. An emergency has been declared under the bill with reference to swine—and there always will be an emergency in all probability under this bill—and this is what she will be compelled to do in order to sell: After finding a purchaser she will be compelled to ascertain from a 'terminal market' what the price is at which she can sell. She can not sell for less than that, and I do not think she could sell for more. The purchaser will also be compelled at his peril to ascertain the exact selling price for that month. I do not know where the 'terminal market' will be. The bill does not disclose that, but the producer and the purchaser will be compelled to get this information also from the corporation. The purchaser then pays for the pig. But this is not all. Both the producer and the purchaser must find out from the terminal market what the 'equalization fee' is at that time, and after the purchaser has paid for the pig he is compelled to collect from the producer in cash an 'equalization fee.' Neither of them will know what this amount is until they make the trade. Then he gives the producer a receipt, which he is to obtain in some mysterious way from some source not disclosed in the House bill, but of which they will both be advised later on by the corporation.

"All we know about the 'equalization receipt' is that it is to be printed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. At some distant time in the future the washerwoman who has raised the pig may stand a chance to get some good money for this 'equalization receipt.' How much no one knows, but she has paid good money for it herself. The corporation may by the rules it adopts permit her to dispose of it, and the receipt can probably act as 'circulating media' until somebody redeems it at some indefinite time in the future, not less than one year from the date of its issue. This sounds complicated enough, does it not? But this is not all. Both the washerwoman and the purchaser will be compelled to make out a report as to the sale. The reports will be separate reports in all probability, and must in all probability be sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths. This will require the preparation of these reports, and the fee of the officer will require an expenditure of some money. But that is not all. They must then buy some postage stamps and mail these reports—'returns,' they are called—to some officer to be designated by the corporation, and they must find out who that officer is. If either of them fails to correctly transact this business—if they fail to furnish the receipt or to make the 'returns' or to collect and account for the 'equalization fee,' they are jointly and severally liable to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than one year, or both; and these are not the only penalties in this bill. It bristles with penalties. The penalties are all to be enforced in Federal courts.

WAYSIDE MARKETING

"In all States where good roads are being built there is being developed for farmers a system known as 'wayside marketing.' Imagine a farmer starting out to do some 'wayside marketing,' or anyone else, for that matter. It is, let us say, the roasting-ear season. An emergency has been declared in corn. Under this bill there will probably nearly always be—if not always—an 'emergency' in corn for reasons which I will hereafter endeavor to state. Every time he sells a half dozen roasting ears he is compelled to go through exactly the processes I have just described. He is compelled to go through the same processes if he sells more than that or less than that number. I do not know how he could accomplish sales of this character under the bill at all. In order to do it with safety he would be compelled to find out what units of weight or measurement the corporation would require. He has, perhaps, also slaughtered a lamb or a calf on the farm. He is selling it in small amounts to his customers. It is, of course, the first sale made of the animal. For every sale he makes he must go through the above processes, and separate 'returns,' etc., must be made for each sale. Tell me that farmers or anyone else are going to like a bill of this kind when it goes into operation! This will apply to every sale made of any of the many basic agricultural products mentioned in the bill, which comprise about everything a farmer can produce on a farm. In a rural community of, we will say, 2,000 people how many transactions will be made each day in the many basic agricultural products embraced in the bill, to wit, wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine? How many transactions will be made in flour alone? Even if there were no more than 100 transactions of this kind per day in a community of that size, this would require the services of at least one officer or agent to look after them and to protect the Government.

"The moonshine whisky regulations of a few years ago were simple and few as compared with the regulations which must surround all these transactions in farm products to safeguard the Government. Farmers, and all who deal with farmers, will be required to keep an elaborate system of books in order to protect themselves. These matters can be investigated at any time. Income tax revenue agents can go back five years, and are doing it, investigating farmers' returns, but agents, in enforcing the provisions of this law, can go back as far as they please after the law is in effect.

"With this explanation of the bill, can you imagine how many the bill will add to our increasing army of government employees? Could 5,000 agents do it? Could 50,000 agents do it? Would it take more than that or less than that to investigate all these transactions and see that the Government receives the proper amount on every sale made?

RESTORE PURCHASING POWER

"The object of the bill is to restore the pre-war purchasing power of the things the farmer raises, and this is to be accomplished in the following impossible way: Before the war these basic agricultural products would purchase a certain amount of commodities. The object is to make them buy the same amount now. This is accomplished with reference to any one of these commodities by establishing a ratio price, ascertaining first the average price of the commodity for the 10 years preceding 1914, and then raising that average price by referring it to an 'all commodities' price applied to present-day conditions, and fixed by reference to Bulletin No. 336 of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"An examination of that document will show that commodities are divided into nine groups. Three of these groups are composed largely of the basic farm products themselves, their derivatives, and substitutes therefor. These three groups comprise really much more than one-third of the 'all commodities.' The attempt now is to get the ratio price of the basic commodities high enough so it will purchase as much of the 'all commodities' as it would before the war. Inasmuch as the basic agricultural commodities are also a part of the 'all commodities,' and inasmuch as they and their derivatives and substitutes for them comprise a very considerable part of the 'all commodities,' then, whenever you raise the ratio price of the basic commodities, does it not of course follow that you raise the price of the 'all commodities,' their derivatives, and substitutes for them? In additionn to that, you raise the wage cost for processing the 'all commodities,' and this must be added to the selling price of the 'all commodities.' When will the ratio price overtake the 'all commodities' price? Will it ever be able to do it? Are you not by this bill, then, in reality providing for the farmers the kind of punishment to which Tantalus was subjected—whenever he stretched out his hand to reach the fruit which hung from the branches just above his head the branches withdrew and the fruit was always out of his reach.

"These price increases are to be made possible by resorting to a tariff embargo. The basic farm products—the processed basic farm products—and all derivatives and substitutes for them, are to be kept out of our markets by tariffs, which are to be made ever higher and higher in order to accomplish this purpose. Of course, if it works, and prices are raised, our surplus will grow ever larger. We are producing too much now, but the surplus is to be sold at any price that can be obtained abroad, therefore at the lowest price. It is all to be bought, however, by the corporation at the ratio price, and what is lost, including the salaries of employees, are to be charged back to the farmers. I am not joking about it. This is what the bill provides. How long will it be before these losses exceed the amount of the emergency certificates—the amount the Government has donated to the corporation and all it has borrowed, and when the crash comes, where will farmers be? And where will business generally be; and what will happen to the country?

THE GOVERNMENT IN BUSINESS

"But I have not yet finished describing the objectionable things in this bill. The corporation is authorized to contract with processing agencies and with transportation facilities, and, failing to make suitable contracts, the corporation can resort to more strenuous methods and 'acquire' agencies of this kind. In the bill now pending in the Senate, the corporation can construct or build or purchase or 'acquire' these various agencies. The House bill has now eliminated that, but the corporation can still 'acquire' under the House bill and the House bill can still put the Government into business of all kinds, including the operation of textile mills, the operation of railroads, and steamship lines. The only exception is that they can not operate transportation systems as a common carrier, and this is not much of an exception. Can you imagine any rights the Soviet Government obtained in Russia as the result of the revolution that Congress is not asked to confer in this bill!

"I know that a Member of Congress is not expected to call attention to matters of this kind. He is expected to be quietly led along like Alice in Wonderland and simply marvel at a process so wonderful as this, and a great many Members of Congress are going to do this. It will make it easier for them in the next election, they think. But after that I do not know what is to become of them. Members of Congress who permit themselves to be led along in this way ought to commence to hear from their constituents.

"The packers are not fighting this bill. One of their representatives drew it and is superintending its various changes. Through one of their representatives here they made some 'pro forma' objections, but that was all. It would require hundreds of millions of dollars to purchase outright railroad terminals, packing plants, refrigerator cars, yards, and so forth, and the packers do not think the Government can do this. In 1918 the Federal Trade Commission discovered in the secret files of the packers a remarkable document. It was a report made to the big packers by certain of their representatives in Washington. The files also show that they have accepted the report. Charles J. Brand, at that time head of the Bureau of Markets and now a marketing expert in the Department of Agriculture, was to undertake to assemble data so as to show that under no circumstances did the packer make more than 25 cents on a steer and that the farmers would be better off if in reality they only had two purchasers for their food animals instead of many; and there was to be an official publication called Brand's Best Seller, which was to further this scheme.

"The packers' secret files show that Brand was quite ready to engage in this enterprise. The corporation may have on its hands in a week after it declares an emergency 400,000 or 500,000 food animals in Chicago alone. What will it do with them? It must process them, of course. Who can do it? The answer, of course is, the packers and no one else. The 'processing' must be done at once and, of course, it must be done at terms the packers themselves fix. Then there follows the refrigeration of the processed food animals, and the distribution here and abroad. Who can do that? Nobody but the packers. They must be paid for doing it, and of course the packers are not doing business for fun nor from patriotic motives. The payment must be quite liberal. This, of course, means a close combination between the corporation, with its $200,000,000 in capital and its $1,000,000,000 in notes and securities, and the packers. How long will the independents last? Whenever the crash comes, as it will, the independents will have been crushed and the dream of the packers will have been realized. They will be in undisputed control of markets.

"With these facts in view, will it surprise anybody to know this bill was drawn by Charles J. Brand? I know him. He told me he drew it. It is so understood here in Washington. Have I given enough facts to show the folly of it all?

"I note that at farm bureau meetings Otto Kahn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., was quoted at some length as being in favor of the McNary-Haugen bill. Since he wrote this letter, I have received a letter from Mr. Kahn advising me that he did not know such use was to be made of the letter he had addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture, and he also advised me, in effect, that the McNary-Haugen bill contained a number of exceedingly objectionable features to which he could not agree. He, however, agreed that agriculture was in a bad way and that something must be done for it. This letter to me from Otto Kahn indicates clearly that the McNary-Haugen bill has not even him to defend it among the world's financiers.

"The President has in no uncertain terms declared himself to be against price-fixing measures of this character. It does not appear that this measure could pass either the House or the Senate If it were possible for it to become a law I have not yet found any Members of Congress who do not think it will be declared unconstitutional. The idea that a man can be prohibited from selling his property at his own price at any time is certainly new in this country. There are pending some perfectly sane measures that will furnish relief, especially as to wheat, for the next year or two. They are measures which tend to bring about a more orderly marketing of this cereal, and which provide for storage and purchases by the Government in a perfectly sane manner. The real remedy, however, is to be found in retracing our steps, repealing a number of bunk farm relief measures and revising the tariff downward in many particulars, so as to restore in that way the alignment between basic farm products and "all commodities" which existed before the recent tariff increases. It is hardly possible, however, that we can expect this latter remedy from the party now in control.

"Valuable time is being wasted by considering such an impossible measure as the McNary-Haugen bill. The trouble with many of our farm organizations is that their policies are controlled by swivel-chair farmers who draw large salaries and who know nothing about practical farming. Many of them are socialists. They are of the type of men who would have been college professors in small colleges if the salaries attached to those positions were attractive. They are trying to do something to justify the salaries they now receive. They stood enthusiastically for the high protective tariff as a remedy for the ills of farmers, and at the elections of four years ago many thousand farmers accepted this remedy and voted accordingly. They received this alleged relief, but, of course, it does not work. Farmers can not limit their exports as manufacturing industries can do. At the demands of the farm bloc in Congress—most of whom are not farmers and know nothing about farming—supplemented by the demands of many farm organizations, every remedial bill suggested by this bloc and these organizations has been crystallized into law. These proponents have now abandoned them all. Of course, none of them has furnished relief. They were 'gold bricks'—nearly all of them—and the bill which is now being urged is the biggest 'gold brick' they have attempted to hand out.

"I have only touched some of the high points in this matter. There are many other things that I can not discuss in the scope of this article."

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, frequent references are made, particularly in conversation among the Members of this House, about the tariff for the benefit of the textile industries of New England and the fairness of the claim that the agricultural interests of the Middle West should have like treatment. It is to this phase of the McNary-Haugen bill that I desire to make brief reference.

The industrial situation in New England is reaching a point as serious as that of the agricultural section in the Middle West. The tariff is not protecting our industries in Massachusetts or throughout New England.

I was waited upon last evening by a man coming to Washington of his own volition in behalf of the textile workers in a certain section of Massachusetts, asking whether or not something could be done for the employees of the mills. Work is so slack that great suffering is in prospect. The reason for it is that woolen and cotton goods are being imported into this country under the existing tariff law in quantities never before known.

Let me give two illustrations of the effect of importations on industries in my immediate home vicinity. The paper industry of western Massachusetts is running on very short time. Our largest company is in the hands of a receiver. The reason is apparent the moment one enters a department store and finds boxed stationery for sale at less than cost prices in this country.

I received this morning, a letter from a personal friend, the head of a warp mill, inclosing an advertisement from the New York Herald-Tribune of May 19, featuring a ship arriving in New York with a load of 20,000 blankets. These blankets are offered for sale at $3.75. The same kind of blanket can not be produced in this country by the mills for less than $5.50.

I insert herewith statistical information provided me by the Acting Commissioner of Labor Statistics to-day, giving the comparisons of employment in March and April of this year and also in April, 1923 and 1924. These tables show the percentage of decrease of employment, carrying with them the natural decrease in pay rolls.

From information which reaches me I can truthfully add that the conditions of employment during May are much worse than they were during April. This is the answer to the argument of tariff benefits at the present time in New England:

Comparison of employment in identical establishments

	During 1 week each in March and April, 1924						During 1 week each in April, 1923, and April, 1924
	Establishments	Number on pay roll		Per cent of change	Amount of pay roll		Per cent of change	Establishments	Number on pay roll		Per cent of change	Amount of pay roll		Per cent of change
		March, 1924	April, 1924		March, 1924	April, 1924			April, 1923	April, 1924		April, 1923	April, 1924
Cotton goods:
United States	505	184,993	177,280	−4.2	$3,040,565	$2,869,682	−5.6	246	165,812	141,500	−14.7	$2,917,738	$2,313,340	−20.7
New England States	409	88,231	83,041	−5.9	1,788,773	1,668,935	−6.7	88	82,282	64,605	−21.5	1,695,782	1,299,095	−23.4
Woolen and worsted goods:
United States	179	71,754	67,976	−5.3	1,624,970	1,493,981	−8.1	146	60,198	53,218	−11.6	1,350,426	1,184,049	−12.9
New England States	103	40,702	39,047	−4.1	922,237	875,161	−5.1	71	29,213	25,816	−11.6	665,907	595,919	−10.5

Is it not a fact that when the Republican Party came into power we promptly passed an emergency tariff bill at the request of the western producers? In the tariff act of 1921 much prominence was given to the agricultural schedule. In addition to all this, the flexible tariff provision has been invoked in behalf of wheat and an increase of 50 per cent has been made by the authority that provision delegates to the President.

Have the wheat growers of the Middle West any greater complaint than the industrial workers of the East? If the tariff provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill are needed for wheat and hogs, why should not we also establish a ratio price of woolen, cotton, paper, and all other industries of New England?

In addition to the above factor, it is recognized that the whole purpose of the bill is to raise the price of wheat, meats, and other commodities. If employment to-day in New England is at a minimum, in what manner can the working people of our section secure the money necessary to buy wheat and derivatives even at the present prices? Are we to accept the burden of an artificial advance not established through supply and demand, when we have no opportunity through employment in our mills to obtain the price of the necessaries of life at even to-day's market prices?

Previously Congress has been the constitutional method under which revenue is secured, either by taxation or by the tariff. This bill proposes to take away that constitutional power from Congress and place it in the hands of the Chief Executive.

The new system of tariff writing, according to this bill, would be a declaration of an emergency by the directors of the corporation it establishes and the positive requirement that when an emergency has been declared the President shall establish such rates of duty as amount to an embargo. In my opinion, therefore, this bill should be defeated from the standpoint of the tariff and revenue features.

Another point: We are fast getting the reputation of being an unduly extravagant Congress. This bill authorizes a $200,000,000 corporation, with the United States as the only stockholder, and a further credit of five times that amount. In other words, the McNary-Haugen bill would ask this Congress to do just one thing, namely, arrange for the purchase of the agricultural products of the Middle West at an expense to the Government of $200,000,000. As soon as this amount is expended request for as much more would, of course, be asked. In addition it will be necessary to make the Government responsible for such loans as the corporation may secure. Otherwise the corporation would have no credit upon which to borrow. It is a gigantic and impractical scheme to put the Government into the biggest business proposition that can be conceived of.

The passage of this bill would rightly designate this as a Congress gone extravagantly crazy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I came from a district which stands for a tariff on wool and sugar beets; where hogs and hominy are a safe bet. I can go along with this measure and will proceed to give the reasons. Opponents of this measure of farm relief quite commonly assert that economic ills can not be cured by legislation. It is perhaps a very conservative statement to say that 50 per cent of all legislation works itself out through producing economic effects. In fact, we may say flatly that all legislation affecting commerce, industry, finance is directly or indirectly economic legislation.

It is frequently said, particularly by those who are earnest advocates of free trade, that with respect to this measure of farm relief two wrongs will not make a right. In other words, to do for the farmer what other legislation has done for other American interests to their minds would be doing a second wrong and expecting right to grow therefrom.

I dissent from this view. I do not regard the protection that has been afforded other interests and occupations and the legislation that has been passed that is helpful to them as constituting a wrong. In fact, it is more nearly accurate to consider it an effort to do right and to create justice and equality.

Now we are confronted with undoubted evidence that one great part of our people, the farming public, is sharing so slightly in the benefits of previous legislation that it is necessary and desirable to legislate in a fashion that will give agriculture equality with industry, labor, commerce, and finance.

Let us consider briefly what has been done for others that creates conditions that may properly be considered artificial in which the farmer either is not sharing at all, is sharing very slightly, or from which he is actually suffering injury.

All modern life is artificial. It is artificial to wear clothing, live in houses, and so forth, but the extent to which we have been able by artificial means to bend natural laws, whether physical or economic, to the service of mankind is the measure of our progress toward civilization.

Without attempting to give complete details, but rather merely to give a broad picture of the situation, I will review briefly some of the legislation of State and Nation which every orthodox economist would insist as creating artificial conditions, but which, nevertheless, have brought into being an economic, social, and legislative fabric that calls for and justifies similar progressive legislation in behalf of American agriculture.

THE ADAMSON LAW

The effect of this law was to give to the railroad workers of the United States an 8-hour day with the same rate of pay that had previously been received for 10 hours' work. Necessarily this all shows up in the freight bill, and the farmer pays the freight, to an estimated increase in annual cost of $1,250,000,000.

THE IMMIGRATION LAW

We all agree that the needs for thorough assimilation and Americanization of foreign immigrants demanded a law controlling their entrance, both as to number and quality, into the United States. Nevertheless, it is undeniable that this artificial control of the labor supply of the United States has played a large part in the increase in wage levels from 100 per cent, based on 1913, to approximately 216 per cent in the union-scale industries that prevails to-day. It also is one of the factors necessarily in the high cost of farm labor, which stood at 162 on the average for 1923 compared with a five-year basis taken as 100 from 1910 to 1914.

The high cost of labor has merely forced the farmer to do his own work, drafting his wife and children to help him. With a purchasing power of 74 for all farm products, including those like cotton, which is above the pre-war level, it is easy to see that the farmer can ill afford to hire much labor when the index number for farm labor stands at 153.

THE TRANSPORTATION ACT

The transportation act helped the railroads by appropriating $300,000,000 to be used as a revolving fund for loans during a transition period of two years from public to private control. It also prescribed an aggregate annual net railway operating rate of income upon which just and reasonable rates shall be based. For the two years after March 1, 1920, this was placed at 6 per cent, and later reduced to 5½ per cent, of the aggregate value of all of the properties of each carrier. This rate is adhered to as a fair one to be striven toward under existing conditions since that time.

This law also created the Railway Labor Board, upon whose decisions many increases in railroad wages have been based. This board is authorized specifically in determining wage scales and salaries and standards of working conditions to consider (1) wages and conditions in other industries, (2) the relation between wages and the cost of living, (3) training and skill required, (4) inequalities in increases in wages in the past, and other factors. Not only does transportation labor receive a very high original wage for an eight-hour day, but it receives large additions to the rate for all overtime work.

MINIMUM WAGE LAWS

Both State and Nation have passed laws fixing a minimum wage that may lawfully be paid to certain classes of workers and certain occupations, and certainly no one can contend that such acts do not interfere with the normal operation of economic laws. If we are to have "normal operation," competition must be permitted to take its full course.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND INSURANCE LAWS

Numerous States have passed laws covering unemployment by reason of accident and from other causes, and they require industries to insure their workers against certain hazards, all of which, even though they may be ever so desirable, protect certain classes of the citizenship without affording similar protection to others. The cost of these forms of protection is added to the cost of the product, and the farmer, in common with others, must pay the added cost without personally receiving any benefits from similar enactments.

WAR CONTROLS

Wheat, the crop that is suffering so severely, at the present time in particular, was subjected on August 30, 1917, to a so-called fixed fair price of $2.20 a bushel at Chicago for the basis grade No. 1 northern spring or its equivalent. It should be noted that this price was fixed in the month of August, when the maximum weight of the wheat crop was resting upon the market.

Almost 50 per cent of the wheat crop of the United States is marketed in the months of July, August, and September. The price fixed at this time and under varying conditions and with some slight changes renewed for several periods that carried it up to June 30, 1920, ruled throughout each year in spite of the almost universal trend of prices upward after the harvest is finished.

In May, 1917, just after war was declared by the United States against Germany, the price of wheat went to $3.18. The future exchanges closed on May 10, remaining closed for the rest of the month. When they reopened No. 1 northern at Chicago ranged from a low of approximately $2.50 to a high of $3.09 in June. In July the range was from $2.25 low to $3 high.

Undoubtedly in the succeeding years with war demands and shortage of shipping facilities the price of wheat would have ruled on the average from $3 to $3.25, instead of around $2.20 due to governmental action.

We can make some rough approximations of what the wheat farmer lost through Government intervention to hold down the price of his product. It is probably true that no less than 2,500,000,000 bushels of wheat were marketed during the period of price control. If the loss were 50 cents per bushel, the aggregate amount of which the farmer was deprived was $1,250,000,000. If the loss were 75 cents a bushel, the farmer was deprived of $1,875,000,000.

Many people who have given attention to the matter believe that the wheat growers of the United States were deprived of anywhere from $1,500,000,000 to $2,500,000,000 through the operation of a fixed price on their product. That he certainly did lose can not be gainsaid, for under the wheat guaranty act of March 4, 1919, during its subsequent operation, never once did the open market price fall below the guaranteed price. However, we do not need to rely upon figures which must at best be mere approximations. We can rely upon the well-known fact that wheat was kept at a low price for the definite and declared purpose of reducing the cost of living to the consumer. The talk of encouraging the producer by the price fixed was a gesture outweighed by the actual fact that the fixed price was far below the price that would inevitably have existed had there been no control.

TARIFF LAWS

Protection to home industries has been one of the features of American public policy practically from the establishment of the Republic to the present day. With more than a hundred years of experience in passing tariff laws and administering them, they still present difficulties and produce effects different from what is desired and expected.

The primary purposes of tariffs are to (1) raise revenue and (2) protect home industries. That they raise the cost of living and wages no one thinks of doubting. That they help the protected industries is their very purpose. Likewise, that they are unable to afford protection to farm products, of which we produce an exportable surplus and whose price is therefore fixed in the foreign market, has long been well understood by the economist and is now becoming wholly clear to the farmer.

With protection as such we have no quarrel. It is undoubtedly one of the important cornerstones of the high standard of living of American labor. However, the effect of tariffs is to give to American industries and American labor an American price. They are unable to afford the same fair play to the great staple American farm products. Forty million American farm people are now gradually rising in a demand that a device be created that will be efficient to do for the great export surplus crops what the tariff does for manufactured goods and nonexport farm products, namely, to afford them an American price.

The inefficiency of a general tariff schedule to protect wheat, an export product, and its efficiency in protecting wool, an import basic product, is shown by reference to a few very simple figures. There is a tariff of 31 cents on wool. The usual difference between London and Boston when there was no tariff was 3 cents. To-day, under the tariff, it is nearer to 25 cents. The relative purchasing power of wool in January, 1924, compared to all commodities was 145. The relative purchasing power of wheat the same month was 81, or 64 per cent less.

RENT CONTROL LAWS

Even in the matter of house rentals we have the rent control act. Here in the District of Columbia no one has shown a similar concern for the farmers of America. Their marketing costs are higher. Their freight rates are crushingly greater than pre-war. Their labor charges have far outrun the farmers' ability to pay, and the prices of things that the farmer must buy are from a few per cent to a hundred or more per cent above their pre-war normals.

Many other laws that interfere with the free operation of the law of supply and demand and with the freedom of operation of economic forces in general have been passed throughout the history of the Republic. The question has never been: Do they interfere? The question has been, rather: Does the purpose to be accomplished transcend in importance, permitting natural laws to take their unmitigated course? When the public good can best be served by interfering with natural law, that is the course that has been pursued.

It is a painful fact that the farmer has benefited far less than other classes of people from such interferences with the freedom of interplay of economic forces as has taken place. In some of these matters he has benefited with respect to some of his products, and he has also shared, at times at least, in a better standard of living. Conditions, however, that have prevailed during the past three or four years are gradually reducing him to economic beggary.

DOES THE SITUATION WARRANT GOVERNMENT HELP?

Everyone has agreed that American farming conditions are deplorable. This is true of those who oppose the McNary-Haugen bill, as well as those who favor it. The question then is: Do the circumstances warrant an emergency departure from our customary practice as to having the Government actually participate in the doing of business, even though this be through the medium of a corporation and not directly through an executive agency? It is perfectly apparent, I believe, to everyone that the conditions that exist are not of the farmers' own making. One hears constant suggestions as to things that have brought about the existing depression. Some contend that it is due to too little credit; others say that the real trouble is that there has been too much credit. Certainly under the circumstances the farmer has gone deeper in debt than he is able to pay. Others ascribe the trouble to lack of diversification, but during the past 12 months the diversified country has come to suffer much as the one-crop country suffered at the beginning of the agricultural panic in 1920.

It certainly is not clear how, even in one-crop territories, diversification can be carried far under the prevailing conditions of soil and climate and a financial situation that prevents the farmer from keeping his farm, to say nothing of launching upon new expenditures. Some, who are decidedly radical in their views, lay the whole trouble to the inadvertency of the middleman system in the United States. I hold no particular brief for our middleman, but many who claim to know state that our system is a very efficient one, and certainly in the case of the staple products it appears to me that the margin between the raw material and the manufactured material is usually so narrow that if the Government paid the whole expense the relief afforded to American farmers would not cure the distress that has prevailed for the last four years. Some state that the trouble is that our farmers have neglected cooperative organization too much. It is not clear to me how cooperative organization would be able to bring rough lumber that used to cost $30 a thousand and now costs $52 back to its pre-war level, or how such organizations could bring barbed wire from its 1923 price of about $4.75 per hundred pounds back to its 1909 price of $2.98, or single harness from $28 back to $13. In fact cooperative organization, while most thinking people agree as to the desirability of its development, is a long-time development and will not rescue us from the prospective panic. Others have somewhat roundly abused the farmer as being responsible for the trouble by his failure to reduce production and by overspeculation in land. As a matter of fact, the farmer has reduced production. There has been a reduction of nearly 700,000 head in the number of cattle on farms between January 1, 1923, and January 1, 1924. There has been a reduction of over 3,000,000 head of hogs between January 1, 1923, and January 1, 1924. Our 1923 wheat crop was 785,000,000 bushels, while in 1922 it was 876,000,000 bushels, and since 1919 we have reduced our wheat acreage from approximately 75,500,000 acres to approximately 58,000,000 acres in 1923. There has been a further reduction in the plantings for the 1924 harvest.

No one doubts that all of these questions are deserving of attention. The matter of speculation in land is quite outside of the mark on analysis, as in thousands upon thousands of cases men who homesteaded their farms and who inherited them and who have been successful for decades have gone under with the rest.

The real trouble is that farmers' prices are about the same as pre-war, but everything they buy is nearly double, due largely to laws of State and Nation. In a recent letter, a farmer in his own way pointed out what, in his views, constitutes the real difficulty. He says that business men, industrialists, and financiers have forgotten that the law of the cost of production is quite as important as the law of supply and demand. If the farmer goes to buy an automobile, and when he is told that the price is $875, he said that he thought it was too much, that the motor industry had slowed down and that the quantity of production warranted a lower price. The dealer reasoned with him that it cost so much to make a car and that it could not be sold for less than the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. He bought the car and a few days later hauled his grain to town to sell. He was told that his wheat was worth 80 cents a bushel. He said he could not raise it for that amount, that machinery was high, that labor was high, and that it cost him at least half as much again as 80 cents to raise it. The grain dealer replied that he should raise less wheat, that while the American crop was 82,000,000 bushels less than last year, other parts of the world had a plentiful supply. In the end, of course, the farmer had to take the 80 cents for his wheat just as the motor car builder did not have to accept less than $875 for his car. This illustrates what the trouble is. The farmer sells everything on a supply and demand basis and buys everything on a cost of production plus a profit basis. Under existing world conditions and with the necessity for keeping an equilibrium involving a surplus of the basic agricultural commodities, only continued disastrous deflation of agriculture can continue.

I believe the Government is warranted in helping American agriculture because the problem involves doing things for 40 per cent of the population that it can not do for itself. I believe this furthermore because of the fact that war measures are in part responsible, through inadvertence, for the situation in which the farmer finds himself. Wheat prices were fixed and other prices were not fixed. Students of the question have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and expressed the belief that the fixed price deprived American wheat growers alone from a billion and a half to two and one-half billion dollars that they would have received had the law of supply and demand been given free course. Deflation, following close upon the heels of the greatest propaganda for increased production the world had ever seen, struck the farmer another severe blow, cutting down the value of his crop from fifteen and a half billion dollars in 1919 to $7,000,000,000 in 1921. Railroad freight rates were raised at the very time that the farmers' products were suffering their most disastrous decline and have taken another huge toll from the farmer at the time when he could least bear it. In view of all of these facts and many others that could be cited, I not only believe that the Government is warranted in helping the farmer to meet a national emergency due to world and other conditions beyond his control, but I think it is the Nation's duty. Unless the McNary-Haugen bill or other legislation that provides the relief proposed in this bill is passed, farmers will be driven to bankruptcy and a general industrial panic, in my opinion, will be inevitable.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some of the speeches made in the House against the McNary-Haugen bill, and I have reverted more to the speech made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] than to any other, for the reason that it impressed me more than the others. It may be that it was the most forceful objection made to the bill, or it may be in my mind because it was the first objection that I have heard voiced against the bill. Further than that, the gentleman had told me that he could not support the bill and that he could point out insurmountable obstacles to the practicable working of the bill, and I had also been advised that he was the best posted on the matter of any Member of the House.

At any rate, I listened very intently to what Mr. VOIGT had to say, and the first point that he made that took root with me was when he stated that he was a farmer, that he owned a farm, and that he raised hogs, and that in case this bill went through it would raise the price of hogs from 7 cents to 11, and that in that case he would raise four times as many hogs on his farm, and that others would do likewise, and that a surplus of hogs would result which would succeed in swamping the Government or the corporation formed by this bill and that a great failure would result.

This point, when first expressed, gave me pause, and I had to think to see whether he was right or not.

Now, I have been able to answer, to my own satisfaction, this point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I do not believe that he and the rest of the farmers in this country can multiply their swine by four or by two or by any other number except as they increase the amount of feed on their farms in like proportion. If the gentleman from Wisconsin multiplies the number of hogs on his place by four he will have to multiply the amount of feed on his farm by a like amount, and that is an absolute impossibility. You can not increase feed in this country in any measurable degree under the operation of this bill. The only way it could be done would be to switch from wheat to corn, and there will be no occasion to do that, because the price of wheat will be satisfactory under the operation of the bill, and this is admitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The fact of the matter is that there are no sudden changes in the quantity of production of farm products in the United States. It takes years to make a measurable change even when conditions are favorable. There were years during the war when hogs were up around 20 cents, and in those years other farm products were not as profitable as hogs. And yet the increased production of hogs did not show in any measurable degree.

The production of hogs is absolutely limited to the amount of feed that is produced. You can not raise a hog without feed. They are absolutely interchangeable, and if Mr. VOIGT had more hogs on his place than he could feed, he had better kill or sell half of the hogs, or at least sell or kill down to the amount equal to the feed he has.

Now, here is another point about producing hogs: I have found that you have to fit a farm with the stock that belongs on the farm, and that you can not afford to go off on a tangent. The ordinary farm has but one man on it, and generally he can take care of about 10 sows. You might think you could give him 20 sows and double the production of pigs and pork, but that is not the case at all. He can do well with 10 sows and take care of them and produce the pork, but double the quantity and my own experience is that he will not measurably increase his production of pork. I believe the Members of this House who have had experience will agree with me.

Further along in the discussion the gentleman from Wisconsin said that one day in Chicago last summer there were 85,000 hogs received. This was quite an unusual quantity of hogs. Then he said under the operation of this bill he would like to make an imaginary illustration. Suppose the domestic demand would only use 50,000 of those hogs and that there would be therefore for export 35,000 hogs, which the corporation developed by this bill would have to pay 11 cents a pound for, and he said it might come about that the packers in Chicago would say to the corporation that they could not pay the corporation more than 4 cents a pound for those 35,000 hogs and that they would not pay any more. In that case what would the corporation do?

My first answer is that his case is entirely hypothetical and that what would happen would be that the packers would do just as they did that day last summer when the 85,000 hogs actually did arrive. They would buy them all. But in case they wanted to take advantage of the corporation and only pay 4 cents, then I say to you, first, that the farmers who had just sold the hogs for 11 cents would take them all back at 4 cents and take them back to the farm and possibly hold them 30 days. Any farmer would be glad to make such a deal.

In the next place I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there are not just five packers in the United States. There are 207 packers in the United States who put up 60 per cent of the product, and there are 1,700 other packers in the United States who put up the balance of the 40 per cent, and any one of these 2,000 packers can pack pork for export and any product of pork. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I believe those 35,000 hogs in his hypothetical case can be taken care of by the packing houses in Ohio alone and be prepared for export if there were that many hogs needed for export; and there is not a member of the Big Five, as he called the packers, in Ohio.

As a matter of fact, only 10 per cent of the pork raised in this country is shipped out of the country. Ninety per cent of it is consumed here, and that 10 per cent can be taken care of by the present facilities in each of many of the States of the Union if the Big Five do not wish to deal with the corporation we are figuring on developing.

It seemed to me that the above points made by the gentleman from Wisconsin were the chief stumblingblocks which he offered against the bill. My mind is satisfied that they are not real difficulties that business men can not overcome with ease and satisfaction. Some of you, I think, here feel that there will be great difficulties in the corporation taking care of the hogs. You think the corporation will have to buy the live hogs and possibly ship them out in the ocean and dump them. But to my mind, what will really happen is this: That this corporation will make an allowance to everybody exporting hogs or hog products of an amount equal to the difference between the American price and the foreign price, and this loss which this corporation sustains will be paid by the equalization fee paid by all producers of pork in the United States. A loss will be sustained on 10 per cent of the hogs produced and an increased price will be received for 90 per cent.

I have had some experience with a Government that wrote the first Haugen-McNary bill about 20 years ago. I have been for 30 years importing from Greece—connected with a firm importing dried currants from Greece. In the old days before this measure was written by the Greek Government dried currants were selling around 2 cents a pound, cost and freight paid to New York, which meant only about 1 cent a pound to the grower. Those Congressmen from California acquainted with the raisin business can tell you all what 1 cent a pound means to the producer of raisins, and that applies also to the Greek producer who was producing currants for a cent a pound. This is about the only article that Greece produces for export. Her soil is the only soil that will produce this particular article in the world, and she ships currants to all the countries of the globe, and she devised a plan by which she would make these nations pay for the product. This plan was exactly the McNary-Haugen bill turned around backward. Currants were grown in Greece and used for two purposes—wine and for export as dried currants. The wine had to be cheap, and to sell currants for wine purposes they had to carry a low price. Currants for export would bring more money if a plan could be devised to separate the two, and the retention act of Greece retained the surplus of currants each year to the Government and the Government took that surplus and sold them to the wine makers and they were destroyed as currants, and this left on the market just what the world would absorb of dried currants each year.

I want to say to you that that law has been in force for 19 years, and the growers to-day are getting about 12 cents a pound for currants, cost and freight, to New York, and there has never been a time in the 19 years when the price has been less than 3 cents a pound for export currants. The law has been a success, and the producers of Greece have been protected.

During those years I have been a merchant handling these goods and I want to tell you here of that experience as a solace to these grain merchants who think they are about to be ruined. During most of that time I have been a broker selling the product in the United States for the business firms of Greece who handle currants.

I was in this work before the law was passed and after the law was passed, and I never could see a particle of difference in my connection with the work either before or after, and I never could see any difference in the operation of the business in Greece by the business men there, occasioned by the enactment of this law, and I will say further that I have never heard a complaint by anyone connected in Greece or in America against this law, to the effect that it interfered with business or with any business concern engaged in that enterprise.

I think the grain merchants of the United States will find that their fears are unfounded and that their business will go on without molestation and without any new difficulties to overcome, and I really think that their profits will be more secure, because the price of the articles under this plan will not fluctuate to the extent that they have in the past.

There are the consumers in the United States, who have a right to be considered. The prices of agricultural products under the operation of this bill will be higher. That is absolutely true, and that is the only way you are going to put agriculture on a balance with the rest of the products in other lines of business in the United States, and it would seem that if the price of agricultural products goes up that the consumer would naturally have more to pay. That seems to be a reasonable conclusion. But, gentlemen, I have very serious doubts in my mind as to whether the consumer will be called upon to pay the advance in the price of farm products.

I have been interested in the manufacture and sale of bread in the United States for a number of years, and I have had occasion to study the business, and I find that a loaf of bread sells to-day in Washington—a pound loaf—at 9 cents, and I find at the same time there is less than a cent and a half's worth of wheat in that loaf of bread, and that there is a little over a cent and a half's worth of flour when the wheat is converted into flour on account of the milling cost. To confirm this statement I will say that I can show you the records kept by the United States Government in her Army bakeries, showing that in this year of 1924, she is making bread at a total cost of 0.0174 cent per pound loaf for all the material in the bread, and that takes in more than the flour. I can also show you that in the city of Washington the same bread is being sold at two very dissimilar prices; the same bakery is selling pound loaves of bread to the Navy of the United States at $3.69 per 100 pounds and is selling that same bread to retailers in Washington at $8 per 100 pounds, a difference of more than 100 per cent in the two prices on the same bread at the same time.

Now, this proves, I think, that the cost of the ingredients has little to do, if anything, with the price of bread sold to the consumers at 9 cents in the city of Washington.

I will also say that I have investigated the price of bread during the war, and am informed that the average price of bread in the United States was about 9 cents per pound loaf when flour was selling at $12 to $15 a barrel, and to-day in Washington, with flour worth $6 a barrel, the bread is bringing 9 cents a loaf.

Now, I believe it is reasonable to conclude that if you change the cost of the wheat in a loaf of bread from 1½ cents to 2 cents, that you will not alter the price of bread sold to the consumer at all.

This takes care of the matter of the wheat—I am not so familiar with the hog products—and these are the two articles that are going to be affected first by this measure.

But I believe if there were somebody here on this floor that could discuss intelligently the price of the hog and the retail selling price of pork, they would probably be able to develop just the same kind of a set of circumstances as I have related to you about bread.

I am not afraid of this bill not being practical. I am not afraid that we will get the Government into a disastrous financial situation. I am not afraid there will be a burden on the consumer as a result of this bill that will be hard to bear. But I am afraid of the result in this country if something is not achieved by this Congress for the relief of agriculture. The farmer has used up his surplus, he has borrowed all he can borrow, he can not go on buying high-priced products of industry and paying for them with his low-priced products; his back is against the wall, and he has got to make a stand for his own self-preservation. And, gentlemen, what I fear is that the farmer of the Nation will see red if we do not give him relief, if we do not even make an attempt to give him relief; and that he will join in a movement which he could make successful of tearing down all the other classes of society, down, and down, and down to his own level.

So I appeal to you people from the cities, and tell you that for your own interest put the farmer on an equal basis with yourselves, and thereby protect yourselves from a disaster that may await you.

There is only one objection I have to this bill, that there is an expense contemplated in the bill that is not covered and paid by the producers of the products affected. I refer to the capital required for the conduct of the business which the Government is to furnish, and I believe it is fair that the producers should pay the Government at the rate of 4 per cent per annum interest on whatever there is invested in this business, and I expect, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to that effect.

Otherwise every cent of expense occasioned by this bill is borne by the producers of the products affected.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RATHBONE].

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, it would be presumptuous for me to discuss in detail an agricultural bill in the presence of gentlemen of the committee now before me who have been making a study of the subject for months. Possibly I can add something of interest to the discussion, but I shall not attempt to thresh over the general subject which has been covered so well by different members of the committee. I do wish to address myself to one or two propositions that may not have occurred to members of the committee. I assume that everyone here is in favor of helping agriculture in any way that we properly can. It is useless to say that because we are divided in opinion as to methods we are not all interested in the subject. What is the most effective proposition in which we can reach agreement? I am in favor of any measure that will be recommended by this Committee of the Whole House after deliberation, without any fear that it is going to be disastrous to the country, because one of the provisions of the bill provides that the President of the United States has the power to determine when an emergency exists in any one product; he alone can put the act into operation with any specific product. So far as my own State is concerned, we have no especial interest in wheat, pork, or like products because Wisconsin is very largely a dairy State, producing over $100,000,000 annually in dairy products. We have no great particular interest in the bill so far as word comes, but when we are notified that over 400 banks have failed in the western part of the United States within a few months, that entire communities have been abandoned, that farms and stores, and, in fact, whole districts of the West have given up the fight, it calls for relief. It reaches far back, not only to your State and to mine, but into the Eastern States also, because I believe that is one of the troubles the East is having to-day. It has lost the great consuming West in the sale of eastern products. I feel that anything that we can do we should do. I am willing to vote for amendments to hold the operation of the bill down to wheat, if necessary, because if that one product is successfully benefited we should be satisfied before making the bill general in application. I shall vote for the bill as it comes from the Committee of the Whole.

I was interested in the discussion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], who has made a great study of this matter; but while he was speaking of Portugal and Belgium and other countries that have a sort of holdback, where a bonus is given in the respective countries, it occurred to me that that does not apply to England, and the wheat market is made in Liverpool. They have no protective tariff requiring any holdback against our foodstuffs.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], partly in charge of the bill, made a strong argument against the bill, and I desire to address myself briefly to remarks made by him to the effect that this is a Bolshevistic proposal. He stated that this bill had in its terms become practically a Bolshevik movement, or something to that effect, and I assume it is no reflection on him to mention the fact, because we all know that he is interested as much as anyone in the relief of the farmers of the country. For the sake of argument, I am going to admit that that is partially so, that this bill may be of such general public benefit as to be called Bolshevistic. When I was over in Russia last summer I saw a gentleman there who represented an organization known as the Centrocyouse. A similar cooperative Russian organization is called the Centrocyaine. These organizations each number over 4,000,000 people. He represented 27,000 communities in his one cooperative company. It was financed by the Russian Government, that loans funds at reasonable rates of interest. The organizations buy and they sell to and from the peasants for the benefit of 85 per cent of the inhabitants. These are the peasants of Russia to-day. It is a great success there and the greatest cooperative organization in the world. In fact, both companies are larger than any others, so far as I have heard, and they are directly connecting the Government and the farmers of Russia.

Mr. Alex Gumberg, the representative of the textile industries of the Russian Government, stated to me that the Textile Syndicate of Russia, which combines over 400 Russian textile mills, has purchased since January of this year over 130,000 bales of cotton in the South, worth in round figures about $25,000,000, and of this amount $16,000,000 has been paid in cash, and he expects that the amount of purchases may be more than doubled before the end of the year.

The Russian Government is much in need of our cotton to supply the 400 mills in Russia, and they would prefer to buy direct rather than to pay commissions or handling charges to German agents, as in the past. In these purchases the Russian Government finances the syndicate, and he is acting as one of the governmental agencies in the matter.

Mr. Victor P. Nogin, president of the syndicate, died on May 21 in Moscow. Mr. Nogin was in my office early in the year, and he then stated that he expected to make purchases of upward of $40,000,000 in cotton. When that statement was made by me in the House the facts were doubted by several incredulous, but the Russian Government is now engaged through the Textile Syndicate in buying American cotton from our farmers in the South, and in addition 20,000 bales of cotton have been purchased from New England mills that are now closed.

If normal trade relations were possible, thereby extending means of business credit through agencies in this country and direct dealings with the Russian people, the cotton purchases would be much larger and the purchases of agricultural machinery from the International Co. and other products of this country would be greatly increased. This trade is a life-saver at the present time for the cotton growers of the South, and it is a legitimate trade that comes direct from the Soviet Government, which finances these purchases.

As I have stated, we have much to learn in methods of cooperation, particularly for agricultural interests of the country, from the two great Russian cooperative organizations known as the Selskosoyus and Centrosoyus, the combined trade of which reached, as I understand, over $50,000,000 last year.

The bill before us contemplates far less than that amount in its application to wheat, and while all agricultural interests of the country have been hard hit by prices and living conditions due to deflation and other causes, we have been assured that the country generally will respond to better times if the wheat growers are given some assistance at this time.

With the right of the President to declare when an emergency exists so as to put the special rates in force, there would seem to be no danger of undue enlargement in its purposes. After trying out the provisions of the bill on wheat products, if successful, as I believe it would be, the emergency in dairy products affecting my own State or any other unusual condition could be properly met under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I can not do that now. The people of the South have sold their cotton to Mr. Gumbert, representing the Russian people. The Russian Government is financing the proposal. So while the Bolshevik Government, as it is constituted, may have its weaknesses, it helps its own people in a way we may well imitate, and when buying cotton it is helping you and it is helping all of us. It is helping the people of the whole country, because whenever money is put in circulation in the South it soon gets into circulation here.

I have only a few minutes and I can not discuss this matter as I would like to do. The people of the West, more particularly the extreme West, are in dire distress to-day. They must have help. We all know that. We have to help each other, because the only way that we can help ourselves is by helping each other. I am not going to dilate on the subject that the farmer buys in a protective market, that he buys his labor and his transportation in a protective market, and practically everything else, and that he sells, we all know, in the markets of the world in competition with the cheapest labor and living conditions that exist in other countries. We have to help him, and the one thing to do is to vote for the bill as it comes out of the Committee of the Whole. That is what I shall do.

Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest financial authorities in the country, whose opinion I am frank to say would be held second to none by the average Member of the House, has expressed himself so forcefully and clearly on the bill before us that I am quoting briefly from a letter written by him on the subject.

Otto H. Kahn is internationally known as banker and economist. He is familiar with governmental activities, and his approval of the McNary-Haugen bill as an experiment if not as a cure-all for the existing agricultural depression is the best indorsement that could be offered at this time.

Anything that injures agriculture injures every other line of business, and this applies with equal force to the great financial interests of the country, because when 400 banks have their doors closed due to frozen credits, together with the abandonment of thousands of farms by families so as to depopulate entire sections of the country, the situation is one to excite apprehension on the part of every thinking man, and so I am attaching hereto the statement issued by Mr. Kahn, which speaks for itself. He says:

> The farmer, finding himself, as we are informed, in an intolerable situation, is gravely discontented and under a sense of grievance toward the existing order of things. * * * The farming business is the largest in the country. The basic and vital necessity of the farming industry needs no emphasizing. The immense social value of the farming class to the State is beyond argument. There can be no lasting prosperity in trade and industry unless the farmer is reasonably prosperous. * * *
>
> Not only is the farmer entitled in fairness to relief from conditions of maladjustment which place him in a position of heavy disadvantage as compared to other callings, but the continuance of these conditions constitutes a serious social evil and a derangement of so grave a portent as to justify resort to an heroic remedy, if it must be admitted that the lesser measures heretofore applied or suggested are impotent to effect a cure.
>
> It will be far less costly, I believe, to the country at large to bear the very slight addition to the cost of food which is involved in a reasonable trial of the theory embodied in the McNary-Haugen bill than to pay the penalty which would appear to be inescapable if the Nation countenanced or failed to redress a state of things that would leave agriculture languishing and declining and 12,000,000 farmers aggrieved, resentful, and deprived of a fair share of prosperity and well-being.
>
> As to the fear of setting a precedent, I believe that, in a broad sense and in its underlying thought, the McNary-Haugen bill—granting the existence of the conditions which it aims to correct—rather follows than creates precedent. Moreover, aversion against, or apprehension of, establishing a precedent is never a valid reason for failure to do that which is justly called for.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin has conclusively proven my position that this is a Bolshevik bill.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman has had the advantage of $25,000,000 in the South, paid his people by the Russian people, and I am delighted to think that this great aid is something to him, to his people, and also to the country.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it becomes apparent that the first test on this bill may come on a motion to strike out the enacting clause. It is rumored that the motion will be offered in the committee immediately after the reading of the first section and immediately after the conclusion of general debate. Of course an affirmative vote on the motion to strike out the enacting clause kills the bill on the spot. It would shut out all opportunity for substitution; it would shut out all opportunity for amendment, and if approved by the House it would summarily and arbitrarily dispose of the whole question for this session. As a matter of fact, it would preclude any possibility of farm legislation during the Sixty-eighth Congress, as the short session ends on March 4 and barely affords time for the disposition of the supply bills.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have forgotten whether a motion to strike out the enacting clause can be made at any stage.

Mr. CANNON. It may be offered at any time after the reading of the first section and before the reading of the last section.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not recall.

Mr. CANNON. Let us consider the significance of a vote in favor of the motion to strike out the enacting clause. It not only indicates opposition to this bill as written, not only opposition to any bill which might be substituted for the McNary-Haugen bill, and to any form of legislation which might be evolved through amendment of the pending bill, but it signifies objection to giving the subject any consideration whatever.

Mr. ASWELL. Well, now, the gentleman has no right to make an assertion of that kind.

Mr. CANNON. I am simply explaining the effect of an affirmative vote on the motion, a matter of common parliamentary procedure.

If the House agrees to a motion to strike out the enacting clause after the reading of the first section, there will be no opportunity to read the bill under the five-minute rule and, of course, no opportunity to offer amendments. That is a final disposition of the bill without opportunity for perfecting amendments of any kind.

One of the principal grievances charged against King John of England, during his regency for Richard, was that he refused to hear the common people. The wealthy and noble could always secure an audience, but the peasant, the farmer, and the laborer, the bone and sinew of medieval England, were denied and refused redress. If this motion to strike out the enacting clause is agreed to, the Sixty-eighth Congress subjects itself to the same criticism. The rich and the powerful have never failed to receive a respectful hearing by this Congress. They have brought into this House every character of legislation in their own behalf, from the Mellon plan to the immigration bill, and have been accorded every consideration. Their bills have been debated at length, and every opportunity has been afforded for full consideration, but when the farmer, bankrupted by unfair discrimination and petitioning for relief from conditions the existence of which are universally conceded, comes in at the eleventh hour with a plea for restitution it is proposed that we throw the bill in his face and close the doors and go home.

Elemental justice demands that agriculture receive the same opportunity which has been accorded every other interest in the country since the session began, and if a motion is offered to strike out the enacting clause and deny further consideration it should be decisively defeated and the farmer given at least an opportunty to present his case. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the United States as a whole has enjoyed a decade of unexampled prosperity. Production, movement of freight, corporate earnings, employment of labor, wages, bank clearings, and all visible criterions of national wealth and prosperity have in the last 10 years increased to totals and established records unequaled by any nation in any period of the world's history.

The year 1923 was incomparably the greatest year in industrial and financial growth and development since the discovery of America. Figures compiled by the New York Federal Reserve Bank indicate that during the year 200 representative corporations, manufacturing practically every commodity consumed by modern civilization, made profits of $834,000,000, as compared with profits of $634,000,000 made in 1919, previously the record year for volume of business and percentage of profits. The dividend of 300 per cent, aggregating $318,423,295.38, declared by the Standard Oil group; the surplus of more than $6,353,350 reported by the International Shoe Co.; the annual revenue of half a billion dollars flowing into the coffers of the United States Steel Corporation and its surplus of $54,259,993.64 are typical of the unprecedented earnings of practically every great business in the country.

Railroad profits were larger for 1923 than for any previous year. The freight traffic for the year was the heaviest ever recorded. For 23 successive weeks railroad-car loadings exceeded 1,000,000 cars weekly, and railroad earnings and dividends were in proportion. After paying taxes, interest, and "all other ascertainable charges" and expending vast sums in equipment and improvements, railroads reported incomes ranging from $11.45 to $26.80 a share on heavily watered capitalizations.

The Pennsylvania Railroad drew a revenue for 1923 in excess of $775,000,000, a new high-water mark, and the general passenger agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in a circular letter to the Members of this House, announced that the year 1923 was the most prosperous in the history of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The remarkable prosperity of the country as a whole was also accurately reflected in the records of Federal income and profit taxes for 1923, which showed an increase of 21 per cent over those returned for 1922. During the year bank deposits and bank clearings, governed, of course, by business conditions in the great industrial and financial centers, surpassed all former records. Savings bank deposits increased $1,140,000,000. Savings averaged in excess of $30,000,000 a day for the entire year of 1923. And the increase continues. A nation-wide survey by the Federal Reserve Board shows that savings deposits on April 1, 1924, totaled more than $7,000,000,000, an increase of over $53,000,000 above the figures for the preceding month and $560,000,000 over the amount on deposit a year ago.

Our national wealth when last estimated by the Department of Labor amounted to $320,803,862,000, an increase of 72.2 per cent over that of the previous census—so marked an increase that the wealth of the United States to-day is practically equal to the total wealth of all Europe. The combined wealth of the United Kingdom, Germany, France, Italy, and Russia in 1914, when these nations were in the high tide of their greatest prosperity, totaled but $289,000,000,000, as compared with the present wealth of the United States of more than $320,000,000,000.

As an appropriate summary of business conditions for the year 1923, the financial experts, in summing up in the metropolitan newspapers the situation on January 1, 1924, announced that Wall Street had enjoyed a great year and was "satisfied." Those conversant with Wall Street's voracious appetite and with what is required to gorge it can well understand what is meant when it is announced that Wall Street is "satisfied."

But in the midst of the unparalleled prosperity prevailing to-day in the cities and the great industrial centers, while business is declaring enormous dividends, while the railroads are carrying the largest and most profitable traffic since the locomotive was invented, and labor is receiving the highest wage for the shortest hours since man was ordained to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, in the face of this remarkable affluence the farmers of the country, comprising its most important single industry both in numbers engaged and in service rendered, are receiving such meager returns from their investments and such inadequate wages for their labor as to bring agriculture and the agricultural districts to the brink of a business precipice.

While corporate dividends and wage schedules have been mounting steadily the farmer has been deflated $32,000,000 in three years—$18,000,000 in land values and $14,000,000 in crop values—and this is a conservative estimate. Statistics reported by the Secretary of Agriculture show that crops and livestock at the close of 1923 were worth about $7,000,000,000 less than in 1919. Although there was an increase of more than a million head of cattle, hogs, horses, and sheep between January 1, 1914, and January 1, 1923, and all other classes of property in the United States increased in value from 1912 to 1923, the value of livestock decreased from $6,238,389,000 to $5,807,104,000.

While industry is enjoying an era of prosperity never dreamed of and labor is receiving the highest wage since the dawn of civilization, the farmers of America are in direst distress. Farm products are selling at less than the cost of production; taxes remain unpaid; credit is exhausted; farms are being abandoned; country banks are failing; foreclosures are common; and standards of living have declined to a minimum. While the roar of traffic and the hum of prosperity fill the cities, out in the country only a few miles away are ruin and privation. In 15 wheat-growing States 108,000 farmers have lost their farms by legal process or bankruptcy since 1920. More than 122,000 have surrendered their property without legal proceedings, and nearly 375,000 retain possession of their farms only through the leniency of creditors. Secretary Wallace officially reports that practically one out of every five farmers is bankrupt if his loans were called, and practically all are in desperate financial straits.

The natural consequence is a decline in the value of farms, averaging something like 50 per cent, and carrying with it a drop in bank credits secured by depreciated land and crops that has thrown country banks into the hands of receivers and all but choked the avenues of rural credit. From 1918 to 1923, 1,448 banks suspended payment with total liabilities of more than half a billion dollars, the great majority of them located in rural districts and practically all dependent on agricultural patronage. The previous record for bank failures was made in 1893 when 326 banks closed; but in 1921 the record was again broken and 358 banks failed; in 1922 the number rose to 397; in 1923, to 274; and all previous records for bank disasters were broken during the period between July 1, 1923, and May 7, 1924, the last statistics available, when 511 banks went down carrying with them the little remaining credit assets of as many rural communities.

In the State of Missouri, comprising some of the richest farming lands in the world, cultivated by some of the most industrious and intelligent farmers to be found in the Union, a survey made by the Missouri Bankers' Association and reported at its convention held at St. Louis, May 1, 1924, disclosed a larger number of failures in the farming sections of the State in the preceding three years than in the whole period of more than 100 years since Missouri was admitted into the Union in 1821.

And Missouri is no exception. The entire farming industry is affected by a devastating financial blight. According to a survey by the Department of Agriculture the average gross annual income per farm in the United States is $712. This is not for each person but for each farm. Nor is this profit. It is gross receipts. Out of it must be paid the taxes, cost of operations, up-keep, interest on loans, and wages of farm labor. What is left of the $712 when these charges are taken out is the pay received by the farmer. It is the pitiful reward of those who work the longest hours, under the most adverse weather conditions, and at the most laborious profession known to man. It is the remuneration received not only for his own labor but for that of his wife and children, and it is the return not only on his labor but on his investments in land, stock, and equipment.

But the farmer's disadvantage does not end there. That is only the beginning. When he takes his few hard-won dollars to the market place he discovers they will buy only 50 cents' worth of the manufactured commodities required by his family. While the price of his products has been deflated to pre-war levels, the price of industry's products have not only refused to take a corresponding drop but have advanced even beyond war-time prices. As a result his dollar which before the war was worth 100 cents in the city markets has to-day only a fraction of its former purchasing power.

The following comparisons of the purchasing power of a bushel of wheat in 1913 and 1923 illustrate the gravity and extent of this discrimination against the farmer:

	Cost, 1913	Cost, 1923	Wheat needed—
			1913	1923
			Bushels	Bushels
Plow	$9.50	$27.00	11.7	29.2
Double wagon	61.21	132.20	66.8	143.3
Single harness	11.00	26.00	13.7	28.3
100 pounds barbed wire	2.25	5.09	3	5.6
Suit of clothes	16.75	28.50	21	31
Two bottom plows	64.00	125.60	80	140
Double harness	32.00	73.50	40	80
Pair of shoes	4.75	11.00	6	12
Thresher operators	6.25	14.75	8	16
Harvest labor	2.00	6.00	3	6.5

Farm price of wheat per bushel:
1913	$0.799
1923	.923

The same discrimination is shown in the purchasing power of hogs, a staple farm product, the returns from which largely fix the price of corn and other farm feeds:

	Cost, 1913	Cost 1913	Pork needed—		Increase
			1913	1923
			Pounds	Pounds	per cent
Walking plow, 14-inch, general purpose	$11.75	$21.25	157	332	111
Gang plow, 14-inch	53.25	99.00	744	1,549	108
Disk harrow, 7-foot, 16-inch	23.00	47.50	321	743	131
Corn planter, 2-row	31.75	64.50	443	1,009	128
Grain drill, 22-7	106.00	190.00	1,481	2,973	101
Double wagon	61.21	132.20	----------	855	2,069
Ton of hard coal	8.59	19.17	----------	120	300

Farm price, hogs, per 100 pounds: 1913, $7.16; 1923, $6.39.

A corn cultivator which could have been bought for 500 pounds of live cattle in 1913 to-day requires 1,400 pounds of cattle in the same market. In other words, when the city man comes out in the country his dollar buys $1.30 worth of farm products, but when the farmer takes the same dollar back to the city it is worth only 50 cents in manufactured commodities. When we come to investigate this remarkable discrepancy between the buying power of the farm dollar and that of the industrial dollar we find it is directly due to methods and conditions of marketing. Manufactured products are fed into the market only as there is a demand for them and protected by a heavy tariff. Any surplus is kept off the domestic market and sold abroad. On the other hand, agricultural products are thrown on the open market as soon as produced, regardless of the demand, and, of course, greatly in excess of market requirements. The market is glutted, dealers are overstocked, and the oversupply inevitably beats down the price to a level far below the cost of production.

This is notably true of the wheat crop. We produce about 750,000,000 bushels of wheat every year, 600,000,000 bushels of which are consumed in the United States, leaving approximately 150,000,000 bushels to be exported to foreign countries. When exported it is passed through the Liverpool market, where it is sold in competition with the surplus of every other wheat-producing country in the world, and must therefore be sold at the world price. The world price thereupon becomes the American price, because exporters will pay shipping costs abroad only when they can no longer sell for a higher price at home, and in this way the price received for our surplus fixes the price of our entire crop.

The same conditions apply to hogs, and the 2,000,000,000 pounds of pork and pork products which we must annually export to Europe lowers the price of pork at home to the world price prevailing in foreign markets.

Not so with the products of America's industrial plants. Protected from outside competition by high tariff walls, they are fed into the home market in carefully measured quantities sufficient to supply the demand only, and at prices to which the tariff has been added to make a handsome profit. The surplus is dumped abroad in competition with foreign goods and, of course, at world prices, but can not affect the domestic price, as it does not reach the domestic market and is shipped abroad as soon as produced. As a result of these two widely differing methods of marketing, manufactured goods are sold in a protected domestic market at the American price and agricultural products are sold both at home and abroad in an open market at the world price.

Industry sells in the American market and buys in the world market. It sells its products at a high price and buys its necessities at a low price. Agriculture sells in the world market and buys in the American market. It sells its products cheap and buys its necessities dear.

Under this double system of short changing, the farmer is rapidly being reduced to a condition of peonage. The situation is becoming intolerable. The farmer, the most willing and indispensable producer in America, is entitled to a share of the wealth he produces. He is entitled to participate in the abounding prosperity which every other class in the country is enjoying. Either farm products must be raised to the level of nonagricultural goods or the price of the latter must be brought down to that of farm products. This is the great problem in the United States to-day. The latter course is not to be considered. It is neither practicable nor desirable. The only course open then is to bring agricultural prices to a par with the prices of other commodities—to make the farm dollar worth as much as the industrial dollar, to apply to agriculture the same principles already applied to other industries, and that is what the McNary-Haugen bill proposes to do.

It proposes to provide for the use of the farmer the same marketing advantages now utilized by the producers of manufactured goods. It proposes to relieve the domestic market of the surplus which depresses the price and sell it abroad under the jurisdiction of a centralized export agency similar to that employed by steel, textile, and other industries. It creates for this purpose a Government agency to be known as the United States Agricultural Export Corporation. This corporation would have power to go into the markets and buy agricultural products which were selling for less than their pre-war value and pay a price for them which would place them on a parity with the general average of all other commodities. Such a price is termed the "ratio price."

In determining this "ratio price" the wholesale prices of 404 staples, including every variety of commodity from machinery and clothing to fuels and building materials, for the 10 years beginning with 1905 and ending with 1914, inclusive, as compiled by the Department of Labor, is taken as a basis.

This decade has been selected as a period which represents fairly normal conditions throughout the United States. If prices prevailing during that period can be said to be unfair to either farm or factory, they probably favor the latter, for no one can claim that the farmer was unduly prosperous during those years. Few farmers made more than a living, and those who did made it through the inevitable increase in the price of land rather than through farming operations. Conditions may be considered as nearest to normal during those years, and the whole purpose of the bill is to restore to agricultural products the purchasing power they possessed during that period.

It would be the function of the corporation to maintain the price of any particular farm product at the same relation to the average price of that product during 1905–1914 that the average price of the 404 commodities at the time bears to the average price of the 404 commodities during the period from 1905 to 1914.

If, for example, the average price of hogs during the 1905–1914 period was approximately $7 per hundred pounds and the present price of hogs was $7, and the average price of the 404 commodities is to-day about 60 per cent higher than the average price of the 404 commodities during the 1905–1914 period, the ratio price of hogs would be 60 per cent higher than $7, or approximately $11.20.

Under the provisions of the bill the farmer would receive $11.20 instead of $7 per hundred pounds for his hogs. If the price of the 404 articles advanced the price of hogs would ndvance; if the price of the 404 commodities declined the price of hogs would decline.

So the farmer could always be certain that the dollars which he received for his hogs would buy as much as they bought before the war. He could no longer be robbed, as under the present system, by having the manufacturer raise the price of the 404 necessities while the packer at the same time lowered the price of hogs.

During the year 1923 the State of Missouri produced 37,947,000 bushels of wheat, 196,000,000 bushels of corn, and approximately 1,111,600,000 pounds of pork.

The table below shows the additional revenue which would have been derived from these products had the ratio price been in effect:

Missouri, 1923

APPROXIMATE INCREASE IN WHEAT, CORN, AND HOG VALUES IF RATIO PRICES HAD BEEN IN EFFECT

Wheat	$19,352,970
Corn	31,497,600
Hogs	46,687,200
Total	97,537,770

In other words, under the McNary-Haugen bill the State of Missouri would have received in one year from these three commodities alone approximately $1,000,000,000 more than the prices actually paid the farmers who produced them.

It is a stock objection that the bill is a price-fixing proposition, but it is apparent at once that while the influence of world factors would be removed the effect of domestic influences would still obtain, and under the pressure of local supply and demand would fluctuate with the price of the 404 commodities. When these declined farm products would automatically decline with them and when they advanced in price farm products would automatically advance with them. The price of farm products would no more be fixed than that of the 404 commodities, and certainly no system could be more equitable.

The surplus bought to relieve the domestic market would, of course, be sold abroad, and the corporation would lose on all such transactions the difference between the American price at which it had been bought and the world price at which it must be sold.

To provide for this deficit the corporation would estimate in advance its probable losses on these sales and the season's operating expenses, and would collect from the producer at the time of marketing a small per cent of the ratio price to be used in meeting such charges and to be known as an equalization fee. A receipt would be given the producer at the time it was collected and after the season's operations were completed any part of the fund remaining on hand would be distributed back to the producer in the same proportions in which it was collected.

For illustration, let us assume that wheat is selling at $1.07 a bushel, as was the case in November, 1923. But the corporation finds that the ratio price is $1.58 a bushel, and establishes an equalization fee of 12 cents per bushel. The farmer receives $1.46 in cash and a receipt for 12 cents, a total of $1.58, the ratio price. Losses on surplus sold abroad and operating expenses would amount to about 9 cents per bushel, and at the end of the season the farmer presents his receipt and receives 3 cents per bushel, which, added to the $1.46 already received, gives him $1.49 a bushel for his wheat, or a margin of 42 cents over the price he would have received had the law not been in operation.

Had this bill been in force in 1923 the price would have, in fact, averaged $1.58 a bushel instead of $1.07. Twelve cents per bushel would have supplied an ample equalization fee, and the farmer would have received $1.46 in cash and a receipt for the 12-cent equalization fee. Our crop amounted to approximately 750,000,000 bushels, and 600,000,000 bushels were required for home consumption, leaving 150,000,000 bushels to be bought by the corporation for export. At the world price of $1.07 per bushel, the American farmer would have received $802,500,000 for his entire crop. But under the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill he would have received for the 600,000,000 bushels sold at home $876,000,000 in cash and equalization receipts at the rate of 12 cents per bushel, amounting to $72,000,000. For the 150,000,000 bushels exported by the corporation and sold at $1.07, the world price, he would have received $160,500,000. The 150,000,000 bushels bought at the domestic price of $1.58 a bushel and sold at the world price of $1.07 per bushel would entail a loss of $76,500,000, and the operating expenses bring the total equalization charge up to $81,500,000. Subtracting this from the equalization fund of $90,000,000 collected on the entire crop of 750,000,000 bushels leaves $8,500,000 to be returned at the end of the year when the equalization receipts are presented for payment, and this added to the $876,000,000 received in the home market and the $160,500,000 received in the world market makes a total of $1,045,000,000 received for the year's crop under the McNary-Haugen bill, instead of the $802,500,000 actually received under the present system, which the gentlemen opposed to this bill desire to perpetuate.

The same procedure would apply to other agricultural commodities provided for in the bill. The ratio price of hogs, for example, would be maintained in the same manner. Recently hogs on the St. Louis market sold for $6.70 per hundred pounds, the lowest price for hogs recorded at the National Stock Yards since March 8, 1912. Upon a pre-war purchasing power basis the price would have been $10.85 per hundred pounds, the ratio price, which on a car weighing 16,000 pounds would have made a difference of $664 to the farmer who produced them.

It is to be noted that in these transactions no part of the expense of administering the law and enforcing the ratio price is to be charged against the United States Treasury. The adjustment is without cost to the taxpayer. The farmer, who receives the profit, pays the bill in full.

In fact, the farmer in urging this legislation is asking no favors and seeking no special consideration. The bill is not a measure proposing class legislation by depriving others of their rights as is so often and so unjustly charged, but proposes merely to restore to the farmer rights of which he has long been deprived by legislation already on the statute books. Through the enactment of legislation granting special favors to other groups a system of protection has been built up under which practically every other industry and every other class of labor has been protected against the competition of European products and cheap foreign labor, while the farmer has been left on the outside in a position similar to that of one of the early settlers against whom the door of the fort had been closed during an Indian attack.

There are three great factors in the business world: Capital, which owns the money, the factories, the mines, the transportation systems, and which runs Wall Street and handles the markets; labor, which operates all this vast mechanism owned by capital; and, third, agriculture, which provides the food supply to sustain both capital and labor, and is the most important of the three, for without it the world would starve in 90 days.

The first of these great agencies has already asked and obtained the right to combine for export trade, tariff protection, and other legislative favors and has for many years enjoyed many times the advantage which this bill now proposes to give to agriculture. The Webb-Pomerene bill and the Edge bill permitting combination for export trade, the Federal reserve act, the interstate commerce law, the Esch-Cummins act, and especially the Fordney-McCumber bill are as patently paternalistic and fix prices more certainly and more drastically than the most hostile interpretation of the McNary-Haugen bill could possibly effect them. The McNary-Haugen bill does not create precedent. It merely follows precedent. Industry is to-day charging prices and drawing revenues which would be impossible if these laws were wiped off the statute books.

We are told that the farmer's problem can not be solved by the enactment of laws; that we can not legislate prosperity. Apparently it is all right to legislate for the millionaire banker, the Wall Street capitalist, the industrial baron, and the railroad manipulator, but when the farmer presumes to ask for a living wage the proposition is branded as economically unsound and socialistic and he is given fatherly advice and told he must help himself.

Labor, the second of the three great agencies, has likewise received special consideration at the hands of Congress. Under the immigration laws, the eight-hour laws, the Adamson bill, and the Howell-Barkley bill, if passed, labor enjoys the same protection from the pauper labor of Europe, the coolie labor of the East, and the peon labor of the South asked by the farmer in this bill. Under this protection labor is to-day maintaining double the wage scale which would be either practicable or possible without favoring legislation.

The farmer believes in the right to organize, in the theory of collective bargaining and the doctrine of the living wage, and has cooperated with labor in the passage of laws which make them possible. And it is significant that organized labor favors the McNary-Haugen bill and is advocating its enactment. The workingman realizes that the decay of agriculture not only restricts his food supply and destroys a vast market for the products of his labor but drives into the city and into shop and factory armies of farm workers to compete for work and depress wages, and he is willing to concede to others what he asks for himself and to pay the men who produce the food he eats a living wage for it.

As a matter of fact, the cost of living would not be appreciably affected by the passage of the bill, as the difference in price would be taken up by the reduction in cost of distribution. Bread sold in May, 1917, when wheat was bringing $3.45 a bushel, at the same price charged for it in September, 1923, when wheat was 92 cents, and there was little difference in the price of packer's bacon whether hogs sold for $11 per hundred pounds or for $7 per hundred or any price between the two.

Capital should be as generous as labor. Both are receiving an American price for their products while agriculture is receiving a world price. Both are enjoying protection while agriculture is competing with the starvation standards of the peasant and peon of war-stricken, poverty-cursed Europe and Asia. If American industry is unwilling to meet the competition of foreign industry, and American labor is unwilling to compete with foreign labor, how can they ask the American farmer to do what they themselves refuse to do?

Even in the McNary-Haugen bill agriculture is not asking the permanent legislative status so long enjoyed by industry and labor. The McNary-Haugen bill is an emergency measure only. It expires in five years; and the representatives of the farm organizations now in Washington give definite and emphatic assurance that when the date of its expiration arrives no continuance will be asked or expected.

The bill is merely designed to give the farmers an opportunity to organize and develop their own marketing machinery, a task accomplished by every other industry many years ago, but hitherto denied the farmer by conditions of environment and economic handicaps.

The development of farm organization is necessarily a slow and difficult process. There are six and a half million farmers, widely isolated and of vastly varying interests; and the welding of a representative majority of this vast constituency into a compact, effective distributing agency is an undertaking of the first magnitude.

But it is neither impossible nor impracticable. Already coordination is proceeding at a phenomenal rate in every branch of the industry. Cooperative associations are already to be found in the smallest villages, and national cooperative movements are now represented in every State in the Union.

From 4,000 to 5,000 organizations of producers are shipping livestock in a cooperative way, and the number is rapidly increasing. Thousands of cooperative elevators are owned by farmer organizations in the agricultural States, and central depots and plants are being established in every important city. The largest enterprise in my own town, both in volume of business and in capital invested, is the Farmers' Cooperative Elevator Co., owned and operated by the farmers of the community.

Surveys by the Department of Agriculture show 2,690 grain-marketing associations in the United States, and 753 associations for the handling of fruit and vegetables, and innumerable cooperative creameries and similar farm agencies.

Some of them manage vast enterprises and transact an annual business aggregating millions of dollars. The Montana Wheat Growers' Association handled 6,000,000 bushels of grain in 1923, in addition to other business, and its sales for 1924 already approximate 5,000,000 bushels.

The two greatest livestock commission companies in the Central West, if not in America, are the Farmers' Commission Co., organized by the Missouri Farmers' Association, and the Producers' Commission Co., organized by the Missouri Farm Bureau Federation. They handled 14,000 cars of livestock in 1923 and transacted a third of all the business passing through the great cattle-marketing centers of the State.

The Missouri Farmers' Association, organized in 1914, is today the largest dealer in poultry and eggs in the United States and handles a larger volume of business in those two commodities than either Armour or Swift. Three hundred thousand dollars were paid back to its members in patronage dividends last year from two of its four livestock commission companies. It has organized 377 livestock shipping associations and financed nearly 400 grain elevators and produce exchanges, and 9 central storage plants in Missouri in the last decade. It has saved hundreds of thousands of dollars for its members in commissions and profits and is controlled exclusively by dirt farmers who own and operate their own farms and who in the last seven years have contributed more than $5,000,000 in basic capital to finance its operations.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, engaged in similar enterprises, is perfecting township and county organizations in all the States and has materially improved production and marketing throughout the country.

With practical, successful, growing, cooperative organizations like these developing in all sections of the country, of their own initiative and on their own capital, it is evident that under the impetus of this bill a national cooperative organization would be formed which would be ready to take over the work of the Agricultural Export Corporation the instant it was relinquished.

In fact, leading representatives of the farm organizations announce that in event of the passage of the bill a conference of farm leaders will be convened at once and a statement issued notifying the farmers of America that they must immediately begin to perfect their own marketing machinery preparatory to taking over the business of the export corporation and continuing the benefits conferred by the McNary-Haugen bill at the expiration of the five-year period for which it is to be created.

Abraham Lincoln said:

> The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they need to have done, but can not do at all, or can not so well do, for themselves in their separate and individual capacities.

He could not better or more accurately have expressed the theory of this bill had he been thinking of it at the time.

The farmers of America with all their handicaps can not do for themselves in their separate and individual capacities what every other class and industry in the land have long ago accomplished to their own profit and to the farmer's disadvantage.

This bill places agriculture on the same footing. It will make it possible for the farmers to help themselves, for them to enjoy the same opportunities and advantages already accorded labor and industry, and under the interpretation of Abraham Lincoln it is therefore a legitimate object of government.

It is a measure which will contribute not only to the needs and necessities of the farmer but to the welfare and prosperity of the Nation. The times demand a race of freemen in rural America and our form of government rests primarily on a powerful farming class—men prosperous and intelligent, fearless, and independent. The safety of the Nation and the perpetuity of democracy demand that the farmer receive his just share of the economic profits and the opportunities and comforts of life, and there can be no substantial and lasting prosperity if he is denied them.

There is an ancient document, now seldom quoted and too often forgotten, which opens with this preamble:

> We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America.

Mr. Chairman, there is not a single purpose among the many enumerated in this greatest of all constitutional enactments which would not be conserved and effectuated by the provisions of this measure to remancipate and revivify American agriculture.

The farmer deserves well at the hands of the Nation. He has produced unstintedly the most essential element of national wealth. He has fed to surfeit our armies in war and our citizens in peace. Suffering rankling inequalities, he has nevertheless generously and patriotically contributed his all with meager reward. We must not fail him in his hour of need. Let us pass this bill and restore to him and to rural America their rightful share of the Nation's prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I represent an agricultural district, and I shall not take council of the fears of those who are opposed to this bill, but prefer to rely more upon the judgment of those who are friendly to it. This bill comes with the approval after full consideration from the great Committee on Agriculture, and I am disposed to support it. The details of the bill I will not discuss at this time during general debate.

The condition of the farmer is a tragedy brought about by a number of causes.

While other industries well organized sought to protect themselves by Government aid during the aftermath of the World War and succeeded by favored action in Congress, agriculture bore the brunt and stood a loss without a parallel, and no wonder Congress is now flooded with bills seeking to remedy the situation for the farmer.

In the disaster that came to the farmer, the Federal Reserve Board played a part in its drastic and cruel deflation, which left a scar which will be long in evidence. Bankruptcy followed quickly and fast with falling prices while taxation increased.

Another factor to the detriment of the farmer was the Fordney-McCumber high-tariff law, believed by many to be the greatest wrong ever perpetrated against the farmer.

Let me here quote from the Atlantic Monthly of May, 1924:

> The tariff is another important factor in the farmer's cost of living. I realize that I tread on highly controversial ground; but I can not honestly fail to state that in my judgment the Fordney-McCumber tariff was a colossal swindle perpetrated against the farmer. The farm Representatives in Congress were persuaded to vote for high tariffs on manufactured goods in exchange for high tariffs on farm products. But we do not import foodstuffs; we produce a surplus of them for export; and, in consequence, the tariff laid on the hypothetical inbound trade has no effect on the prices the farmer gets (except as regards a small amount of high-grade hard wheat). On the other hand, the prices of many things which he buys have been increased because of the tariff, either directly through duties imposed or indirectly because of the general upswing of all prices.
>
> Finally, the farmer is struggling under a heavy load because his indebtedness was incurred in dollars of a certain value, and now must be discharged in dollars of far greater value—about 50 per cent greater, on the average.

The high cost of labor and the excessive increase in freight rates under the Esch-Cummins Transportation Act are additional factors. The big banks, the manufacturers, and the railroads secured the legislation they demanded. Agriculture was left without protection and bore the brunt of the disaster of falling prices, while everything they were compelled to purchase went to a high level, and as a result bankruptcy followed, and the effect was felt in other lines of business. Five hundred bank failures in two years resulted. It is estimated that 1,200,000 persons left the farms for good in 1922. They fled from the farms because conditions pertaining to this industry were no longer tolerable. No hope for relief was held out; thus they sought to better their condition elsewhere. A remedy is now sought by legislation. An intolerable situation exists and must be met. I will not be a party to defeat all measures of proposed relief, and say to the farmer that we have helped others, yet refuse to try to help him.

A high level of prices for money in the banks, for goods of the manufacturers, for transportation rates, and a low level for prices of farm products, and no market abroad for the surplus products of the farm. You reduce the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar. It reacts and helps to cripple those who have been favored by the law. Let us try this experiment for temporary relief until the wrongs committed against agriculture can be remedied by making changes in the laws enacted against their interest. This McNary-Haugen bill does not, as I see it, necessarily interfere with the Yoakum plan or the Norris plan or other plans for permanent relief. I am not unfriendly to the Yoakum plan, known as the Curtis-Aswell bill, or the Norris bill, as I understand them. Let us give the benefit of the doubt to the farmer. The farmer will not longer stand by those who have favored every interest while he has been neglected. His surplus products must reach the foreign markets. Commerce on the high seas and trade between the nations of the world must be restored. Transportation rates must be made more reasonable and more business, products of manufactures lowered, and more goods sold. You can not paralyze the great basic industry of agriculture without injury to all business and all sections. Lend a helping hand; try this proposed remedy. Its safety rests in its proper administration. Do not throw up your hands and admit your want of capacity to help the situation; if you do you will regret it. Besides high tariff duties, high interest rates, high priced goods, high labor costs, high transportation costs the farmer has been at the mercy of the gambler in farm products. A high level of prices for all, except a low level for farm products and no foreign markets. Lift the level of prices for farm products or lower the level for what they must purchase. Do something now to relieve this distressed condition, and let us trade again with all the world, and, with a revived commerce here and abroad, we will start toward prosperity that will be permanent. Live and let live and all the world will be better. Unshackle trade; break down private monopoly that feeds on the masses that suffer while greed enriches only a few.

By the revenue bill you are giving hundreds of millions of dollars to those enjoying large net incomes, none of which goes to the farmer for he has no net income, and you hesitate to loan him the use of a revolving fund of $200,000,000, fully protected under this bill, by which the prosperity of the whole country may be helped. Every organized class or business comes and gets from Congress millions without protest. Increased millions for the Army and for the Navy. You take over projects like the Cape Cod Canal, dumped on the Government because not sufficiently productive under private ownership. No cry for socialism there, no cry of communism or Government ownership protest. You denounce this bill as socialistic and yet you are driving Germany, England, and congested populations of Europe to purchase from Soviet Russia their surplus wheat, while you refuse to furnish the legislation and opportunity to sell to the hungry masses of Europe the surplus wheat of the United States.

You are willing to loan money to farmers at high rates of interest on farms of low valuation, but not to permit the Government to lend a helping hand by encouragement of this great basic industry. You refuse to give them cheaper fertilizer for their depleted lands. You delay operation of Muscle Shoals at the behest of the Fertilizer Trust. Big business asks and gets what it desires, and hides its surplus in newly created corporations to avoid income taxation. Farmers have no income to conceal. They feed the world at a loss, and struggle for existence while their loans increase. Let the surplus of the farm as well as of the factory be sent abroad to meet the needs of the world market and the farmers be given a fair deal in this country. [Applause.]

The opponents of this bill charge that it is a price fixing bill and therefore obnoxious. The proponents of the bill say it is rather a price adjusting bill.

If the charge made is true, are not prices fixed in other lines of industry? Are not rates for transportation both freight and passenger fixed and so authorized by law and by approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission both on land and sea in this country and abroad? Have not your high tariff laws enabled manufacturers to fix prices for their goods that you are compelled to buy or go without? Go into any store in the land and upon the shelves thereof the goods await customers at fixed prices—the products of the mines, of manufacturers, of transportation, of labor in every line.

The price is well known, but you must not fix or permit the fixing or adjustment of prices of farm products but let the gamble go on. It has seemed to me that the time approaches when the gamblers' control should be broken and that they should not longer be permitted to beat down the prices of farm products in the hands of the producer and raised thereafter to high price for the consumer. So that both the producer and the consumer are robbed by those who can corner the markets.

The time has come when something must be done or else by reaction the other great industries will fail of prosperity, for the country can not prosper if the farmer becomes bankrupt.

Lend a helping hand, else the farmer will either go broke or will organize everywhere and take control, where now he is willing to cooperate. All he asks is fair play ,and that he must and will have.

If in supporting this measure I am in error, I at least have given heed to the judgment of the Committee on Agriculture of the House that reported the bill favorably after months of exhaustive consideration.

This bill has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, of farm organizations throughout the country, including my own State of Missouri and my own district. I have heeded the appeal of the farmer, and I have listened to his complaint, hoping and believing that in seeking to help him I have wronged no legitimate interest. There can be no lasting prosperity in trade and industry unless the farmer is reasonably prosperous.

The farming industry is the largest in the country, and his discontent must be reckoned with. Let us have a remedy now, even if temporary, and let us later lower the high-tariff wall, reduce freight rates, and open up the markets of the world, so that the surplus products of the farm can be cashed. If agriculture is to have any relief by legislation at this session of Congress, apparently it must come from this bill, for while there are pending measures vital to agriculture none can be substituted for the McNary-Haugen bill. It is the only bill having a definite and specific method for lifting the markets in which farm products are sold to an index ratio comparable with other commodities.

Mr. ASWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House, known as the McNary-Haugen bill, would, by greatly increasing the cost of living, certainly cause great hardship to millions of the American people, who are already paying extortionate prices for all kinds of food. On the other hand it would not give the farmers of the country any real or lasting relief. Those who urge the passage of this bill tell us frankly that the purpose of the measure is to raise the price of all the products of the farmer, such as wheat, oats corn, cattle, sheep, hogs, and so forth, all of which are necessary as food for the American people. The supporters of the measure argue that by such a law they could raise the price of wheat, for example, from $1 to $1.50 per bushel, increase the price of hogs and other farm products, without doing any substantial harm to the people who must have them as food. They tell us that a 50 per cent increase in the price of wheat would probably not increase the price of flour very much, and that a like increase in the price of livestock would not to any great extent increase the price of meats. Their attempted explanation is that it would be a long while before the change in the price of the raw material would affect the price of the refined products used as food.

In support of this claim they point to the fact that shortly after the war wheat and other farm products dropped very greatly in price without a corresponding decrease in the price of the foodstuffs derived from these natural products. That is true and is explained by the fact that the big wheat dealers, for example, had control of practically all the wheat of the country, and could therefore compel the public to pay a price for the flour made from the wheat almost equal to the price the public paid when wheat was scarce. In other words, they were able to control the supply of wheat and demand the price they wanted. If, however, they were compelled by law to pay to the producer 50 per cent more for the wheat than they are now paying, they would, because of their control of the supply, instantly increase the price demanded from the public or the millers 50 per cent or more above the present price, and so the public will be compelled to pay it in the increased price of flour.

But it is said that even if it were to increase the cost of living to the American people, it is necessary for the protection of the farmer. There is no doubt that the wheat farmer in particular has suffered great hardship during the last year or two. This is largely due to the vicious Fordney-McCumber tariff law, which increases the cost of practically everything the farmer must buy, because the manufacturers who supply their goods to the farmer are given a monopoly of the market. This increase in the price of everything the farmer must buy, which is due to the evil provisions of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law, has the effect of reducing the value of the farm products, which have no market at present to speak of, except in the United States. But while we must admit that the farmer has suffered greatly in the last year or two, and many of them have become bankrupt, that does not justify the passage of an unsound law.

I contend that even the farmer would not be benefited by this proposed law but would be more seriously handicapped. This bill proposes to force an artificial price on practically all farm products for a period of five years. It is proposed to create a corporation to buy from the farmers all their products above that which is sufficient only to supply the American trade at the price fixed by the corporation. This corporation is then to sell in foreign markets this excess supply of farm products and hold the farmer responsible for the difference between what the corporation pays to the farmer for his produce and that for which the corporation sells this produce in the foreign markets. This difference in price is deducted by the corporation from the price paid for his produce in the form of what is called an equalization fee.

Now, let us see how this plan would work. The argument now is that the low price the farmer receives for his produce is due to the fact that there is an oversupply of wheat and other farm products. If he were guaranteed a price arbitrarily fixed by the corporation, the high price so guaranteed to him would certainly cause the farmer to grow more wheat or anything else upon which he was guaranteed an increased price. He would naturally produce what he might believe would bring him the highest profits. The result would be that, instead of curing the evil of so-called overproduction, the tendency would be to produce even more of the crop which had been guaranteed this increased price by the Government corporation, and so at the end the farmer would find himself worse off than if nothing had been done, because the equalization fees which would be charged against him at the end of the year would be increased constantly on account of the increase in the supply which the corporation would be compelled to buy and sell abroad at a constantly decreasing price, so that in the end the farmer would be more certain to become bankrupt than if nothing at all were done.

The bill, however, would have the effect of putting millions of dollars into the pockets of the great packers of the United States and into the treasuries of the wheat monopolies, because they now have great quantities of all kinds of meats and grains in their warehouses which would immediately go to the price fixed by the Government as soon as it were known what the price would be, for the stock that they have on hand would be immediately necessary to supply the American demand, and they would not suffer the fate of the farmer. They would have an immediate demand and an immediate market for this supply which they have cornered.

No, Mr. Speaker, neither the consumers, the people who live in the cities and who must buy food, nor the farmers who produce it should allow themselves to be fooled by this price fixing bill. Surely everyone knows that the American people pay now unreasonable prices for everything they must have in order to live, and yet this bill proposes to raise these prices far above even the present high prices. So far as the farmer is concerned, it would have only the effect of getting him more deeply into debt. The only class of people who would profit at all would be the big meat packers and those who control the grain market. Those who are to be blamed for the unjust laws which are now causing great hardships not only to the farmers but to the people of the cities can not now deceive the people by proposing to fix high prices on farm products by law. They may please the special-privilege seekers, who have helped to put them in office, but the people themselves will refuse to be fooled by such unjust measures.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, Shakespeare said "All the world's a stage." This is not the full truth. The world has many stages and I have often thought that Congress is one of them.

Take the bills that are introduced—how like human characters they are. They run the whole gamut of human emotions—comedy, pathos, melodrama, and tragedy.

The committees of the House are the managers who pick the characters to fit the play. The bills introduced are like actors hanging around the stage door waiting for a job. If the committee reports them, they become like actors in the wings, awaiting their turn.

Sometimes the manager picks out an actor to play a serious part who might make a good comedian, and sometimes selects for a comedy part one who would fit better in a tragedy.

This bill was selected for a serious part. If it does not turn into comedy, it is surely destined to become a tragedy.

The tragical part of it is that it has been offered with such earnestness, hailed with such enthusiasm, and advertised with such vigor as a panacea for the farmers' plight that it is pathetic to contemplate the disappointment of its pretended beneficiaries when the true character of its insufficiency and impotency is revealed.

It is always rather awkward for an urbanite to take a position against any measure purporting to benefit the farmers.

There is already too much of prejudice and misunderstanding as to the relations of the farmer and the urbanite. Demagogues are prone to antagonize these two divisions of our population for their own self-aggrandizement.

I hold that the farmer and his city cousin are interdependent and tied together by the firmest bonds of mutual interest.

Without the farm cities would die. Without the cities the farmer would be isolated and would have no market or means of establishing contact with the world.

To oppose any measure purporting to be in the interest of the farmer therefore requires great caution, for it must not be assumed that every bill will fulfill the pretensions of its sponsors.

No bad measure has ever yet been passed without some pretense that it had a good purpose.

Because of the misconception, so often attached to the attitude and motives of urbanites who take sides in legislation affecting the agricultural interests, I have made a particular study of this bill.

ITS SHADY ORIGIN

Its shady, if not illegitimate, origin has been so thoroughly disclosed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] as to put all hesitating minds on guard. The Secretary of Agriculture at first denied, then confessed his knowledge and interest in its creation. It appears that it emanated from three men whose affiliation with the packing interests prompted my good colleague to call this measure: "The big five bonus bill."

If it is correct that this measure had its inception in the minds of men affiliated with the packing interests, known to be the natural enemies of the farmer, then all the true friends of the farmers have good ground to look at it askance and doubt its effectiveness.

A PRICE-FIXING MEASURE

Although faint attempts to deny it have been made, this measure is essentially a price-fixing proposal. Upon the excuse that an emergency exists with respect to the relatively low prices of agricultural commodities, the bill provides for the creation of a Government corporation to be called "The United States Agricultural Corporation," to consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, as chairman, and four members appointed by the President.

This corporation is to have a capital stock of $200,000,000, furnished it—please note—not by popular voluntary subscription, but directly handed to it out of the Treasury of the United States.

With this capital, it is empowered to buy the exportable surplus of wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine produced in the United States.

This exportable surplus it is at liberty to dump into foreign markets at whatever it will fetch. By a complicated, elaborate, and wholly impracticable device provided in the bill the losses from foreign sales are supposed to be apportioned among the producers.

This puts the United States directly into the export business, and the question will be immediately asked if it is right for the Government to sell cattle and hogs and pickled pigs' feet, why should it not sell cotton clothing, steel rails, hardware, or any one or more of the thousand and one things produced in industrial marts of the country?

But that is not all. This corporation Frankenstein is empowered to fix the fair price of all the agricultural products in which it is authorized to deal, and, to utterly clinch the market and preclude any competition, it is practically empowered to adjust, alter, and readjust tariff rates monthly, or as often as may be necessary.

I suspect this will be a sore point with Congress; whether it will be willing to surrender to this socialistic mechanism the right to initiate tariff legislation and repeal or alter existing tariff laws at its own sweet will.

When Congress makes this abdication, I shall be ready to admit that representative government in this country is a failure. [Applause.]

But, assuming that all of these tremendous and unusual powers are surrendered, either now or hereafter, by a weak and spineless Congress, indifferent to its noble past, the pertinent question arises: "Will it work?"

The answer is "Just as well as the thousands of perpetual-motion devices now gathering dust in the junk room of the Patent Office."

ITS ECONOMIC FALSITY

My friends, the laws of physics have their counterpart in the science of economics. If they did not, we would have no science, but only blundering experimentation.

It is a maxim of physics which every schoolboy knows, that "water always seeks its own level." Let us apply that.

The prices of commodities are known to be fluid. Wherever there is traffic and mutual exchange, prices shift and interchange as swiftly as the molecules of water. Where there is this connection, no matter how ramified or distant, a change in the level, whether a rise or fall, at one point is immediately followed by a similar rise or fall in the remotest conduit.

Let us see how this works in economics.

Does anyone suppose that there can be a substantial rise in the price of cattle, swine, wheat, or corn without it being instantly reflected in the prices of all other products? If so, he has not learned the most elementary lesson in exchange. No, the moment the price of wheat goes up, bread will go up; when cattle go up, butchers' prices will go up. When food goes up, labor will demand its share in increased wages. When wages go up, the price of commodities will go up. This condition will be general in the mines, in transportation, and in all branches of industry.

Then our agricultural friend will find that his bright rainbow hopes have been a delusion and a snare. He will find that the disparity between the things he sells and the things he wishes to buy has once again become his nightmare. He will find himself in the same plight as before.

What will he do then? Why, of course he will have to come back to Congress for more price-fixing legislation—unless in the meantime he has learned the falsity and stupidity of the theory that prompted him to make his first appeal. Can he not see that when prices have adjusted themselves to new levels, in order to get relief by the devices embraced in this bill, he will have to come back and back again in endless repetition, each adventure ending in the same inexorable, futile, hopeless result?

No; this is no way to help the farmer. Even the attempt of President Coolidge, in availing himself of the flexible tariff feature of the Fordney-McCumber tariff, by raising the tariff on wheat, has proved to be a lamentable failure. Last year we exported 20 per cent of our wheat. What occasion have we for a tariff at all so long as we produce one-fifth more wheat than we need for domestic consumption? I can easily understand a proposal that would attempt to regulate production, but to let producers go as far as they like with production upon the understanding that the Government would buy their surplus is the rankest socialistic program ever presented to the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the distinguished son of Minnesota [Mr. LARSON].

Mr. LARSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, last Tuesday my colleague, Mr. SCHALL, of Minnesota, in discussing the McNary-Haugen bill, made a statement in which he attributed nepotism and graft to Mr. Julius H. Barnes while acting as the head of the Food Administration Grain Corporation. I was not present when Mr. SCHALL made that statement. Had I been present, I would have called him to account then and there. When I read it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I was shocked at such flagrant and reckless abuse of congressional privilege and immunity. I could not imagine what motives prompted my colleague to utter such a false and slanderous charge against Mr. Barnes.

I have just received from Mr. Barnes the following telegram, which I shall read into the RECORD. It is a complete refutation and answer to the charge:

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 23, 1924.

Hon. O. J. LARSON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 20, quotes Representative SCHALL, of Minnesota, stating, "After all expenses were paid—and they were enormous, the chairman, Julius Barnes, putting his son in at a salary of $30,000 a year—there was still left over $70,000,000. This money came directly out of the pockets of the farmers." In the interest of common fairness and decency will you please have the RECORD correct the manifest abuse of this congressional immunity, where the most casual inquiry would have ascertained that my only son was then 14 and at school. The similarly loose and inaccurate statements regarding the operations of the Grain Corporation as a war agency can be dismissed with the statement that every wheat grower for three years received the full pledged price of the Government guaranty; that the Grain Corporation, handling billions of dollars of commodities, including many others than wheat, aimed to make no profit, yet to avoid losing money contributed by taxpayers through the Treasury, and succeeded in closing these enormous operations with a profit of approximately 1 per cent on the turnover and a sum barely more than interest on national funds employed.

JULIUS H. BARNES.

My sense of justice is so outraged that if I were to express my condemnation of such unwarrantable and reckless abuse of congressional immunity I am fearful I would violate the amenities of parliamentary usage. I shall try to restrain myself.

A man's reputation is dearer far than life itself, yet who is there that is safe from congressional calumny? The more conspicuous he is as a public man the more apt is he to become the unfortunate target for our poisoned shafts of false and malicious accusation. The greater the man the more inviting the target. What matters it that there is no foundation in fact for the accusation? Will it not bring the accuser as well as the accused into the limelight of publicity? The charge of corruption must be made now. It must be gotten at once into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and into the public press. An investigation as to its truth or falsity may be had later, if at all.

Am I overstating the case? Is not the calumniation of public men almost a matter of common occurrence in the Congress of the United States? It has gotten to be so common that the American public is beginning to look upon it as a part of the regular procedure of Congress. Is it any wonder, I ask, that the American people are losing confidence in and even respect for their National Legislature? Who is to blame? It is true that only a few Members are guilty of the practice of making false and slanderous accusations, but those who refrain from so doing must share the shame and the public's condemnation.

The charge of nepotism and graft is absolutely without any basis. There was no possible excuse for making it. A little investigation would have convinced my colleague that the charge is utterly and palpably false. Mr. Barnes has but one son. At the time he was in charge of the Grain Corporation his son was only 14 years old and was attending school. It did not require the services of a trained investigator to find out those facts. A brief letter to Mr. Barnes would have brought to my colleague the facts. But, no, the charge must be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the world to read. Of course, the great damage has been done; it is irretrievable. The least my colleague should do is to expunge his false statements from the permanent RECORD.

Is it any wonder that capable business men are so reluctant to enter public office? They do not want to become the objects of public calumny. They do not wish to be crucified on the cross of slander.

It seems that no matter how upright and honest a person may be, he is not safe from congressional calumny. Where is there a more unselfish or a more honest business man than Mr. Barnes? I measure my words when I say there is not a better man living than the object of my colleague's calumny. He is America's ideal business man. The American business men know him. For the third time he was recently elected to the presidency of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which has a membership of 750,000 business men. They recognize the high qualities of his leadership.

The charge relates to Mr. Barnes's connection with the United States Grain Corporation. What are the facts? During the war wheat went soaring sky high. The Government organized the Grain Corporation to stabilize the price of wheat and flour and to prevent profiteering.

The country needed a man big enough to undertake the work of wheat control. That meant finding a man, as Secretary Hoover has said, "fit to organize the the most stupendous operation the world had ever seen." That man was Julius H. Barnes, the genius of American business.

He answered his country's call. He abandoned his lucrative business. He gave his services free to his country both during and after the war. He saved the American people from the greed and avarice of the wheat and flour profiteers and gamblers. Not one dollar did the the Government lose—so honestly and efficiently and ably did Mr. Barnes carry on the operations of the Government's wheat-control agency. Every dollar was returned with interest into the Public Treasury. What a record of public service!

When he announced his proposed retirement, a testimonial dinner by business men from all over the country was given in his honor "in recognition of the extraordinary service which he rendered to the country during the late war and since the armistice," as United States wheat director. About a thousand men were present. One hundred of them traveled from his home city of Duluth to New York to pay him their tribute of esteem.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, such a man has been falsely charged by a Member of this body with wrongful conduct while at the head of the public agency which he administered with such signal ability and integrity.

How long are the American people to endure such injustice?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now yield four minutes to that great flyer and World War veteran of New York City [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, each speaker as he has taken the floor on behalf of this bill has made it a point to describe the farming characteristics of his district. It is therefore proper for me to say in the beginning that I come from a district in a city where there is complete diversification of—appetites—and constant shortage of food, caused by the prohibitively high retail prices of the necessities of life.

This bill presents many interesting features. First, perhaps the timidity with which it is presented by its sponsors, and then the constant and repeated explanation, or I might say apology, that is not paternalistic. Gentlemen, the very fact that this bill is before us for consideration is in itself of great and transcending importance. There is no one on the floor of this House either for or against this bill but knows that the farmers of this country are in a sad plight, and that they are not getting enough for their products. Yet, on the other hand, the farmer knows that the prices which the consumer must pay for food are far greater and out of all proportions to that which the farmer receives. Something is wrong. This is admitted by the fact that this bill was drawn, reported from committee, and is now before us. Gentlemen, I am a progressive in every sense of the word. Some of my friends sometimes refer to me as a "radical." If by that they mean that I am seeking radical changes in the very conditions which brought about the disparity between the exorbitant retail prices of food and the starvation prices paid to the farmer, I am not at all shocked by being called a radical; at least, I am not afraid to urge needed reform. Something is radically wrong when a condition exists that permits the manipulation of prices, the creation of monopolies on food to the extent of driving the farmer off his farm by foreclosures and having thousands of underfed and ill-nourished children in the public schools of our cities. The fault is not with the farmer, the fault is not with the consumer; the fault is that we have a vicious, unfair, unbalanced economic system that has been permitted to exist. The very interests who are responsible for that condition—the packers, the bankers, the warehouses, the middlemen—have been able in the past to secure special legislation to protect their interests and have been able in the past to control legislatures, so that this condition has so grown and has become so inequitable as to put the farmer at their mercy. At this late hour Congress is asked to give the farmer relief without disturbing the real cause of his evils. But this bill will not give the farmer relief. I have the highest regard for the sponsors of this bill, who sincerely believe that it will bring permanent relief to the farmer.

I respect their opinion; but to those who advocate the passage of this bill with their tongue in their cheek, I say that I refuse to cast my vote to impose a "bread tax" on the American people for the sole purpose of creating a campaign issue or providing a political alibi to any person or group of persons. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not. I only have a few minutes.

The time is inevitably approaching when we must have an economic readjustment. That simply means that the toiler and producer shall receive a fair proportion of what they produce. The trouble is that under the present system the first concern is to insure the return on capital. We therefore find that the toilless, unproductive end of industry receives the greatest consideration and take out of the income or fruits of industry an undue and disproportionate share to that which it contributes. Why, gentlemen, one of the principal causes of the present condition of the farmer is the high cost of transportation. And why? Because it is necessary to base rates not upon the actual cost of transportation but in addition to that, in addition to the cost of the labor and the real cost of transporting material, we must add a "fair return upon capital invested." If it were but a fair return on the capital really invested, perhaps this economic readjustment that I am talking about would be delayed for a few years, but it is not only a return upon the so-called capital invested, but it is a return upon financial manipulations of the worst kind, upon water in the stock, upon bad investments in connection with railroads, bad investments not the cause of mistaken judgment but the cause of deliberate, vicious maladministration for selfish gain and profits. So that the valuations of our railroads uniformly throughout this country are so pyramided, are so inflated, that to the cost of moving food from our farms to our cities, from the producers to the consumers, is added an unjust toll as the result of a system which has been protected instead of destroyed. Then there is the credit system. The farmer must borrow, and under the present system the price for money is greater than the margin of profit allowed to him who tills the soil to raise food so that the world may live. The loaning of money requires no effort but gets the biggest return. Our warehouse and grain elevators, our system of marketing, the middlemen, fixing of prices, are all conducive to bringing large profits to those who toil the least at the expense and cost of those who produce and create. The smaller the contribution toward production the greater the return. Let us look at these economic problems intelligently and courageously. If you are ready to adjust returns to the farmer, let us do it. This bill will not do it. As I see it, this relief will not benefit the farmer in the long run, but after adding a burden by way of increased prices of food to the consumers, you will see that it will be so construed and so managed as to increase the profits to the wholesaler, to the jobber, to the middlemen, make certain high interest to the banks, increase the cost of farming machinery and implements, all at the expense of the farmer and the consumer.

What good will it be to increase the prices to the farmer if you are not going to protect him against monopolized commodities that he is compelled to buy? What good will it be to him if while we increase the price for his products the gas trusts, the farm-machine trusts, the leather trusts, and everything that he requires will simply add to their prices and take away the increased cost quicker than he can get it? Do you not see that you are only going half way?

Gentlemen, you can not solve a serious economic condition by a political expedient. In my humble judgment this bill is simply a political expedient in order to go back to the exploited farmers and say to them, "Yes, we have passed the McNary-Haugen bill; it will bring you relief; everything will be all right," or, in the event that the bill is defeated, to say, "We had the relief; we had a good bill; we had the remedy, but it was defeated in the House. Give us another chance and we will pass it the next time." And continue on in the same old way. I do not hesitate to say that the tenement dwellers of my city would not complain one bit to an increased cost of living brought about by any measure that we may pass in this Congress if I could look them square in the eyes and guarantee to them that by so doing we have brought actual permanent relief to the farmers of this country. But I would never be able to explain to them how I am bringing relief to the farmer by adding increased profits to the packers, to the railroads, to the gas trust, to the farm-machine trust, and to money lenders.

Gentlemen, you all know that the great percentage of livestock must be sold to the five big packing concerns. What is the corporation created in this bill going to do if after having fixed the price of hogs and cattle the packers simply say they are not in the market that day? We would have to hold the cattle back, feed them—although no arrangements have been made for it in this bill—or take the price that the packers would offer and stand the loss. Do you suppose the packers are going to give the benefit of a low price which they may be able to force to the consumers? Not at all. When the day comes that the packers of this country will give the consumers the benefit of low prices which they may obtain that day I am sure we will hear the sound of Gabriels's trumpet announcing the day of judgment.

If we are to give relief to the farmer let us perform the major operation necessary to relieve the ill and let us bring in a comprehensive bill which will regulate transportation, marketing, the value of money, and thereby bring relief not only to the farmers but to all who toil, who produce, and who create.

The distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] spoke earnestly on behalf of this measure. He stated that all he has is invested in land. He referred to his colleague from California [Mr. RAKER], who replied that all he has is invested in cattle, and I will say to my colleagues that the people of my district, owing to the high prices of food, have nothing to invest in anything. The gentleman from Kansas, a great authority on the agricultural situation of the country perhaps at a loss for better support, cited Mr. Otto Kahn, a well-known international banker, in support of this measure. Since when has Wall Street become an authority and an inspiration to those of us who seek to relieve the farmer? If we are to seek guidance and management from international bankers of Wall Street, I say, God help the American farmers. [Applause.]

Only yesterday the gentleman from Oklahoma referred to protests against this bill from various banking institutions of my city. Apparently the financial magnates are divided, but I venture the statement that any group of bankers in New York, if they will have the opportunity to manage this corporation, would be heartily in favor of it. Therefore, when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] said that a prominent banker had offered to take the management of this corporation. I say that perhaps if we offer the management of this corporation to those banking institutions that are vigorously opposed to this bill we might also obtain their indorsement. Why, gentlemen, it is not financial advice that we need. We have had too much of that kind of advice. What we need is drastic changes in our law to meet changed economic conditions brought about by invention, science, machinery, and the growth of population. When you talk about the law of supply and demand you must bear in mind that principle was laid down at a time when food and the necessities of life were produced by hand, before we had machinery, before we had cold storage or warehouses, before there had developed the idea of monopolies, and the artificial fixing of prices.

How can the law of supply and demand be applied when you have gigantic warehouses to store food and the power of an individual or group of individuals to release it a little at a time? How can the law of supply and demand be applied when we have cold storage where meat can be kept for months and years and the power in an individual or group of individuals to hold back that food, although there may be a great demand and cry for it in other parts of the country? The truth is that legislation has not kept abreast with the times. As the warehouses were constructed and cold storage invented, as cities of millions of population have grown, as machinery has been invented to turn out articles under the production system by the millions you have continued to legislate as if there had been no changes and no progress in the world. You have protected the dollar and disregarded the producers. You have protected property and forgotten the human being, with the result that we have legalized a cruel system of exploitation. Now we are approaching the time when a real change is necessary. Gentlemen, the very fact that a bill of this kind is before us for consideration is in itself significant. It means that finally we have the admission and the confession from those who would seek to stand pat and retard progress, those who are the first to criticize and abuse us who believe in progress, that conditions can not long remain the same, and that a real, drastic, radical change is coming and is absolutely necessary.

I want to point out that the distinguished chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], who has the respect and admiration of the entire membership of this House and whose name is given to this measure, came before us and pleaded for its passage. Yet I am sure that if we were to urge on the gentleman from Iowa to take both horns of the dilemma and to go into the question thoroughly, and by that I mean the transportation, marketing, and credit, he would be the first to call us radicals and perhaps oppose any such measure. Oh, the gentleman from Iowa perhaps has not yet felt the unbalanced economic condition. He stated to us the other day that the farmers in his State were in need of instant relief. Why, gentlemen, according to a full page advertisement that I hold in my hand from the New York Times of Wednesday, April 23, 1924, inserted by the Iowa Daily Press Association, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and signed by every leading daily paper of that State, there is no State richer, more prosperous, more happy than the great State of Iowa. [Applause.] I rejoice in their wealth, I rejoice in their happiness, and I hope the prosperity so graphically described by the Daily Press Association of Iowa may not only continue, but may grow even greater to the happiness of all the people of the State of Iowa. [Laughter.] Let me read the full page advertisement; it will not take long:

IOWA—THAT'S WHERE THE TALL CORN GROWS

IOWA

That's where the wealth per person is greater than in New York or in any other State.

That's where there are two bank accounts for every five men, women, and children.

That's where the percentage of illiteracy is smaller than in New York or in any other State.

That's where they are spending an annual income of between one and one-half and two billion dollars.

That's where 97 per cent of all the families read some one of Iowa's 32 leading daily newspapers. Dealers, jobbers, and salesmen read them also.

That's where any Iowa family, from farm or city, can reach their favorite store more quickly and easier than the average New Yorker can get to Macy's. There is an automobile for each average family.

That's where there are more than 4,000 miles of roads paved or graveled or in process of being paved or graveled.

That's where, during the past five years there has been expended more than $47,000,000 on primary road improvement.

That's where these 32 leading daily newspapers of Iowa have joined in a practical, complete, comprehensive, and uniform advertising and marketing service that covers every move you want to make in the rich Iowa market:

Ames Tribune, Boone News-Republican, Burlington Gazette, Burlington Hawk-Eye, Cedar Rapids Gazette, Cedar Rapids Republican, Centerville Iowegian and Citizen, Clinton Advertiser, Clinton Herald, Council Bluffs Nonpareil, Creston Advertiser, Davenport Democrat, Davenport Times, Des Moines Capital, Des Moines Register and Tribune, Dubuque Telegraph-Herald, Dubuque Times-Journal, Fort Dodge Messenger and Chronicle, Fort Madison Democrat, Iowa City Press Citizen, Keokuk Gate City, Marshalltown Times-Republican, Mason City Globe-Gazette, Muscatine Journal, Newton News, Oskaloosa Herald, Ottumwa Courier, Sioux City Journal, Sioux City Tribune, Washington Journal, Waterloo Evening Courier, and Waterloo Tribune—The Iowa Daily Press Association, Council Bluffs, Iowa. [Applause.]

I wonder how many of these daily papers are now urging the passage of this bill.

Reference has been made by others to the arrangements for the financing of this corporation. Reference has already been made to the power granted to the corporation to create indebtedness to an amount five times its capitalization, which would mean indebtedness to the extent of a billion dollars. While the law specifically provides that the United States Government is not responsible for the corporation indebtedness and that such limitation should be inserted on the face of the certificate of indebtedness, I do not believe anyone is fooled by that. I do not believe there is a man in this House but knows that the American Congress and the American Government would not permit a single purchaser to lose a cent on any loan made to an agency created by Congress and representing the United States Government. That phase of it, however, has been taken up in detail by other speakers and I need not amplify on it.

In closing I simply desire to submit that when you are ready, gentlemen, to do the right thing to all of the people of this country you will find the progressive group ready to cooperate. I am not speaking for the progressive group at this time, but as one progressive. I speak what I believe are the sentiments of the progressive-thinking people in my part of the country. Let the farmers of the West know that the consumers of the East will not complain at any time that any legislation is passed for real relief of the farmer, but that the consumers of the East have learned by long years of exploitation, owing to high prices on monopolized food, that before we pass legislation we should study it carefully and make certain that it is for the relief of the farmer and not of those who are responsible for the conditions now existing. Why, charts were brought before the House to show the difference between the wages paid in my city and what the farmer is getting.

For the purpose of argument, we will accept the accuracy of these charts, but a careful study of these very charts brought here in support of this measure will convince any impartial person that this bill is not economically sound in that it does not remove the real evil. It simply takes one phase of the now unbalanced economic system and seeks to bring artificial relief by an artificially created agency. The wages of employees in New York factories referred to by the gentleman from Kansas and others who have used the chart are high. Why? Not because their employers are philanthropists, but these wages are fixed on the lowest possible cost of living in that city. The chart tells the tale. The difference in what the farmer is getting and what the consumers are paying, as shown by the rate of wages, is what is being lost to the farmer under the present arrangement of transportation, marketing, banking, and retailing. If we should pass this measure by artificially fixing the prices only of the commodities provided for in this bill, permtting the present high rate of transportation and the present cost of money and the present system of marketing, the result will be that your line showing the rate of wages paid to factory hands in New York will not come down to meet the rates paid to the farmer, but that exactly the same distance between the two will remain. As your line for the farmer will go up, so will your line for the employees in the city go up, with the result that your purchasing power of the dollar will decrease and you are exactly at the same point from which you started. Unless we change the system, unless we improve conditions by a scientific change in the method of marketing, by regulation of transportation rates fixed on actual cost, by disregarding the past and fixing the price for the use of money in proportion to its contribution as compared with labor and actual production, by preventing private monopolies, we are simply going around in a circle in the same old way and the rich will become richer and the poor will become poorer.

If I thought this bill would bring relief, I would vote for it, but I fail to see how any good can come from it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes and seventy-five hundredths of a minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL]. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the acting chairman of the committee for his gracious yielding of time to me on this question.

The wheat farmer to-day is admittedly in a serious difficulty, just as the cotton producer a few years ago was equally admitted to be in a serious difficulty, and just as the cattle or hog raiser may at any time be in a serious difficulty. I do not represent a farming community, but my district fundamentally depends upon the farmers just as every other great city district does. I am solicitous and anxious that the Federal Government do whatever can properly be done to stabilize the agricultural conditions. I can not, however, favor such an alleged remedy as that offered in H. R. 9033, known in the House of Representatives as the Haugen bill, and in the Senate as the McNary bill.

Holding the conception of the functions of the Federal Government that I do, interpreting the powers of the Federal Constitution even under the general welfare clause as I do, I can not do else than oppose as strongly as I can the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill.

I am not an expert in agriculture. I am not an expert in farm economics. On these matters I need only recall to your attention the speech and the arguments of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] made before this House Tuesday night. His views are fully set forth in the minority report from the Committee on Agriculture, and I think that his report, together with his speech, knocks the props from under the McNary-Haugen bill.

I desire to call, however, special attention to that portion of his report which shows that the passage of this bill would mean immediately a gift to nonproducers of $500,000,000. I think that this portion of his report is so important that I will take part of my time to read it to this Committee of the Whole House.

A COLOSSAL GIFT TO NONPRODUCERS

When this bill takes effect as to wheat the price of dollar wheat will instantly rise to over $1.50. The elevator man, merchants, millers, and speculators who have wheat on hand will suddenly be made richer by operation of law. If the emergency is declared, as it probably will be before the wheat season, nearly all the wheat available for market will be in the hands of these men and not in the hands of the farmers. The same applies to rice and corn, the profit, of course, being smaller. It may be that on some of this an equalization fee can be collected, but if sold for feed or seed there is no fee. If the fee on $1.50 wheat is 20 cents per bushel, the law has increased the value to the holders 30 cents per bushel, which must be paid for by the farmers and consumers. Every merchant or wholesaler who has flour on hand will find himself enriched overnight, and under the terms of the bill no equalization fee can be collected. If an emergency is declared on cattle, hogs, and sheep, every head will instantly rise in value, whether in the hands of farmers or others. The hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of pork, beef, and mutton in the hands of the Big Five and about 200 smaller packers would instantly rise in value. On this item alone there would be a sheer gift to the meat packers of this country of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000, to be paid for by the consumers of the country. The packers would have to pay an equalization fee providing an emergency were declared on their products, but that would only be a fraction of their gain.

All meat stocks in the hands of meat dealers who had bought them from packers would likewise rise, and from them no equalization fee could be collected. The millers of the country holding wheat or flour would make millions overnight, to be paid for by the consumers. If an emergency should ever be declared on wool, every clothing manufacturer, clothing dealer, etc., would be enriched, and no fee could be collected from them. When the packer legislation and grain futures act were before the committee there were swarms of packers and millers and high-priced attorneys making all manner of objections. These gentlemen did not put in an appearance when this bill was being considered, and no doubt they are praying for its passage. The total gift to nonproducers would easily amount to $500,000,000. There has been no such gift "since salvation was made free to the human race."

I desire to devote my time especially to the fundamental improprieties of this measure. It is proposed to create a Federal corporation with a capital stock of $200,000,000, all of which amount is to be subscribed and paid by the United States; paid by taxes of the cotton raisers, the tobacco raisers, the hog raisers, the rye raisers, the barley raisers, the poultry raisers, the cattle raisers, and all others for the immediate benefit of the wheat raisers and those specially favored classes who are mentioned in the bill. The corporation is further empowered to borrow money and to issue its notes, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness to an extent of $1,000,000,000. In other words, it is proposed to create a Federal corporation with power to issue bonds up to one twenty-first of the whole public interest-bearing debt, which, the Commissioner of the Public Debt in the Treasury Department informs me, was on April 30, $21,353,000,000.

You are asked to create a $1,000,000,000 corporation, a governmental authority, with power to issue an amount equal to about 5 per cent of all debts accumulated by this Nation since its foundation over 137 years ago. You are asked to permit this for wheat and the other agricultural products enumerated in the bill. If you do this for these products, why should you not do it for cotton and for the other products of a similar sort? A cotton corporation and nine others with equal power could issue as much bonds as one-half the national debt.

The bill attempts to provide that the United States shall assume no liability for bonds issued by this corporation, but how can the great Federal Government decently permit its own creature, the proposed "The United States Agricultural Export Corporation," to sell bonds to the American people which they naturally suppose have behind them the responsibility of the owner of the corporation, and then, in case of difficulty, deny such responsibility?

The bill is fundamentally wrong. The Constitution of the United States was not adopted to give the Federal Government any such power. This particular measure is merely one of the nostrums which are being offered to-day for current difficulties. The bill provides that the emergency for which the bill is proposed as a remedy shall in no event be held to exist later than five years from the June 30 next following the date of the passage of this act. Fundamentally, this bill proceeds on the theory of the existence of an emergency arising out of unsettled conditions following the war. If this sort of a bill is proper for five years, why is it not proper in perpetuity? It is fundamentally wrong. It commits the Government to active business in contraversion of the fundamental theory of the Constitution, and, furthermore, it would never accomplish the purpose for which its proponents have offered it.

I therefore shall vote against this bill and all such attempts to create governmental corporations in time of peace to handle matters which are in themselves essentially matters for private enterprises and not for governmental agencies. [Applause.]

Would any gentleman like to ask me a question on this subject?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. It has been stated, and the bill so states, that the Government is not behind this $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds that this corporation may issue. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Would not that be considered in the Congress, both in the House and the Senate, as a moral obligation on the part of the Government, and would not the Government, after all, be behind this $1,000,000,000 worth of debts which this corporation is authorized to create?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I would like to say to the gentleman that he has put his finger on one of the most vital defects of this bill, a defect I just referred to briefly. Here is a corporation with its capital solely subscribed by the Federal Government operating as a United States corporation, with authority to issue $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds, and there is a clause in the bill providing that the Government shall not be responsible for any of the obligations of its offspring. I ask you whether there is any man in this House of Representatives who would not vote—if a question came up as to the payment of the bonds purchased by innocent purchasers, bonds issued by a corporation created by the Federal Government and operating as a Government agency—to make good to the innocent purchaser of one of its bursted bonds, if they did burst.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Is not that same thing true as to the joint-stock land banks and intermediate credit banks?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Not to the same extent, however. I voted against all of them. I am against that theory of Government regulation.

Mr. COLTON. And yet the gentleman will not say they are not doing good work?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. But the life of a bank is a long life. Now, here you are asked to do this thing. The whole funded interest-bearing debt of the United States is $21,353,000,000 at this time, and you are asked to create an organization which has the power to issue in bonds one twenty-first of the indebtedness that it took the United States 137 years to create. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KETCHAM. Under the general permission to extend remarks, do I understand that the gentleman from Maryland intends to extend his own remarks?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I will say to the gentleman that these are entirely my own remarks. I did not take up the question of 2.75 cider for the farmer, although I know he wants it. If I thought this bill would pass, I should insist on including cider in it. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present—a quorum.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, no one will deny that there is distress in certain farming sections of the country. The price of wheat, corn, hogs, and cattle is so low that the armer's dollar to-day is only worth about 72 cents. Foreclosures, bank failures in farming sections, abandonment of farms, furnish evidence of a critical situation in American agriculture. The Nation as a whole can not prosper if any large portion of its people are in distress. The farmer can not buy what the city folks produce unless he has the purchasing power. This purchasing power he lacks at the present time.

The agricultural distress prevails principally in the Northwestern States raising spring wheat, and, to a less extent, in the Middle Western States raising winter wheat. The distressed area also includes the Western States, depending primarily on the raising of corn, hogs, and cattle. Without minimizing in the slightest degree this agricultural calamity, in all fairness it should be said that the distress is not spread equally over the whole country nor among all crops.

It is to meet this emergency, such as it is and wherever it is, that the McNary-Haugen agricultural relief bill is now before Congress. The authors and proponents of this bill seek to invoke Federal aid as a means of raising and maintaining the prices of agricultural products which are now too low. These products, as specifically mentioned in the bill, are wheat, flour, corn, cattle, sheep, swine, wool, rice, and the food products of cattle, sheep, and swine.

The bill provides that an export corporation shall be organized with a capital of $200,000,000, the stock of which is bought by the Federal Government and paid for out of the Public Treasury. It is to be a private corporation, but organized with Government money and controlled and supervised by the Government. The semigovernmental corporation would also have the power to issue and sell to the public a billion dollars' worth of stock in order to get additional capital for effectively carrying on its work if conditions required it.

The whole idea back of the bill is simply this: That the prices of agricultural products are low because we have an exportable surplus; that is to say, we have an overproduction of wheat, flour, corn, cattle, sheep, swine, and the food products of cattle, sheep, and swine. "Therefore," the proponents of the bill say, "since it is this exportable surplus which is the cause of the low prices, we will get rid of the surplus by dumping it on the other side of the water." Through this export corporation the surplus would be disposed of in foreign markets at whatever price it would bring. But in so doing the domestic prices of these commodities would naturally rise. In fact, the very purpose of the bill is to establish arbitrary prices on these commodities at home, these arbitrary prices being such as would bring the prices of agricultural products up to a level with the prices of other nonagricultural commodities. Elaborate machinery is provided for by which the corporation created in the bill will ascertain and fix the prices of the various agricultural commodities whenever the emergency exists, such emergency being defined as a condition under which the farm-product price is low as compared with the average ratio price of 404 commodities.

Laying all technicalities aside, it is a price-fixing bill pure and simple. The Government is called upon to fix and maintain and to pay the farmers prices which are considered fair by the directors of this corporation.

Should the bill pass? Can the bill work? And if it can work, what will be its effect?

There is much to be said about the unworkability of the bill. It would require a bureaucracy of literally thousands upon thousands of Government agents and agencies to carry out the purposes of this bill. Take one commodity by way of illustration. It seems like a very simple thing to fix the price of wheat. But when you remember that there are some 20 different grades of wheat on the Chicago market and some 36 varieties of grades alone on the Minneapolis market, and that frequently the grade No. 2 sells on the market at a higher price than No. 1, it will be seen that the proposition is not so simple as it is made to appear by the advocates of this bill. Even assuming that there is an emergency on swine, how are you going to determine the fair price on all the derivative products of swine? There are literally hundreds of by-products of swine and cattle. It is not all as simple as it seems.

Or, look at the problem from another angle as to its unworkability. The prices of the commodities are shifting every month. Will the corporation shift the prices of farm products each month? And after the prices have been shifted and the cost of living goes up, then in turn will it not be necessary to again readjust the price of farm products to bring them in line with the ratio price of all the other commodities, which it is the purpose of the bill to effectuate and maintain?

Assuming, however, that the bill becomes a law, and does work, what would be its effect?

Immediately, of course, any farmer or packer who has on hand products the prices of which are raised would derive a benefit from the price-raising and price-fixing process. Undoubtedly this would immediately enrich the packers, since they always hold on hand a vast amount of meat products.

In the general debate here it has been contended that the effect of this bill would be to make a gift to the packers outright of over $100,000,000.

If the bill worked, winter wheat, which is now selling for $1.10 a bushel, would be brought up to $1.50 a bushel; spring wheat, selling for $1.25, would be brought up to $1.60 a bushel; corn, selling for 73 cents a bushel on December 1, would be brought up to about 96 cents a bushel; hogs, selling for $7.25 per hundred, would be brought up to $11.25 per hundred; cattle would go up about 10 per cent in price; beef would go up about 2½ cents a pound (1 cent a pound increase on livestock); and rice would be increased about 13 per cent.

I have estimated that the result of all this would be an increased cost to the nonagricultural public of about $750,000,000 a year, or about $35 per family per annum.

We must not forget that two of the leading farm products in this country are milk and butter, the total annual value of which is about $2,000,000,000. If you raise the price of cattle and corn, you raise the price of milk and butter. The dairy industry is facing a crisis. They have already reached a point where they can not market what they have to sell at the present prices. They can not increase the price of butter and milk without curtailing the consumption. Therefore, the dairymen stand a good chance to pay a higher price for food for cattle and get no more for milk.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not true now that there is a surplus of milk and the price has fallen off about 35 per cent?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think that is true.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes; if you will yield me such time as you take up.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will yield the gentleman such time as I consume. Is it not a fact that the representatives of the dairy people have been doing everything possible to have the tariff adjusted so as to save the dairy industry, and to-day is not the price of butter 9 cents below the ratio price, and are you willing to deny them that 9 cents a pound? This bill will give them 9 cents a pound more. Now, then, tell your people what you are doing for them.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I want to be perfectly frank with you, just as I will be with my constituents at home.

Mr. SNYDER. Do not overlook the fact that the chairman says it will raise the price of butter 9 cents a pound.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I will also have to tell my industrial population back home that they will have to pay that 9 cents.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are willing to pay it.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I think they are. I think that the American people are good sports, and they would be willing to give the farmers that bonus.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is not a bonus. It is something that Congress does for the manufacturer and the rest of them.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I mean that if the American people saw a permanent solution of the agricultural problem in this bill they would be willing to pay a little more on a loaf of bread, to pay a little more for a pound of bacon, and to pay a little more for milk and butter, but they can not see it. That is the point. I think the American people want to be fair and they want to see the country's wealth fairly distributed among the population of this country.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. ASWELL. Does the gentleman recall that the producer of that butter does not receive the 9 cents? It goes to the equalization fee and the cost of production.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. As I understand it, some one in the Department of Agriculture has figured that 15 cents out of the dollar will go to the cost of operating the machinery and to pay the losses through the operation of the machinery. At any rate, my proposition is that if it works it is going to seriously affect the dairy industry and the poultry industry in this country, and you must not forget that they are two very large industries in the United States.

Mr. BURTNESS. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to have his reaction on this proposition. In the event these other types of farming, such as raising cattle and corn, are not made profitable will not that in itself react upon dairying and other farming by forcing the people now engaged in raising wheat and stock and pork into dairying and poultry raising and things of that sort, and therefore do you not need protection against that diversification?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I wish I had time to discuss that. I have only a few minutes remaining, and that is a big problem. I would like to say to the gentleman from North Dakota that you can not escape the dilemma. Either it will raise the price of raw materials or it will not. Now, you admit it will raise the price of wheat and maybe of corn, and I contend that everybody who uses corn and wheat will have to pay the price. We who are going to use it, either directly as bread, or as eggs or as milk or as poultry, will have to pay that price, and I have figured out it is going to cost the average family in the United States $35 per head.

What I have said of milk and butter applies equally to poultry and eggs, the annual product of which is larger than that of wheat, approximating, as it does, $1,000,000 annually. If wheat and corn go up in price the poultry men would have to foot the bill. They can not pass the increase along to the consumer, because even as it is there is an oversupply of poultry and eggs. The egg market has broken. Prices are low. Eggs are selling in Washington at 30 cents a dozen. The poultry people can not afford to go on at that price. If you raise the price of the feed that the poultry and the cattle need, how are you going to sell more milk and more poultry and more eggs? It can not be done. So, even if the bill does work, it is bound to affect disadvantageously the dairy and the poultry businesses.

Therefore it would appear that the effect of the McNary-Haugen bill would be to injure, if not to ruin, the dairymen and the poultry and egg farmers. I have been told by a friend of mine that only recently some of the best dairy herds in Western New York have been dispersed because of the unprofitableness of maintaining them.

But if, as the proponents of the bill claim, the increased cost could be passed along to the consumer, then, as I said before, it is of no avail to the farmer, because it is only a vicious circle. The wheat farmer might get more for his wheat to-day than he did yesterday, but he and others would have to pay more for everything they buy, which in turn would send the price of wheat up again. This has been very well said by Mr. B. W. Snow, formerly chief statistician of the Department of Agriculture, who describes the probable results of the McNary-Haugen bill as follows:

> If living costs are artificially advanced, it will be necessary to put wages up. Then it will cost more to produce everything, and prices of everything will be higher. And so we will start around again in the old circle—higher cost of living, then higher wages, then higher prices for everything and higher wages to pay the higher prices for everything and still higher prices to pay the higher wages, until finally we come once more to the inevitable smash.

As the cost of living went up wages would rise, and among other things freight rates would rise, penalizing the farmer again, and of course everything the farmer buys or that he uses on his farm would be advanced in price as a result of this pyramiding process, so that the purchasing power of his wheat, though increased to $1.50 in terms of money, would to-morrow in reality shrink again to $1.10 in terms of commodities. It is a merry chase, with the farmer lagging behind.

What is the cause of the trouble? The authors and proponents of the bill recognize that the cause of the trouble is the surplus. The surplus is due, of course, to overproduction. The war overstimulated production. The average wheat acreage in the United States from 1909 to 1913 was 47,097,000, whereas in 1919 it rose to 75,694,000. From 1920 to 1923 there was a considerable shrinkage until in 1923 it reached 58,293,000, which is still 20 per cent above the normal acreage. But overproduction was even greater in foreign wheat-producing countries. Canada, which used to average 10,000,000 acres before the war, now has 22,000,000 acres under cultivation. We have a world overproduction in wheat, and notwithstanding our tariff, the price of wheat at home is fixed by the price of wheat in Liverpool, which must be so while we are on an exporting basis.

Where is that surplus wheat coming from? I will ask the gentleman from North Dakota if some of it is not coming from the wheat land there? I know a little about North Dakota, although I have not lived there all my life. I know that some of it is grown on land that produces only 5 bushels an acre, or 6 or 7 or possibly 8 bushels an acre. Is not that true, Mr. BURTNESS?

Mr. BURTNESS. That is true only in the event that we have rust or bad weather conditions; otherwise, it is not true.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The same thing is true of cattle and swine. We have more than the world can buy at prices that are profitable to the producer of meat and corn.

The remedy would seem to be not in getting rid of the surplus but in cutting down the production, so as to eliminate the surplus. The fallacy in the bill, therefore, is that it fails to take cognizance of the fact that as you increase your price you stimulate production and encounter a still larger surplus. The McNary-Haugen bill does not attack the trouble at its source. It seeks to alleviate the pain but does not eradicate the cause of the disease. There might be some sense in Government price fixing which at the same time attempted to effectively control production, which this bill does not propose to do.

The experience of agricultural cooperatives proves that artificially stimulating prices without effective control of production leads sooner or later to a crash. The experience of the raisin growers of California illustrates this. The raisin growers of California raised a crop in 1922 so heavy that the market broke, and the organization had to deflate and reorganize. The average production of raisins from 1914 to 1919 was somewhere in the neighborhood of 130,000 tons. Stimulated by the high prices which the cooperative had fixed, production had increased 225,000 tons. The crop of 1922 was so large that the raisin growers' association spent $1,500,000 on an advertising campaign in order to get rid of their surplus crop. Then the crash came in 1922 and 1923.

The experience of the California Prune Growers' Association is a repetition of the experience of the raisin growers. High prices led to heavy production. Then the smash came.

There is every reason to believe that the artificial stimulation of prices under the McNary-Haugen bill would in a similar manner stimulate overproduction. If the overproduction results in too large a surplus, the surplus has to sell at a great sacrifice abroad. It is easily conceivable that the loss on the exportable surplus would wipe out any gain that might come from the enhanced price on the domestic market.

In contrast with this method of solving the problem I would call your attention to the experience of the soft-coal industry. They, too, have been suffering from an overproduction. The mine owners as well as the workers agreed that the only solution lay in the closing up of a number of the unprofitable mines. Might not the wheat producers do the same thing?

After the war the copper industry suffered from overproduction. Prices fell to a no-profit basis. The owners found it necessary to curtail production, even to the extent of closing down some of the mines. In this instance, however, the producers were able to buy up the surplus and store it, in order to maintain the price. But in copper, as in coal, the remedy lay in cutting down production.

Another fallacy, of course, in the philosophy underlying the McNary-Haugen bill is this: Believing that the protective tariff has maintained prices on manufactured products, why not apply the same method to agricultural products? There are two answers, of course. To the extent that the protective tariff works it does so for the benefit of one portion of the community at the expense of another portion. If the tariff law works in favor of one industry, it does so only by imposing higher prices on other industries. But if everybody in the community seeks the same protection there is nobody left upon whom the burden can be placed and the futility of the tariff becomes apparent to anyone who is willing to think straight and honestly on the subject.

The fact is that the farmers are beginning to realize as never before that in the tariff they got a gold brick. To the extent that the tariff has helped to maintain prices at post-war levels the farmer as a consumer has had to pay the bill, while as a producer he is selling his commodity at the old pre-war level. The debate and the education that is coming from the McNary-Haugen bill is opening the eyes not only of the farmer but of the Representatives of the farmer in Congress.

There are millions of farmers in this country, including some that I have the honor to represent, who raise fruit and vegetables, oats and barley. These products are not touched by the McNary-Haugen bill. In fact, any farmer who does not produce any of the commodities mentioned in the bill—wheat, corn, cattle, sheep, swine, wool, rice—is in the same position as a worker in a city. He is a consumer, whose cost of living would go up, but as a producer he would get nothing from the bill.

I am not surprised that some of the leading agricultural economists of the country are opposed to the McNary-Haugen bill, including:

William H. Jardine, president of Kansas State Agricultural College—Kansas, by the way, is the largest wheat-growing State in the Union.

Henry Jackson Waters, former president of the Kansas State Agricultural College, now editor of the Kansas City Weekly Star.

Benjamin H. Hibbard, head of department of agricultural economics, Wisconsin Agricultural College, and author of works on agricultural subjects.

Edward G. Nourse, former chief of agricultural economics section, Iowa State College.

Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of political economy and economic adviser for economic department, Harvard University.

James E. Boyle, research professor of agricultural economics, New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University.

I am driven to the conclusion that the thing will have to work itself out unaided by Government interference. In the meantime, however, the farmer ought to seek, and is entitled to receive, relief in two directions—a reduction in tariff rates and a reduction in freight rates.

As Prof. James E. Boyle, of Cornell University, has put it:

> The farmer needs a major operation. The McNary-Haugen bill is a patent medicine.

Mr. LOWREY. Yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] engaged in a rather interesting colloquy, in which they spoke of the poverty and honesty of the people they represent. Each insisted with great enthusiasm that his people were poor but honest. Back yonder in 1882, B. P.—before prohibition—[laughter] it is said that an old gentleman, a member of the legislature, declared with great enthusiasm, "Mr. Speaker, I represent a people that are poor but honest." An old gentleman who was sitting back at his desk who had been imbibing freely of light wine and beer, or something else, rose and said, "Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow a question?" The gentleman said, "Yes; let him state his question." He answered, "I understand you say your people are poor but honest?" "Yes," was the reply; "I am proud to state that I represent a people that are poor but honest." "Poor and honest both?" came the question. "Yes; poor and honest both," said the gentleman on the floor. "Well, I have only one thing to say about your people," was the reply, "they are in a h—— of a fix." [Laughter.] I might say that my people are in about the same fix as the people represented by these two gentlemen.

My district is a farming district and my people are decidedly poor just now, and I think most of them are honest—those that are not in politics, at least. [Laughter.]

I want to say, furthermore, that I believe that gentlemen on both sides of this question which we are discussing are honest. I am sure the gentlemen from the Northwest appealing to us so strongly in the interest of wheat in the presentation of this bill believe it is the right thing.

I take it that every man in the House recognizes the difficulties into which agriculture has fallen and is anxious to do something to relieve the situation. We all admit, I believe, that an emergency exists. Differences arise only as to the means to be employed.

For some weeks I have been studying the McNary-Haugen bill, not exhaustively, as I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, but as closely and as sympathetically as my other duties would permit. I have also listened attentively to the discussion which has been going on here for two or three days.

The more I have studied and listened the more I have been convinced of two things. First, this bill will not accomplish the relief of the farmers. The machinery which it seeks to establish would be unwieldy and uncertain and, without questioning the honesty and ability of the gentlemen who might be placed in charge of it, wasteful in administrative detail and uneconomic in general accomplishment. Nobody would be satisfied. The farmer would find himself subject to arbitrary price fixing that might or might not be fair to him and encumbered perhaps with "scrip," which he would not know what to do with and of uncertain value, in place of money. The miller would find himself unable to buy or to calculate beyond the end of a given crop month, and the public would find itself paying artificial prices at times for the most important necessities. The Government, because it had undertaken the impossible, would find itself more and more discredited. And finally, because we would be attempting to deal on an unnatural basis in the world markets, where we do not have a monopoly, we would within a very few years, I fear, find ourselves cut off from our foreign trade, on which one-third of our wheat production has been dependent. And, worse still, we would have another big corporation in power, with possibilities for tyranny and corruption worse than we have yet seen.

Just here let me quote from an editorial in the New Orleans Picayune.

Governor Davis, of Kansas, himself a "dirt farmer" in a wheat-growing State, declares that measures like this McNary-Haugen bill "are brought forward by politicians who believe that the farmers are easily fooled. The farmer," he adds, "does not want special privileges," but needs instead "fewer expensive stimulants of government and more common horse sense in the administration of government." Doctor Jardine, president of the Kansas State Agricultural College, asserts that "were this measure to be enacted into law its practical working out would leave the men who fathered it without a shred of reputation. If I lured the farmers into following any such fantasy as the McNary-Haugen scheme, when the inevitable reaction came my usefulness would be destroyed, and I would be ruined utterly. * * * If there is any demand among the Kansas farmers for the McNary-Haugen bill, I have yet to run across it."

The Nebraska Union Farmer expresses the belief that the McNary-Haugen plan "would break down of its own weight in a very short time. The whole scheme is on the bootstrap-lifting order, artificial, cumbersome, expensive, and bureaucratic, and offers no assurance that it would accomplish the purpose for which it is proposed."

Second, this measure is highly paternalistic. Even if it should succeed as its proponents hope, it would tend to take from the American farmer the sense of individuality and self-reliance that has made him great and make him the creature of a Government machine. That is the moral element; and though it is hard to assess, in its final effects it determines our economic as well as our national destiny.

Most of us look, I am sure, with real apprehension on any pronounced movement toward state socialism. Yet this bill is as socialistic as anything that was ever seriously proposed to the American people. It is a symptom of the reaction that is taking place against what we might call state capitalism. The problem of the friends of good government is to hold the balance between the two. The avowed purpose of the American Government is to protect its people in life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; to guarantee equal opportunity to all and special privilege to none.

The tragedy of the situation into which we have now drifted is that the ends of government have been so corrupted as to guarantee special privilege to some and equal opportunity to none. The gentlemen on the other side of the House, most of them, I take it, will not say it just that way; but they are admitting freely that two standards have been created in America largely by reason of our protective tariff laws. There is one plane on which the farmer buys the manufactured articles and products that are his daily necessity. This plane is determined on a purely American basis, behind American tariff and labor walls which shut out foreign competition. Fifty per cent below it is the plane on which the farmer sells his own raw products. This plane is determined on a world basis. There is no economic way of putting it on any other basis. More than half our cotton and one-third of our wheat are produced for the world market. Hence these prices are determined by world conditions. If the world buys heavily from us, prices go up; if the world is unable to buy or buys elsewhere, we have a surplus left at home above what we ourselves can consume and prices go down.

It is vain to hope that we can compel the world to buy from us by national legislation or by any other act of our own. All we can do is to encourage the world to buy from us. But this act does not encourage the world to buy from us. On the contrary, it sets up an export corporation whose business it will be to pool our surplus products and hold them against the world until it forces the world to pay the highest prices that at the time being can be obtained. Of course, it must do that. If it should do less, the officials at its head would promptly be "investigated."

But what would happen meanwhile? The world, seeking to buy at the lowest possible prices, would turn to other fields. We have no monopoly. Agriculture in Argentina, Brazil, South Africa, northern Africa, Mesopotamia, India, China, Australia, Canada, and eastern Europe, in all of which places farmers can buy and sell on the same plane, would be given a tremendous impetus. In a few years I fear we would find ourselves with an export corporation that was unable to export because it had killed its foreign markets. A third of our farm houses would be vacant, a third of our fields would be untilled, a third of the best portion of our population would be crushed and embittered. We would have built a Chinese wall about ourselves.

Gentlemen, I admit that we have created artificial conditions in this country which have placed the farmer at a disadvantage. And that is equivalent to admitting that our Government has not guaranteed equal opportunity to all and special privilege to none, but has protected some in special privilege and has placed others at a disadvantage. We have forced American agriculture to bear, in addition to its own burden, the burden of American industrialism.

Through a paternalistic system of the most vicious sort we have hampered and pandered to corporate business. The manufacturers, the transportation systems, and the labor unions, have all, in one way or another, had their special guaranties and special privileges. Of course there have been efforts to equalize things in favor of agriculture, but these efforts, because, as I have already said, we can not control world conditions by domestic measures, have without exception failed.

Things have gone from bad to worse until now, as the handwriting appears on the wall, gentlemen whose party is responsible for a monstrous condition have brought forth a monstrous palliative. They at least have the virtue of consistency. They remind me of the ranch boy from Montana, who, having grown up with wild horses and wild steers, came East and married a New York girl, whom he took back to his Montana ranch.

A few years later he showed up in the East again. Somebody asked him about his wife. "Oh," he said, with a certain wistfulness, "Mary was a good girl, and she made a fine wife. But, you know, she broke her leg and I had to shoot her!" Like our high-tariff friends he had conceived of only his established method of dealing with a crippled animal.

Mr. Speaker, if we are determined to maintain a Government that grants unequal privileges and unequal protection, we need not concern ourselves about the farm problem. The farm problem will take care of itself through the hard process of elimination, not of the unfittest but of the more unfortunate, and retrenchment from what in the past has been proper and legitimate investment. That process has already begun. In a few more years it will have run its course. We will produce and consume within ourselves, and let the rest of the world go hang. And everybody knows what happens to the individual or the nation that cuts loose from friendly association and from interchange and exchange with neighbors.

This bill, I am convinced, simply adds one wrong principle to another wrong principle; and it is hard to right one wrong with another wrong. If we really want to help the American farmer effectively and permanently we must put him back in position to compete on a world basis. It is not a question of giving him special privileges and protection; on a world basis we can not give these. It is a question of taking from others the special privileges and protection we have given to them and which have borne so hardly on the American farmer and on the whole national welfare. It is a question of restoring government for the whole people—not for the farm bloc, or for the labor bloc, or for the manufacturing bloc—of restoring government which will guarantee equal opportunity to all and special privilege to none.

Of course a program of that sort will take time. We can not expect this Congress to begin it; and we can not expect the Democratic Congress which is to come to finish it. We need evolution, not revolution. Revolution is usually the mark of people who lack proper balance and understanding; evolution is the mark of people who understand the fundamental principles under which they live and conduct their government.

If we can do anything meanwhile to help the farmer tide over the emergency which undoubtedly exists, by all means let us do it. If we can give him better diversification, better transportation, better information, and better exportation we will render him worth-while service. But none of those measures will give him full and permanent relief. We must follow them with something that reaches deeper into the economic verities. And I am afraid that this present measure will give neither temporary nor permanent relief, but will simply add to the confusion.

Along the lines of information and diversification we are getting some very helpful results through the Department of Agriculture. In fact, much has been done to enable farmers to select the crops that pay and to increase production.

By the improvement of waterways, the establishment of barge lines, the proper encouragement and proper supervision of railways, and the encouragement of good roads we can greatly help the farmer in the transportation of his products.

But at last the most vital question is that of markets. May I venture to suggest that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] has a bill that promises large things on home marketing, and the Dial joint resolution now pending before the Senate offers more in foreign marketing than any other measure brought before this Congress. As gentlemen know, I am especially interested in this latter measure.

We ought not to adjourn without considering both these measures thoroughly.

This Congress has been in session nearly six months. We all know that agriculture is our basal industry and yet is suffering almost to the point of collapse. The appeal for relief has been constant and urgent. We are now close upon adjournment and no farm legislation has been passed. We have no right to adjourn without giving time to consider these various measures thoroughly. If we adjourn without doing something for agriculture the farmers will resent it bitterly, and ought to. This Congress will suffer accordingly, and ought to. I am not surprised that we hear much talk of farmers deserting both old parties in the coming elections.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been in the House during the whole 15 hours' discussion of this bill. I have heard all the speeches for and against this measure. I have read all the extension of remarks in the RECORD on this bill. I have read all of the hearings before the Agricultural Committee on this, the so-called McNary-Haugen bill.

I come from an agricultural State and from a district that is almost wholly agricultural. My home county is second in agricultural products according to the last census of the United States. We raised last year in that county over 25,000,000 bushels of marketable potatoes, and I have not been able to find potatoes mentioned in this bill.

I have to go back in a few days to my farmer constituents. They have not troubled me much. I have been here seven years and they have not dictated how they thought I ought to vote on any bill or any measure. I have voted on all measures that I thought would help the farmers. They trust me, knowing I was born and brought up on a farm, knowing that I stand always for the best interests of the farmers. I believe in the farm as the foundation of prosperity of the Nation, but not one of my farmers is in favor of this bill, as far as I can find out. They are against price fixing. They are against the Government interfering with them. They are against Government buying and selling of their products in the markets, and they are against Government ownership.

If this bill is not a price-fixing bill, if this bill is not for the purpose of making higher prices for farm products in the Northwest for five years, if this bill is not for inducing a surplus, if this bill is not for raising the high cost of living, then it does not mean anything. Unless you have a surplus under this bill you can not have your higher prices for the products. If there is no surplus your bill is no good and only fools the farmer.

Some one said yesterday:

> I have a doubt about this bill working, I have a doubt about this bill being of any consequence to the farmers, but I am going to resolve the doubt in favor of the bill.

Mark Twain had a very much better motto than that. He said:

> When in doubt, tell the truth.

I think we had better tell the truth to the farmers. We are going back in a few days to our constituencies, and what are you going to say to them about this bill, if you vote for it? Three-fourths of the States would not be benefited by it in the least, and yet they will be paying for the high cost of living caused by this great appropriation to make big profits and high prices to northwestern farmers in a matter of price fixing, which, to my mind as a lawyer, I think is wholly unconstitutional. Oh, you say, "We gave $10,000,000 to Germany the other day out of our abundance." That also was unconstitutional.

A MEMBER. Not in money.

Mr. HERSEY. Oh, no. I saw gentlemen here who were in favor of this bill stand up on this floor with moisture in their eyes weeping over the babies that needed milk in Germany, which they said that gift would supply, and then they ended up by adding an amendment to the bill to spend that $10,000,000 for wheat to benefit the western farmers, and to send wheat to Germany instead of "milk for the babies." Do you think you are fooling the farmers? The school marm said to the small boy, "Johnny, you will have to have an excuse for staying away from school. Go right home to your father and have him write you an excuse." Johnny said, "Ma'am, my father is not any good at writing excuses. Mother finds him out every time." [Laughter.] Some of you who will vote for this bill are going home with a lot of poor excuses, but the farmers will find you out before you get through.

Congress has been doing everything for the farmer that it could legally do. The farmers in my State are in just as bad condition financially as the farmers in the Northwest. We can not get any profits from our farm products, and have not for the last three years. We have borrowed money to the extent of our resources.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman does not grow anything in his district but potatoes.

Mr. HERSEY. Potatoes, hay, oats, sweet corn, and apples, and they are not mentioned in this bill. Men come here representing constituencies in the Northwest that are suffering from low prices of wheat, and you feel you must vote for this bill or not come back. The farmers of the Northwest are looking to Congress to help them get big prices for their farm products. They think they are going to get $1.50 for every bushel of wheat they have on hand, and also what they raise in the next five years. They believe that there is going to be price fixing by the Government for the next five years. They believe their surplus is going to be marketed abroad by the Government, and the loss to be borne by the Government. They believe above all things in the world that what they are going to do for the next five years is to grow all the wheat they can and get a big profit. There is nothing but wheat in this bill. It is admitted that everything else must go out of the bill, as we have not a surplus of any other farm product.

The last Congress did everything possible to benefit the farmer. My committee, the Judiciary, reported a bill which passed Congress authorizing the farmers to organize themselves into cooperative societies for cultivating their lands and marketing their products. We took them out from under the restrictions of the Clayton antitrust law and the Sherman antitrust law and gave them a privilege we gave no other class or industry in allowing them to organize, build warehouses, store and hold and market their products, and do all these things through organization of farmers to control the markets that was not allowed to any other industry in the land.

These cooperative associations have been a great success in welding the farmers together into a solid organization where they can do much to control the markets and protect themselves against middlemen and the profiteers. The only trouble so far has been that only about one-half of the farmers join these organizations. The other half are unrestricted by any contracts or agreements and still continue to flood the market at the wrong time and each working on his own account. I look to see in the near future a better organization of the farmers in the cooperative societies, which to me is one of the great remedies for low prices and financial distress among the farmers.

I was pleased to support the cooperative bill in the committee and in the House.

We also passed the filled milk bill to prevent interstate shipments of fraudulent milk wrongly branded, for the benefit of the dairy farmers.

We also established the agricultural credits act and admitted agriculture to the Federal Reserve Board, establishing Federal intermediate credit banks and national agricultural credit associations of farmers, limiting their own banking privileges to farmers, giving them the lowest rate of interest that could be found among the banking institutions.

We also revived the War Finance Corporation for their benefit, passed the packers and stockyards act which permitted publicity of the packers' business, regulating their handling of the farmers' products so as not to permit any overreaching of the producer.

We also passed the warehouse act for the benefit of the farmers, the cotton futures act to protect the cotton farmers, and fixed a standard for butter, opened the naval stores for the benefit of the farmer, and passed the Capper-Tincher bill to prevent speculating in agricultural commodities and preventing those not farmers from speculating in great agricultural commodities. We passed the good roads act to help the farmers in marketing their crops.

I have voted for all these acts and relief for the farmers of this Nation, and if you can show me to-day any act of legislation that will assist the farmer in a lawful and legitimate way to recover from war deflation and make him more prosperous in his agricultural pursuits, I will gladly vote for this bill, but I can not lend my assistance to the enactment of legislation that can only work to his injury and to the destruction of the great public policies that have in the past made our farmers more prosperous than those of any other Nation.

The history of this bill before us is very interesting. In the great Northwest are more than a dozen States in one block known as the wheat and corn belt and the livestock-producing States. It is a great agricultural section, and of late years its principal products have been wool, corn, meat, and wheat.

While this great Northwest has been endowed by nature far beyond other sections of the country by being well adapted to woolgrowing and agricultural pursuits, yet its farmers have been the victims of much vicious and false political propaganda from those who were not farmers.

During the last half century more than 20 new political parties have sprung up in this great land of the Northwest—the People's Party, the Greenback Party, the 16 to 1 Party, the Populists, the Farmer-Labor Party, the Progressive Party, and the Farmer-Labor Progressive Party, and dozens of others which I have not time to mention.

All these parties have organized with the idea of sending Representatives to Congress who would, by the political influence of holding the balance of power, obtain legislation that would favor the farmers of the great Northwest, giving them an advantage over the rest of the States and obtain from the Treasury special privileges.

The present condition of low prices of farm products is not confined to-day to these Northwestern States, but is general all over the country wherever the farm is found. It grows out of the aftermath of the war, for during this great world-wide war our farmers everywhere in the Nation received abnormal prices for the products of the farm. These western farmers received $2.20 to $3 per bushel for wheat. The farmers of my State received as high as $10 and $11 per barrel for potatoes. These high prices everywhere induced the farmers to increase their products until for the last two or three years potatoes and wheat have been down at cost or below the expense of production. The present depression of these products has been brought about not only by the natural process of the Nation getting back to normal, but by reason of the production of a large surplus above our demands and needs, and this surplus has fixed the price in the domestic market. We have not been able to export but very little of these products because the other nations were unable to buy and there was no market abroad.

Canada grows very many millions of bushels of surplus wheat and potatoes far beyond her domestic needs. She has the advantage of shipments by English vessels from the port of Halifax to the port of Liverpool. England, the largest foreign buyers of wheat, deals with English colonies, Australia and Canada; and they have been able to supply Europe with all her needs of agricultural products.

The present administration, recognizing the actual situation of things, has endeavored in every way possible to lessen the losses of the farmers. We have fixed a tariff upon wheat of 42 cents per bushel, thus excluding and shutting out imports from Canada and protecting as far as possible our own domestic market. We have fixed a tariff of 40 cents per bushel on potatoes, thus protecting the potato farmers of the Nation from the influx from Canada.

We have also put a high tariff upon all other products of the farm and all livestock and wool to protect the farmer, and to my mind the farmer is coming out all right. The only immediate remedy that can be offered him that can possibly do him any good is to induce him to further organize—organize into cooperative societies to control his own market at home, and if he has a surplus outside of his home market to market this abroad with his own agents and not depend upon the professional exporter, middleman, and profiteer who have hitherto exploited the farmer.

There is also another remedy. The transportation of the country, which was brought almost to the verge of destruction under Government control, is now recovering under private management, and soon we shall be able to give lower freight rates to the farmer to assist him in marketing his crops. The development of fertilizers in the United States; the manufacture of our own fertilizers; the destruction of foreign monopoly; the lowering of taxes; the bringing about of economy in government, all will tend to lift the farmer from his slough of despondency to his old prosperity. But none of these things can come to him by the passage of this bill.

In the last congressional elections in the Northwestern States the farmers were deluded and deceived by the politicians of these many new political parties calling upon the farmers to send to Congress members of farm-labor blocs who promised to obtain high prices for their farm products, lower freight rates, and Government relief by Government ownership, operation, and control.

The elections in these States produced a large number of Congressmen, both in the House and Senate, that came here with the one idea of obtaining legislation that would return them to Congress in the elections of 1924.

This first session of the Sixty-eighth Congress has had the benefit of their wisdom in two bills that are now up for our consideration. President Coolidge has been keenly aware of the situation of the farmers of this country and the low prices they are offered for their products. Last fall he sent two directors of the War Finance Corporation, Eugene Meyer, jr., and Hon. Frank Mondell, to visit the great Northwest and make an investigation of conditions in the wheat-growing States and to report to him their findings and recommendations. This was done in an interesting pamphlet printed by the Government dated November 5, 1923, entitled "Report to the President on the Wheat Situation." I would advise my fellow Members to read this pamphlet if they wish to get a full and unbiased idea of the situation of the farmers in the great Northwest and of the question now before us.

Among other things Messrs. Meyer and Mondell reported was this:

> In these days of swift economic changes the Government, in cooperation with those directly concerned, should approach the problems as they develop with a strong and sympathetic interest and with a determination to proceed as promptly as may be possible in taking steps to meet them. World conditions over which we have no control bring their repercussions at unexpected times and in ways that are difficult to foresee, and, with the best intention in the world, we can only endeavor to meet the difficulties as they arise. Unfortunately these maladjustments are the inevitable economic consequences of the disturbances of war.
>
> Where sympathy and emotion are properly aroused we must nevertheless seek to maintain a thoroughly rational attitude in order that we may find the sound and therefore effective solution. It is relatively easy to detect the proposals of those who seek to exploit agricultural distress for their own political purposes. But it is far more difficult to deal with the proposals of the perfectly sincere and honest-minded people who seek to solve problems by short cuts which are unsound and which, therefore, are bound to be ineffective.
>
> We feel, as a result of our trip, that the solution of the wheat problem lies along two lines: First, the adjustment of production to American needs if the world market is oversupplied from other producing countries at lower prices than are satisfactory to the American producer under prevailing conditions, and second, the development of an improved marketing system such as we believe can be brought about by the organization of the producers of the country for the purpose of marketing their wheat under the cooperative marketing plan, making it unnecessary to rely so completely upon the uncertain functioning of the speculative public contract market.

After this report of farming conditions the President appeared before the present Congress at its opening session and in his first message, speaking of the farmer and agricultural conditions, said:

> No complicated scheme of relief, no plan for Government fixing of prices, no resort to the Public Treasury will be of any permanent value in establishing agriculture. Simple and direct methods, put into operation by the farmer himself, are the only real sources for restoration.

Since this Congress was organized the so-called progressive farm-labor blocs from the great Northwest have formed a political alliance with organized labor to put the present bill and the Barkley labor bill, so called, through Congress at the present session. Organized labor in Minnesota recently passed the following resolutions:

> Whereas the organized labor movement of Minnesota through its political efforts has successfully elected Dr. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD and MAGNUS JOHNSON to the United States Senate, showing that the farmers and workers can be organized into a political party and elect representatives to the State and National Governments; and
>
> Whereas it is behooven upon the American Federation of Labor to lead the great mass of American workers into a more effective and progressive means of defense on both economic and political fields: Workers of the United States, unite! Get behind the Minnesota workers! Help them pile greater working-class victories upon the triumphs already won!

The Agricultural Committee of the House is composed of 22 members. Of this number 14 are from the great Northwest and only 8 from the rest of the country. The Agricultural Committee of the Senate is composed of 17 members. Of these 11 come from the great Northwest and only 6 from the rest of the country.

Before these two committees so organized this farm-labor bloc presented the present bill, known as the McNary-Haugen bill, and this same combination of farm-labor blocs presented to the Interstate Commerce Committee the Barkley labor bill, so called, supported by all the farm-labor group of the Northwest.

There can in legislation be nothing in common between the farmer and organized labor. The farmer is interested in getting the highest prices for his products. The railroad laborer is interested in getting the highest wages possible. The farmer is interested in obtaining low freight rates. The railroad laborer cares nothing about the freight rates, but only interested in obtaining high wages. If the farmer succeeds in raising the price of his products, the laboring man must pay it in the high cost of living. If the laborer obtains high wages, the farmer must pay it in higher freight rates, and so the only object of this combination of farm and labor is purely political. "You help pass my bill and I will help pass yours, and let the country pay."

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK] in discussing this bill, page 9209 of the RECORD, said:

I wish to congratulate and compliment these great railway brotherhoods and the American Federation of Labor for exerting their energies in behalf of the farmers of this country. They want to see the farmers prosper and to receive a reasonable price for their products. I am glad that their honored representatives appeared before the committee in behalf of the farmers of this Nation.

It becomes necessary therefore that these men from the Northwest who obtained their election by making glittering promises to the farmers must make good to obtain a reelection. Over in the Senate the Farmer-Labor Senator from South Dakota, Senator NORBECK, on page 8193 of the RECORD, a few days ago said:

Mr. President, the farmers of this country, and especially the farmers of the great Northwest, know that the disparity of the value of their dollar grows largely out of conditions brought about while the Democrats were in power. It resulted largely from interference with the law of supply and demand. * * * It is a good time for the Senate to express its views on the McNary-Haugen bill, and I think Senators from the Northwest should consider that feature very carefully now, instead of going home a month later and saying, "We slipped a cog again in not bringing our measures up for consideration at the proper time."

The bill before us is the result of this desperate effort of the Northwest radicals in Congress to obtain legislation that will return them to Congress in the coming election.

Let us examine the bill. This bill attempts by abnormal and artificial means and methods to raise and maintain the price of farm products without regard to the law of supply and demand. It organizes a Government corporation with a multitude of agents and employees to buy up the surplus of farm products and to sell them in the foreign markets at the best price they can get, admittedly at a great loss from the purchase price, or to dump them abroad at the expense of the Nation. It starts with an appropriation of $200,000,000 from the Treasury and a borrowing authority for $1,000,000,000 more. It fixes the price of this surplus according to a ratio taken from four years of prices prior to the World War, which would make the price of wheat at the present time $1.50, and wheat is now selling at $1 per bushel. The minority report of the House Committee on Agriculture gives the following statement of the effect of and the workings of the bill:

When this bill takes effect as to wheat the price of dollar wheat will instantly rise to over $1.50. The elevator men, merchants, millers, and speculators who have wheat on hand will suddenly be made richer by operation of law. If the emergency is declared, as it probably will be, before the wheat season, nearly all the wheat available for market will be in the hands of these men, and not in the hands of the farmers. The same applies to rice and corn, the profit, of course, being smaller. It may be that on some of this an equalization fee can be collected, but if sold for feed or seed there is no fee. If the fee on $1.50 wheat is 20 cents per bushel, the law has increased the value to the holders 30 cents per bushel, which must be paid for by the farmers and consumers. Every merchant or wholesaler who has flour on hand will find himself enriched overnight, and under the terms of the bill no equalization fee can be collected. If an emergency is declared on cattle, hogs, and sheep, every head will instantly rise in value, whether in the hands of the farmers or others. The hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of pork, beef, and mutton in the hands of the Big Five and about 200 smaller packers would instantly rise in value. On this item alone there would be a sheer gift to the meat packers of this country of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 to be paid for by the consumers of the country. The packers would have to pay an equalization fee providing an emergency were declared on their products, but that would be only a fraction of their gain.

All meat stocks in the hands of meat dealers who had bought them from packers would likewise rise, and from them no equalization fee could be collected. The millers of the country holding wheat or flour would make millions overnight, to be paid for by the consumers. If an emergency should ever be declared on wool, every clothing manufacturer, clothing dealer, etc., would be enriched, and no fee could be collected from them. When the packer legislation and grain futures act were before the committee, there were swarms of packers and millers and high-priced attorneys making all manner of objections. These gentlemen did not put in an appearance when this bill was being considered, and no doubt they are praying for its passage. The total gift to nonproducers would easily amount to $500,000,000. There has been no such gift "since salvation was made free to the human race."

Some of the proponents of this bill have denied that it is a Government price-fixing bill. It can not be anything else. First, because it gives the method by which prices are fixed; second, those who favor the bill admit it is price fixing.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], on page 9331 of the RECORD, speaking in favor of this bill, says:

The bill, if put into effect, will materially advance the prices of the basic farm commodities the corporation deals in. The corporation has the funds and will control the public market. It can advance the price of farm products which it elects to buy, just as certain as the sun will rise to-morrow morning.

It may advance them 20 per cent, as estimated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] in his speech, or 40 per cent, as assumed by the gentleman from Wisconsin in the second section of his speech.

But no matter whether the advance totals one billion, two billions, or three billions, the farmer is going to get the benefit of it, and that is the exact purpose of the bill.

Price fixing has been generally condemned by all who have studied the farmers' problems. The National Grange, the most reliable purely farm organization in this Nation, in its declaration of policies and position as regards farm legislation, says:

In war time price fixing may have been necessary; in peace time the grange regards price fixing as unjustifiable and indefensible.

It will be remembered that this bill will not work or accomplish anything for the farmer unless he has a surplus. The bill itself says:

It is hereby declared that there exists a general emergency in respect of agricultural commodities by reason of the existence of surpluses available for export in agricultural commodities.

Now, let us see how this bill would work should it become law at this session of Congress.

From the best information I can obtain it is estimated that there are about 100,000,000 bushels of wheat in this Nation above that needed for our domestic market. It is also estimated that 75 per cent of this wheat is now in the hands of the brokers, wheat profiteers, elevators, warehouses, and other large organizations of capital that have bought this wheat on a falling market and are holding it for the higher market on the passage of this bill. As soon as this bill becomes a law this Government corporation will be obliged to call an emergency and buy this wheat at $1.50 per bushel, and the profits will go into the hands of those big interests which are speculating in wheat. The poor farmer of the Northwest, who is in a large majority, like the poor farmer in my State, can not hold his farm products for higher prices. He needs the money and must sell his products as soon as the crop is harvested or his cattle are ready for the market. Therefore only about 25 per cent of the present surplus of wheat is held by real farmers, and they are the farmers who are able to hold it. This bill would not confer any benefit at all upon those who need it most.

If this bill should become a law it would at once hold out a great inducement for the farmers to grow a surplus of wheat, because without a surplus they could not get the higher price, and with a surplus there would be a guaranty of $1.50, which would give them a good profit, and thus instead of curing the evil of overproduction we would at great expense to the Government bring about a continuance of the evil from which the farmer now suffers and at the same time enrich the profiteer and the grain gambler.

This bill by a price-fixing scheme holds out false hopes to the farmers, and the result must necessarily be an irreparable injury to the tillers of the soil.

Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture says:

Unless production is fairly well adjusted to demand, prices will be disappointing. We are far more dependent upon Europe for markets for our cotton than for our food products. * * * In considering the matter of future exports of our agricultural products it must be remembered that the probable tendency will be downward. European agriculture is becoming more productive and no doubt economic conditions are becoming more stable. As normal conditions in Europe are reestablished their purchases of our surplus will become more normal.

One of the results of the passage of this bill would be to kill cooperative societies that are now doing so much to give relief to the farmer. One of the great objects of these societies, of course, is to find a market for the farmer and assist him in marketing his products, but of what use would these cooperative societies be if the Government does the marketing?

In a colloquy found on page 9221 of the RECORD between Mr. VOIGT, of Wisconsin, and Mr. KETCHAM, of Michigan, the following occurs:

Mr. VOIGT. The prime object of the farm cooperatives is to get the farmer a better price.

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. VOIGT. That being true, what is the object of a farmer participating in the cooperative organization if there is only one Government price?

There are two careful and conservative editorials upon this bill which ought to be brought before the House for their careful consideration before a vote is taken to force this Nation into a price fixing Government control and management and Government marketing of products of a certain class out of the great body of farmers of this Nation. The first editorial is from a great independent paper of New England, the Boston Transcript, and is as follows:

FARMERS MUST CAST OUT AGITATORS

If the farmers and grain producers of the West can cast out from their midst the professional agitators who hurry to prescribe nostrums for the economic ills from which the farmers suffer, a long step will be taken toward remedying conditions admittedly bad. The producers of wheat, corn, oats, and livestock long have suffered because there has been gross and excessive speculation and utterly unwarranted price manipulation in connection with the sale of those commodities. That the evils existed and were recognized gave the Nonpartisan League its only excuse for existence and attracted to league membership many thousands of honest farmers who sought a remedy. And agitators of the Nonpartisan League variety were prompt to take advantage of the situation.

Under leadership for the most part utterly impractical, the Nonpartisan League has run its course to date with no striking benefits to producers of grain and livestock, without lessening the grip of speculators and profiteers. The farmers are getting, under deflation conditions, even a smaller proportion than usual of the value of their grain and their livestock. As was inevitable, when prices began to drop, the first to feel the effect of a reduced demand were the producers of grain, cotton, and livestock. Prices of these commodities had been forced higher than ever had been known, and when the war-time demand stopped, prices had to yield. It was when the price of wheat had declined from above $3 a bushel to below $2, and when cattle, hog, corn, and cotton prices had declined in proportion, regardless of cost of production, that a new coterie of agitators began to vociferate, and to advocate withholding wheat, corn, and cotton from the market. Hogs and cattle could not so well be held back, as they would continue to eat. Organizations were formed in the South and in the West, members of which bound themselves not to sell cotton, corn, or wheat. What has been the result? Supplies of all the commodities being greatly in excess of the demand, the efforts to keep up prices have been as ineffective as would be efforts to sweep back the tide. Prices have continued to drop until wheat growers in some sections of the country can not cash their holdings at $1 a bushel, and millions of bushels of corn will not net the growers 35 cents a bushel.

As fast as one crop of agitators fails in its effort to lead the farmers out of the wilderness another crop comes to the fore to save them from the speculator and the profiteers. And under bad leadership the condition of the farmer grows continually worse. Only when the farmer severs all connection with the agitators, thinks and acts for himself, will he be enabled to better his condition and secure his fair share of what the consumer pays for farm products. (Boston Transcript.)

The second editorial is from the independent Washington Post of May 28, 1924, and entitled "Fooling the farmer and consumer," and is as follows:

The persistency of the supporters of the McNary-Haugen bill is worthy of a better cause. The farmers of the United States are entitled to demand wiser and more effective champions. If a proper course had been pursued by the farmers' champions at the beginning of this session, some relief would now be in sight for the farmers, instead of an opposition that is steadily becoming more resentful.

The farmers of this country, being a part of the body politic, deserve the support of all citizens in any fair measure which will bring relief to agriculture without penalizing other industries. But the self-appointed champions of the farmer have pursued a course that antagonizes other elements of the population. One or two special interests have succeeded in obtaining advantages over the public during this session of Congress, but this fact does not warrant the granting of special favors to the farmers. * * * It would be fortunate for the farmers if the McNary-Haugen bill should be beaten, because it would, if enacted, arouse a prejudice against agriculture which would do great harm to the legitimate interests of that industry.

The McNary-Haugen bill is intended to benefit the farmer by raising the price of farm products to the consumer. This is the wrong method of approaching the problem. The consumer is not responsible for hard times on the farm, and should not be punished to make prosperity for the farmer. If the bill should succeed in raising prices, the benefits would not go to the farmer but rather to the meat packers, the millers, the grain speculators, and other middlemen. By raising the price of wheat the acreage would not be cut down and the price accordingly maintained for the benefit of those farmers who did raise wheat. These farmers, as well as many others who have quit raising wheat, would immediately increase their acreage to take advantage of the high price. Then wheat would either tumble in price, despite price fixing, or the Treasury would be drained to keep up prices on a deluge of wheat.

There are millions of bushels of wheat in elevators, mills, and in the hands of speculators. The passage of the McNary-Haugen bill would give them hundred of millions of dollars' profit at the expense of the consumer without benefiting the farmer to the extent of one dollar. That is a fraud upon the consumer and the farmer, and makes certain that any real relief measure proposed later would be rejected by the angry public.

The McNary-Haugen bill would "stabilize" prices of meats, and would attempt to keep prices high at home by "dumping" the surplus abroad. But this would not help the farmer or the consumer. It would merely be handing money to the meat packers. The packers would be guaranteed a fixed high price at home, and then, when the Government commission turned around to sell surplus meat abroad, it would find the foreign agencies of the American packers on hand, waiting to buy back their own product abroad at "dumping" prices. The principal packers have agencies at all commercially strategic points abroad. Instead of supplying these agencies with meat direct from the factory here, the packers would sell the meat at the fancy prices fixed by the Government, and then would instruct their foreign agencies to buy back all surplus which is sent abroad for the purpose of keeping up prices at home. The Government would pay the packers 150 or 200 per cent profit at home, and would then "dump" the surplus upon the packers' agents abroad, at a price perhaps 100 per cent less than was paid for the meat. The estimated profit of the meat packers through the operation of the McNary-Haugen bill is from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000. This would come from the pocket of the consumer in this country, through direct purchase of meat and through taxation to meet the losses to the Treasury incurred by the commission in executing the law.

The country demands reduced taxation. If the McNary-Haugen bill should become a law, increased taxes would be immediately necessary to meet the Treasury deficit. The evil would be twofold. First, it would be a charge upon all the people for the benefit of a class; and second, the class intended to be benefited would not be benefited, but injured.

The testimony from farmers who have carefully studied the McNary-Haugen bill is to the effect that it would greatly injure them. Protests against the passage of the bill are coming from the chief farming communities. "We do not want fixed prices," is the burden of the protests. "We want economy in government, reduced taxes, no favoritism, and a square deal." That is the authentic voice of the American farmer.

One of the difficulties in the situation is the interference of politicians who are trying to curry favor with the farmers by offering to obtain for them special access to the Treasury. These politicians are not the true friends of the farmer. They are seeking their own advantage. They hope to fool the farmer and obtain his political support with a bribe of Treasury money. They are doing their best to deceive the consumer by pretending that the McNary-Haugen bill will not hurt anybody. The measure proves on its face that it is a fraud, for if it will put money in the farmer's pocket it must take the money from the consumer. But investigation shows that the bill would not benefit the farmer, although it would injure the consumer. Middlemen and speculators would reap a rich profit at the expense of the farmer and consumer, and the taxpayer would pay for it all.

Let us not attempt to fool the farmer by voting for this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield six and a half minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the farmer, and especially the spring-wheat farmer, is in bad shape. The great bulk of the spring wheat is grown in the north Middle West. As to conditions in that portion of our country, they have been very aptly described in a report made by the late John H. Rich, then chairman of the Federal reserve bank in Minneapolis, dated November 12, 1923. The provision is as follows:

There are in the northwestern grain area 388,242 farms, embracing 72,250,000 acres. It is noticeable that in the well-diversified sections the amount of agricultural distress is vastly less than in the grain areas. The former were the areas which years ago underwent forced abandonment of one-crop farming. A survey of the circumstances and condition of 203,040 farmers within the area properly classified as wholly or principally grain raising discloses many important facts. Of the total number 5,388 are bankrupt or being foreclosed, 9,302 so involved as to be in imminent danger of bankruptcy, and 4,959 have been forced to abandon their farms and leave the country. In view of the inclusion of those who have abandoned their land in the number of those bankrupt, the survey indicates a total of 14,690 as having failed, or 7.2 per cent. The percentage by States is interesting, and is as follows:

	Per cent.
Montana	17.7
North Dakota	10.5
Northwestern Wisconsin	3.0
Minnesota	3.7
South Dakota	7.3
Northern Michigan	2.8

Furthermore, agriculture in general has been having its troubles during this period of readjustment. Progress, however, is being made, conditions are on the mend, and will so continue if we do not do something to prevent it. We must bear in mind that this is not the first time this country has had a depression in agriculture. I again quote from a portion of this same report wherein Mr. Rich comments on conditions pertaining to agriculture in this country following the close of the Civil War:

A glance at conditions following the Civil War is of particular interest because these conditions are curiously parallel to those existing in the grain-raising areas of the Northwest to-day. During the decade from 1860 to 1870 Iowa almost doubled the amount of wheat produced. Wisconsin increased its population more than one-third. The Prairie Farmer observed in 1864:

> "There must be something radically wrong with the farmer who does not now free himself from debt. Every cultivated product bears a highly remunerative price."

Toward 1870, when prices were beginning to drop, farmers in Iowa and Wisconsin considered the slump but temporary, and on the strength of the prosperity they had enjoyed for 6 years they did not hesitate to go into debt for choice land. About 1870 there was considerable holding of wheat in the Mississippi Valley States. In 1866 and 1867 wheat sold for $3.50 a bushel. In January, 1870, it was worth 77 cents on the Chicago market. In the following years prices fell to an exceptionally low level. An excellent authority says that when farmers felt themselves pinched by falling prices they tried three different means to relieve themselves.

First, they attempted to reduce the cost of transporting their products; second, they tried to eliminate the middleman through cooperative buying and selling; and third, they demanded that the United States Government increase the circulating medium. In 1870 a total of 18,000,000 bushels of wheat was marketed at Milwaukee, and in 1880 only 11,000,000 bushels. The secretary of the Iowa Agricultural Society said in 1878 that there never has been a time in history of so great a depression in business of all kinds. Corn was being bought for 8 cents a bushel. In 1866 the farm value of an acre of wheat in Iowa was $22.72, and in 1876 only $5.48. So rapidly did conditions change that in 1879 the secretary of the Wisconsin State Agricultural Society was able to say that large areas in wheat were a thing of the past. An authority states that during the years of falling prices, discontent, and agitation the farmers in both States who had developed dairying were prosperous and contented and paid little attention to the Greenback movement.

The cry then was for Congress to do something. That cry is being repeated to-day. As we listen, let us remember that an economic ill can not be cured by a legislative pill. While we can not cure, we can greatly aggravate the existing trouble. The law of supply and demand is inexorable. Almost from the dawn of history there have been those who have sought to set it aside. All have failed.

Emperor Diocletian endeavored to stabilize prices. By decree he fixed the prices of all grain, beef, pork, and so forth. It utterly failed. Some years later another Roman emperor, Julian, forgetting the lessons of the past, endeavored to do the same thing. Notwithstanding they had behind them in their efforts to enforce the despotic powers of the great Roman Empire, neither were able to set aside the inexorable law of supply and demand.

It was tried in France during the days of the revolution, and the latest country to attempt it was Soviet Russia. There are many other instances in history too numerous to mention, and all have failed. Can it be that America must also try the experiment? If so, we too will fail, and we too shall pay the cost of conducting the experiment.

Mr. Chairman, for some three or four years now the price of American wheat has been generally unprofitable to the farmer if we are to take into consideration the cost of production and the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar over the commodities he buys. I think it will be admitted that generally speaking the price of wheat in this country is fixed by the price that our exportable surplus sells for abroad. There can be but little difference of opinion as to the condition of the wheat farmer, and especially the spring-wheat farmer. But, before prescribing a remedy, we ought first to ascertain the cause of the disease. The most active official proponent of the McNary-Haugen bill has been an officer of the Department of Agriculture. It is my understanding that the relief plan embodied in this bill was also drawn along lines recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture in his report last fall. It is claimed by the advocates of this legislation that he has privately indorsed and recommended the passage of this measure. Therefore, I think that I am warranted in quoting from the Secretary of Agriculture in his report of the wheat situation last December, as to the cause of these ills. He said, on page 66 thereof:

This condition of things has resulted from (1) the decline in wheat prices, (2) the relatively high levels maintained in the prices of other commodities and services, (3) and also from the maladjustments which exist in the wheat industry itself.

Most authorities agree in the main with this general statement. As to the cause for this decline in wheat prices, the Secretary says, on page 67, as follows:

The present low prices are caused by the large world supply of wheat, for which there is not an effective demand at higher-priced levels.

Therefore overproduction or the excess of the world supply to the available demands, according to the Secretary's statement, lies at the very root of the trouble. The average production of wheat per year in the world for the five-year pre-war period was 2,981,000,000 bushels. The yield for this last crop here was 3,468,000,000 bushels. Here is an increase of nearly 500,000,000 bushels over the pre-war average. Rye is used as a bread grain, especially in Europe. There has been but a slight change in the present production of rye as compared to wheat. So there has been no such shrinkage in the production of rye as to warrant any substantial increase in the production of wheat.

While there has been this increase in wheat production there has been no increase in consumption in the world at large. On the other hand, it has decreased. This is due in Europe to post-war conditions. The best authorities agree that the per capita consumption per year in Europe will run from 1 to 2 bushels less than it did before the war. So, then, we have an increase in supply and a decrease in demand. This increased production is primarily in the following three countries:

	Average pre-war	Average post-war	1923
	Bushels	Bushels	Bushels
Argentina	157,347,000	201,089,000	249,000,000
Canada	197,119,000	325,446,000	470,228,000
United States	660,108,000	852,018,000	782,000,000

This is due in a large measure to the stimulation of the war. Canada and the United States constituted the great granaries of the world during the period. Millions of acres of new land were opened up in Canada. This was undoubtedly the result of this great increased demand, also the urging of both British and American Governments to produce more wheat. The war ended. There was no voice in authority to stop a portion of this great new producing machinery. We continued to produce, and we continued to export. As we so continued to produce prices commenced to decline. The following figures will show how our exports have greatly exceeded the pre-war exports of wheat.

The average percentage of wheat exported 1905 to 1914, inclusive, was 18.8. During the period 1919 to 1922, inclusive, it was 31.6. Furthermore, the export for the first seven months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, is 192,350,000. This is in excess of any previous year.

Notwithstanding this marked increase in production in the United States in recent years, there has been no corresponding increase in this country in consumption per capita. In fact it is less now than in the pre-war years.

Obviously we can not increase consumption so as to take care of our great exportable surplus of from 150,000,000 to 200,000,000 bushels per year. As long as we have that surplus we can only dispose of it, therefore, in the world market. There it will come into competition with wheat from every country on the face of the globe and we can obtain for that surplus only the competitive world price, and as long as we have a surplus our domestic price generally will be governed by the world price.

It is interesting to note that this increase in production in this country has not been in the spring-wheat States but in the Southwestern and Pacific Northwest States. Furthermore, a greater percentage of the wheat from these sections finds its way into the export market than does wheat grown in the spring-wheat areas. Now, in the spring-wheat States we have tried to adjust our acreage to the change in conditions, and have decreased that acreage substantially in the last two or three years.

From 1910 to 1914, inclusive, the total wheat acreage in the United States was about 48,000,000 acres. The acreage planted in 1923 was in excess of that by 13,000,000 acres. In Minnesota the acreage in 1920 was 2,880,000 acres. In 1922 it had been reduced to 1,939,000 acres. In North Dakota it had been reduced from 8,916,000 to 8,740,000 acres.

In spite of this depression in the price of wheat, I am advised that there will be a substantial increase in the number of bushels produced this year in the Southwest and Pacific Coast States than was produced one year ago.

When the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill was passed it carried a duty of 30 cents per bushel on wheat. Under the flexible provision, thereof, this duty was increased by the President, following an investigation by the Tariff Commission to 42 cents per bushel. This has helped in a measure, but no tariff duty no matter how high can solve the problem while we produce a substantial exportable surplus. If we curtail production so as to eliminate this exportable surplus, then with the protective tariff the domestic price can be more substantially increased; otherwise not.

The Secretary expressed the second cause in this language:

> Relatively high levels maintained in the prices of other commodities and services.

The statistics prove beyond a doubt that the purchase power of a bushel of wheat is not what it was during the pre-war years. Wheat prices have dropped to pre-war levels or below, while wages and prices of manufactured commodities are still much higher than the pre-war average. This is likewise true of taxes. Taxes bear most heavily upon agriculture. When the war ended and the demand for his products decreased the manufacturer curtailed his production while, as I have demonstrated, the wheat farmer increased it. Clearly, then, the solution of this second cause lies in the solution of the first cause—overproduction.

The third reason the Secretary gives as:

> The maladjustments which exist in the wheat industry itself.

I again quote from page 68 of his report:

> It is important to bear in mind that the solution of present agricultural difficulties depends quite as much upon the efforts of farmers themselves as upon any governmental action.

During the war high prices and the call of the Government induced many farmers to buy more land and this demand inflated farm value. This in turn materially increased the cost per bushel. Furthermore, some of this land was unfit for economic production of wheat. Then, with increased acreage, came poor farming with inadequate preparation of the seed bed, poor methods of planting resulting in an increased weed menace with its resultant increases in dockage. The yields per acre are now so low in the Northern and Middle Western States as to involve a loss even under favorable crop conditions.

The average for the past 19 years is as follows:

United States in general	14.25
Minnesota	13.2
North Dakota	10
South Dakota	11.6
Montana (newer soil)	19.6

The average for the five post-war years is as follows:

United States	13.4
Minnesota	10.6
North Dakota	9.1
South Dakota	9.9
Montana	10.9

The remedy for inadequate yields and poor quality of wheat is in diversification and better farming methods, and not in laws attempting to set aside the law of supply and demand. It is claimed that the wheat farmer loses money on every bushel of wheat he sells. With this low yield he can not do otherwise if he must compete in the world's markets with countries producing a greater yield per acre and with less expensive land.

The Tariff Commission in its recent report to the President on wheat-production costs, on page 4, says:

	Costs in United States	Costs in Canada	Excess, United States over Canada
A. Weighted average costs
1. Crop of 1923:	Per bushel	Per bushel	Per bushel
Without land charge	$1.11	$0.64	$0.47
With land charge on cash rental basis	1.34	.82	.52
With land charge at interest on stated values	1.47	.82	.65
2. Three-year average cost, 1921-1923:
Without land charge	1.04	.71	.33
With land charge on cash rental basis	1.24	.91	.33
With land charge at interest on stated values	1.40	.92	.48

On page 16 thereof, Table V, are figures showing the great differences in the yield per acre between this country and Canada. It is as follows:

TABLE V.—Acreage and production of hard spring wheat, United States and Canada, 1910–1923 [1]

	Acres harvested (in thousands)		Production (thousands of bushels)		Yield (bushels per acre)
	United States	Canada	United States	Canada	United States	Canada
Average 1910–14 [2]	16,301	9,202	187,590	169,533	11.5	18.4
Average 1915–1919 [3]	13,373	15,097	164,874	227,852	12.3	15.1
1920	10,984	16,803	95,806	233,425	8.7	13.9
1921	11,563	22,096	109,774	278,630	9.4	12.6
1922	10,879	21,223	160,597	375,194	14.7	17.7
1923	10,676	21,666	110,954	446,570	10.4	20.6
Average 1920–1923	10,694	20,447	119,283	333,455	11.2	16.3

[1] Total spring wheat crop of States of Montana, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota, and Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. Durum wheat has been excluded from United States figures.
[2] Including Durum.
[3] Excluding Durum.

If the farmer is losing money in competing with Canada for export, why encourage him to continue?

The remedy for a surplus for which there is an inadequate demand is a decreased acreage. Why does not our Agriculture Department tell the farmer to put his wheat acreage back to where it was before the war? No; that would be too simple a remedy. Instead it proposes a novel, ingenious, artificial scheme, which ignores the lessons of the past and violates all fundamental economic laws. It proposes to remedy these agricultural ills by forming a corporation and conferring certain powers upon that corporation and the Government. In brief, the bill creates a corporation with five directors, of which the Secretary of Agriculture is to be the chairman. Its capital consists of $200,000,000 to be appropriated from the United States Treasury. Whenever the corporation finds an exportable surplus of "wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine," and that the domestic price is below the ratio price to be fixed by the corporation, it shall so notify the President, and he must declare an emergency which will put the ratio price in effect until the corporation recommends otherwise. It will be noted that the President has no discretion whatever. He becomes a ministerial agent in this corporation, of which the Secretary of Agriculture is the head. The ratio price is to bear the same relation to the pre-war price on the commodities as the current all-commodities bears to the pre-war all-commodities price. It therefore clothes the corporation with price-fixing authority. Make no mistake about this.

To carry out its general powers it is given authority to operate warehouses, facilities for processing basic commodities, to make contracts for the same, to trade in basic commodities, and engage in such further business as is incidental and necessary. Let me submit that this is putting the Government in business to the extreme limit. If, following the declaration of an emergency and the putting into effect of a price on a basic commodity, it is found that such commodity or any derivative thereof or competitive substitute therefor is likely to depress the domestic market and thereby tend to increase the losses of this corporation in respect of such commodity, the President must proclaim that fact, whereupon an embargo upon "such commodity or derivative or competitive substitute" is put into effect. Note the tremendous tariff-making powers that are conferred, in effect, upon this corporation. These powers go not only to the basic commodities and their many, many derivatives, but also to the many, many more competitive substitutes. The power is to so fix the duty thereon as to prohibit their entering into the country during the period of the emergency.

Upon the declaration of such emergency the corporation is required to purchase the basic commodities in such quantities as to maintain the domestic price at the level of the ratio price. It is to sell the surplus abroad at whatever it can get and prorate the loss per bushel among the producers by means of a so-called equalization fee.

Truly, of the making of laws there is no end. The provisions as to how the ratio price is to be arrived at and the way losses are to be apportioned are certainly novel and ingenious. One witness described it in the following language:

A little like differential calculus and fourth-dimension mathematics, which makes Einstein's theory of relativity so simple that a child of 6 could take hold of it and make it sound as simple as A, B, C.

I am wondering if it occurred to the draftsmen of this bill that our Federal Government is still one of limited powers—powers that are either granted in express terms or are necessarily implied from those that are expressly granted. Turn to the Constitution. Where is there any grant of power which can be construed to permit a Federal Government taking the taxpayers' money to go into the business of trading and processing agricultural commodities? Where are the precedents for legislation of this kind? If we are to commence with agriculture, where will it end? What right have we to put the equalization-fee provisions into effect?

Mr. Chairman, this is not a step toward the abandonment of private enterprise and the taking over by the Government of private business; this is a leap. Furthermore, it can not be called a leap into the dark, for the experiences of centuries have pointed the way—that this can only lead eventually to disaster. The basic principles underlying the McNary-Haugen bill are wrong and inconsistent with every fundamental principle of our institutions. It is another instance of the citizen asking the Government to support him instead of the citizen supporting the Government. You read in history of the fall of the great Roman Empire. We also read that preceding that fall the populace of Rome had been educated into the belief that the Government should support them.

Mr. Chairman, is the pioneer spirit that animated our fathers and made possible the development in a century of a continent gone? Where is the spirit of the men who conquered and developed this country? Those men only asked the Government to let them pursue their own vocations in their own way. As for help, they only asked for it in matters pertaining to the common defense.

Gentlemen, I do not believe that this scheme will work out, but for purposes of argument let me assume that it will. Our annual crop of wheat is about 800,000,000 bushels. The present price is about $1 per bushel. The ratio price will be about $1.50 per bushel. Our domestic consumption of wheat is about 600,000,000 bushels. This is the quantity consumed by the American people. If this bill passes and goes into effect and works, the difference in the price to the consumer of these 600,000,000 bushels of wheat will be 50 cents per bushel. This means $2.25 per barrel of flour. Our per capita consumption of wheat in this country is about 5 bushels per year. Therefore if this bill goes into effect it means that every man, woman, and child in this country will experience an increase in the cost of living of $11.25, or $56.25 per family of five during a given year. Is the consumer willing to pay this? If he is, there ought not to be any mistake about his knowing just what he will be compelled to pay if this bill passes and goes into effect.

Take hogs. The present price is about $7 per hundredweight. This price is low. If this bill goes into effect the corporation will declare an emergency as to both wheat and hogs. That is a certainty. The ratio price on hogs will be approximately $11.50 per hundredweight. The increase will be $4.50 per hundredweight. We produced in 1923 11,182,000,000 pounds of hogs. Of this total production we consumed ourselves 10,248,000,000 pounds. The consumption of pork in 1923 per capita was 91.4 pounds. The advance is $4.50 per hundredweight, or 4½ cents per pound. This means an increase per individual in this country during the year of $4.10, or $20.50 per family.

Is the consumer going to stand for this?

Suppose the beef market should become depressed and the corporation should find and declare an emergency as to beef. Think of the great added cost to the consumers of this country in such a case, for we are the great beef-consuming people of the world.

When we think of the consumer let us also bear in mind that not only would the price of the basic commodity upon which an emergency had been declared rise but that prices would advance proportionately on all competitive commodities and the products, by-products, derivatives, and competitive substitutes thereof, for under the tariff provisions requiring prohibitive duty during an emergency there could be no importations whatever.

What is the consumer going to do when wheat goes up, our products increase in price, and the prices of all derivatives are in hand? What will the consumer do when he finds pork going up 4½ cents per pound? What will the housewife say when all of the derivatives thereof and the competitive substitutes therefor will advance in price? There can be no doubt but what that would further increase the cost of living. Then will come the demand for increased wages to meet the higher cost of living. In justice to the wage earner in the cities the increase is granted. This in itself will increase the all-commodities price and result in increasing the ratio price. The new ratio price being above the old, it is above the price the corporation is paying for wheat. It then automatically raises the domestic price. This in turn further increases the cost of living, necessitating further increases in wages, and so the vicious circle enlarges and enlarges only to finally burst, with disaster to all concerned.

Indirectly it is a measure to fix wages by legislation. Diocletian fixed the price of wheat, pork, and other basic commodities. He also fixed the wages of artisans. Unskilled labor received 15 cents per day. Carpenters were paid 30 cents per day. He did it directly and failed. This bill, if it works, will do it just as effectually, and history will then repeat itself. The workman, like the farmer, is concerned not so much with his actual wage in dollars and cents as he is in the purchasing power of that wage. In what terms can he exchange it for other commodities for himself and his family? That is what concerns him.

If this bill works, there can be no question but that it will materially decrease the purchasing power of the wage earner. He will not be able to buy as much flour for a dollar, neither will he be able to buy as much pork as he can at the present time. Any bill which does this decreases wages, no matter by what name it is called.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] offered a chart showing the advances during the past 10 years both in wages and in agricultural products. He said he did not want to bring wages down, but he did want to bring the price of farm products up. His reasoning was specious, for with the increase of the price of commodities comes a corresponding decrease in the purchasing power of the wage earner's dollar. If commodities go up and wages remain the same, the purchasing power of the wage earner's dollar is decreased to just that extent. If, therefore, the purchasing power of his wage is to remain the same, it must be increased. In this event the disparity now present will continue. Both will be merely on a higher level. This will not help the farmer, neither will it be of benefit to the consumer. It will be further noted from this chart that prices of agricultural commodities commenced to rise before wages, and that the rise was more rapid and pronounced. It is my observation that commodity prices always change more quickly than wages. The chart shows a general downward tendency of wages, and a rising tendency of commodity prices. This is the law of supply and demand working. We should let it proceed. If we interfere, we can only aggravate.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this is, from the standpoint of the consumer, a "heads I lose and tails you win" proposition. The price of a commodity is down, an emergency is declared, and the ratio price fixed which increases the domestic price of say, wheat, 50 cents per bushel. As a result, the producer gets the benefit of the same purchasing power that he had in pre-war years. Now suppose an extended drouth comes in some portion of the world and decreases the supply of wheat, or suppose there is a war or some other catastrophe materially increasing the demand for wheat so that the price of wheat rises to a point far in excess of what it was in pre-war years. There is nothing in this bill to protect the consumer from any such situation. This bill enables the producer to get his pre-war price, but if anything of this kind which I have related should occur it in no wise protects the consumer in the pre-war purchasing price of his dollar. Again let me say, that from the standpoint of the consumer, this bill is a "heads I lose and tails you win" proposition.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this Congress or another Congress has any business legislating along these lines. I do not think that we ought to legislate so as to make the wage earners' dollar buy less or more of the farmers' products. This is something that can only be adjusted through the laws of supply and demand. Some of you, my colleagues, may differ with me as to this. In fact, those of you who advocate the passage of this bill must differ with me. I think, however, we can agree on this and that is that we ought not to legislate so as to injure both producer and consumer. It is my judgment that that is just what this bill will do if enacted into law. I believe it will place the farmer in a worse position than he is in to-day. If so it can not help but injure the man in the cities. The two are interdependent upon each other.

I shall now seek to demonstrate that this bill can not aid the farmer, and it can only succeed in aggravating his present condition and making it worse. I think we must agree that the primary cause of the wheat farmer's condition is the excess of supply over demand. It would seem to follow, therefore, that any remedy to meet this condition should involve a decrease in production. This legislation will raise the domestic price from the present figure of about $1 per bushel to $1.50 per bushel. This in itself is an invitation to increase production. If, with our present surplus of 200,000,000 bushels now selling at an inadequate price in Europe we increase production and thereby increase that surplus, how can it do other than aggravate the present situation?

Mr. Chairman, valorization schemes fail, and always will fail if production is not controlled. If this bill is to pass, the corporation should have authority to curtail production. Why is this not provided for? The reason is apparent. How many of the farmers of the country would stand to have some bureaucrat tell them whether they would be permitted to plant wheat or not; and if so, what kind and how many acres? Schemes of this kind have been tried before. The attempt is to fix prices and levels above the natural market. This in itself is an invitation to overstimulation and the product of the commodity so sought to be benefited. As a consequence a goodly percentage of producers, offered a guaranteed market with prices above what they had been receiving, will devote an increased portion of their time to increasing the production of the commodity enjoying this privilege. The result is soon a further excess of supply. This excess must be allowed to pile up or be dumped abroad at a further depreciated price. Australia has had one of these valorization schemes pertaining to sugar. The Government has been left with a great surplus of sugar which it can not dispose of because of the depressed market, and which it is retaining at the expense of the taxpayer.

What is the consumer of this country going to say when he pays $11.50 per hundredweight for his pork, and finds it selling abroad for $5 per hundredweight? What is he going to say when wheat costs his miller $1.50, whereas it costs the foreign miller 75 cents per bushel? He will then rise up in his wrath. There are far more consumers than there are producers, and if there is going to be legislative price fixing and the consumer takes a hand directly that price will be fixed in the interest of the majority, and that certainly will not be in the interest of the farmer. Prices ought not to be fixed or controlled by legislative assemblies or by any other method except through the law of supply and demand. It is through prices that the people of any community make known their needs of particular goods. It can be done in no other way.

I have endeavored to show that this overproduction or excess of supply over demand has been the greatest factor in bringing about this disparity of prices as between the price that the farmer receives and the price that he has to pay. The statistics introduced by the proponents show that the disparity is gradually getting less. Anything which puts a premium upon further increasing the supply will but further decrease the price on the farm commodity and make the disparity that much greater.

The third cause the Secretary described as maladjustments which exist in the industry itself. I shall now take up the question of whether or not this bill will reach that cause.

The Secretary refers, on page 68 of his report, as follows:

> A number of factors within the wheat industry itself also have contributed to the present wheat crisis. Lands on which wheat can not under present economic conditions be grown profitably have been brought into cultivation in some regions.

This bill will not reach this situation. It will only aggravate it, for it places a premium by adding an inducement for producing more wheat.

I quote further from this report:

> Furthermore, high prices and the appeal for larger food supplies during the war induced many farmers to expand unduly their farm operations and to incur liabilities which since the break in wheat prices they have been unable to carry.

I can see nothing in this bill to meet that difficulty.

I quote further:

> The financial distress which has come as a result of these various causes is considerably aggravated by losses which are due to inefficient farm management.
>
> The one-crop system that has been practiced by so many wheat farmers has depleted the soil, infected the land with weeds, resulting in a marked decreased in yields and a substantial lowering of the quality and condition of the yield.

This bill will not do anything other than to aggravate this by providing an inducement for increasing the acreage in the price per bushel, which in no wise depends upon efficient farming.

Instead of recommending or countenancing legislation of this character the Department of Agriculture ought to advise the farmer as to the facts and tell him the truth. They ought in every practical way assist him in giving him every kind of valuable information as to world-crop conditions, average, and production in the various countries of the world, and all other information necessary to the intelligent planning, planting, and production of his crop. In our part of the country the wheat acreage did not shrink back to a pre-war basis until practically five years after the armistice.

During the war, it will be recalled, the Department of Agriculture issued a program recommending wheat acreage by counties. After the armistice this recommendation was not recalled, neither was the farmer advised of the probability of what Europe would do in the way of renewing production and increasing consumption. The farmer should have been told that conditions had changed, or would very soon change; that if he maintained his wheat acreage on a war basis, prices would certainly fall. The department has given out information of this character in our part of the country pertaining to flax. The information gave the average imports for the 10 preceding years. The probable domestic requirements for the year following in this information, as I understand it, was disseminated through county agents. The farmers were quick to utilize the information furnished to them. The flax acreage was increased approximately 75 per cent. Production increased approximately 66⅔ per cent. The value of the crop was increased substantially 75 per cent. Total production was increased from 11,383,000 to 18,901,000 bushels. The added income to the farmer was $15,000,000. This is showing the farmer how to help himself. This plan should have been pursued following the close of the war in reference to wheat. It is not too late to do it now. The scheme embodied in this bill can not help but increase production and aggravate the present existing situation.

It is admitted by some that this bill is unsound in principle, but that it should pass, because we have protected the manufacturer and labor with the protective tariff and labor with an immigration restriction law. The immigration law does incidentally protect labor and its wages. The primary purpose of restricting immigration was not to protect labor, but to protect American institutions by preventing the bringing in of people here too fast to be assimilated. As for the policy of protection, that applies to the farmer as well as to the manufacturer. We all know how promptly the emergency tariff bill was passed following the inauguration of President Harding. This was confined to agricultural products. Furthermore, the producers of this country practically wrote their own schedules in the Fordney-McCumber bill. It was only the other day when the duty on wheat was raised under the flexible provisions of that bill from 30 cents to 42 cents per bushel. It has practically eliminated the importation of wheat. The farmer gets the same protection that the manufacturing exporter gets.

Furthermore, it might be well for us to bear in mind what the President had to say in his annual message about agricultural relief. I quote:

> No complicated scheme of relief, no plan for Government fixing of prices, no resort to the Public Treasury, will be of any permanent value in establishing agriculture. Simple and direct methods put into operation by the farmer himself are the only real sources for restoration.

This plan was then under consideration generally through the public press. It fixes prices, requires money from the Treasury, and involves no end of complications.

Mr. Chairman, I come from a city district. In my district—the greatest milling center in the world—we grind millions of bushels of wheat annually, much of which is exported. Yet this is but a small percentage of the commerce and industry in my district. All of this commerce and industry, however, is dependent upon the prosperity of the farmer in the adjoining territory. He is our customer and we are his customers. When one prospers the other prospers. When adversity comes to one it necessarily follows as to the other. Business in my city is affected by the depressed agricultural conditions. Great merchandising stores have vast sums of money out on credit which at present can not be paid. Banks and trust companies have made mortgage loans upon farms where in many instances payments of principal and interest are not being met. If the people of my district were of the opinion that the enactment of this legislation would be of real worth and benefit to the farmer, they would be for it. If I likewise felt so, I would be for it; but I can not support it, believing it to be unsound in principle, unworkable in practice, detrimental to the very people it is designed to help, and perilous from an economic and political standpoint. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CLAGUE].

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, the financial condition of the average farmer in the United States is not good; he has been steadily losing since 1920. How to improve that condition is one of the vital questions of to-day. Some people declare that the only farmers who are not prospering are those living in sections where diversified farming is not carried on. I know from actual experience that farmers are not getting a reasonable return for their labor or on their investments. This condition now prevails amongst the wheat farmers, stockmen, and farmers in most sections where diversified farming is carried on. It also includes the dairy farmer in many sections. Where I live, in southern Minnesota, most farmers diversify, and a large per cent of them have not been able to pay all interest on necessary small loans, interest on their mortgages, or pay all their taxes in the past three years. Many of our hard-working farmers, who have been careful and economical in their purchases and expenses, who were out of debt four years ago, are to-day heavily in debt and living partly off their principal accumulated prior to 1920. By reason of having to hire high-priced help, pay interest charges on necessary loans, paying high taxes, and having to purchase necessary machinery at present prices to carry on and conduct his farm, and by reason of the high cost of nearly all the things he has to buy the average farmer has not been able to make ends meet.

This is the condition of most of our farmers. It is not sectional but general, and particularly so in all of the Northwestern States. This condition prevails even in sections that have had good crops during the past four years. What is the cause? In my opinion it is due to the low purchasing power of the farmer's dollar. The farmer has to produce his commodities on a war-time cost basis, has to purchase most all of his necessary articles on a war-time basis, but has had to sell his commodities at a pre-war price. Between 1905 and 1914, inclusive, the farmer's dollar was worth 100 per cent, but now his dollar is worth about 60 per cent of what it was during this basic period 1905–1914. The following list of articles which the farmer has to purchase has risen in price since 1914 and speaks for itself:

Labor, more than 100 per cent.
Cloth and clothing, more than 101 per cent.
Fuel and lighting, more than 67 per cent.
Metals and metal products, more than 41 per cent.
Building material, more than 81 per cent.
Furniture and house furnishings, more than 76 per cent.

But farm commodities have only advanced in price since 1914 on an average of 17 per cent. It will be seen from the foregoing that all necessary articles which the farmer has to purchase has advanced on the average of more than 60 per cent, while farm commodities which the farmer has to sell have increased not over 17 per cent. To-day it takes practically twice as many pounds of grain of any kind, twice as many pounds of fat cattle or fat hogs as it did during the average of the basic period given in this bill to purchase machinery, fuel, building material, household goods, or to hire farm help, or to pay the interest, taxes, or past indebtedness as it did in 1913 and 1914.

Practically every article the farmer has to purchase is protected by a tariff and made by high-priced employees protected by restricted immigration laws. The freight carriers are protected by laws allowing carriers a reasonable return on their investments; money loaners are allowed by law to charge reasonable interest rates, and by reason of such laws the manufacturer is not compelled to have his surplus manufactured articles fix his home price; the laborer in shops of railroads or mechanics do not have to compete with foreign labor, but the price received for the surplus which the farmer has to ship abroad determines his home price of that particular commodity. By having to sell their surplus on the world markets our farmers are now receiving a pre-war price for many of their commodities, thereby taking twice as many bushels of grain and nearly twice as much of everything he produces to hire help or purchase the necessaries of life. All other classes have been helped much more by our laws than the farmers. Our farmers are paying for their necessaries the highest prices paid in the world and have to pay a higher wage for help than the farmer of any other country, but his surplus products have to compete with the low-priced farm products of other countries that are produced by low-priced labor.

The farmer of the United States has been the burden bearer for most of our people. He has been paying the bills.

The Committee on Agriculture has held many hearings on proposed farm-relief legislation. Evidence has been given before our committee by farmers, business men, leaders of farm organizations, and labor leaders, from many States, all advocating that some farm-relief legislation is necessary and should be passed by this Congress. Our committee has given faithful, honest, and diligent study to this question. I believe I can say that it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that it is not more credit that is wanted, that more credit would be an injury instead of a benefit. What the farmer wants is a chance to get out of debt, not some scheme to get him in deeper, is the agreed opinion of the committee and of everyone who appeared before it; that the one relief needed to help our farmers to-day is a better price for all the commodities the farmer has to sell—a price that is on a comparative price basis with the things he has to buy. With this object in view much time and much study has been given by the different members of our committee to the various bills proposing farm relief. It was only after a full and fair hearing and mature deliberation that the McNary-Haugen bill was favorably reported. We got the best judgment upon it from the most practical farmers and business men. Many changes were made in the bill from the original draft to simplify and bring forth a workable law. Our committee realized that we could not pass at this time any law that would bring down the prices of the necessaries the farmer has to buy, nor lower the price of labor to a pre-war basis, that the only thing that could be done would be to raise the price of farm commodities to a comparable price with such things as the farmer has to buy and the present labor wage. This bill does not in any way try to destroy the other fellow. It is an honest effort to advance the price plane of farm commodities in the United States so that the farmer's dollar will have the same purchasing power it had during the years 1905–1914, inclusive. If this plan had been in force in 1923, the ratio price based on the 10-year basic period of 1905 and 1914 would have given our farmers in cash at least 35 cents a bushel more for their wheat, 15 cents a bushel more for corn, $3 per hundred more for their fat hogs, $1 per hundred more for their fat cattle. It would have made the farmer's dollar worth nearly 100 per cent instead of less than 60 per cent, as it is to-day.

The opponents say that the bill is not workable and it is to that feature of the bill that I now turn. To understand the workability of the plan we must first understand what it is designed to do and just how it provides what shall be done. This plan sets up a corporation capitalized through a subscription by the United States which is controlled and operated by a board of directors in the same manner and in the same way that the ordinary corporation is managed. Its purpose is to cure a condition that now exists whereby agricultural products produced in excess of the requirements of our own people are fixed to sell on account of such excess or surplus at a price that rests on the basic price of like commodities in the competitive markets of the world, thereby nullifying to the farmer the benefits that other American institutions receive through the operation of the principle of protection for our high standard of living, thus bringing down the American standard of living of the American farmer to that of the low standard of the peasant of Europe. This plan in the result of its operation segregates the surplus portion of our domestic requirements and permits the farmers to sell the surplus in the markets of the world at the world's competitive price, and as far as this surplus is concerned the operations under the plan will be similar to what they are to-day. But the benefits and advantages to the farmer are provided by permitting him to sell his domestic portion—that is, the portion required for home consumption—in the markets of the United States at a price that is in keeping with American standards and the American principle of protection—a price measured on the basis of equality with other American-produced commodities. The corporation provided for in this plan enters into the markets of the United States in the same manner that a similar private corporation would, and becomes a competitive purchaser for specific farm products upon which an emergency has been declared at a price that will restore the pre-war purchasing power these products had during the basic period of 1905–1914, inclusive. The corporation's activities are limited to the minimum required to restore and maintain that price.

The setting up of this ratio price is not left to the discretion of a friend or foe of the farmers, but established through the use of statistical data compiled by a Government agency using a formula specifically referred to and made a part of the bill. When an emergency is declared and the price determined the corporation would become an active buyer in basic markets to the extent only as necessary to maintain the market at that ratio price. In wheat, for example, the price in all the markets of the United States, with but few exceptions, rests and depends upon the world's price or the Liverpool price, as it is generally referred to, less the cost of delivery at that market. Under the workings and operations of this bill the price will rest on the ratio price established in the basic markets through competitive buying by this corporation, which in all probability will not need to extend beyond the markets or the United States ports of export, and the price available there will be reflected throughout the United States into all terminal and primary markets.

Export operations, as are now conducted, in so far as methods of operations vary and grades are concerned, are well defined and easily determined, and but a comparative few variations and grades are dealt in; therefore, it would be a simple operation to establish the ratio price for basic grades and basic varieties and provide for purchase as required to maintain the market at the basic price. In marketing operations as conducted at the present time, variations in grades and quality are purchased at a price above or below the basic price as the variation in grade or quality may be. This established method of purchasing of grades and varieties above or below the basic price or ratio price will be the method under which the corporation provided by the plan will operate. It only involves the carrying out of a simple business transaction in a business manner. The ratio price at which the corporation becomes active as a buyer will provide the minimum basic price in all markets, for the simple reason that there will be no sellers at a price less than it is known that there is a buyer equipped and willing to buy it. But this does not necessarily mean that there will be nothing but higher prices in various markets than this basic ratio price. There will be no fixed price. Markets are sustained at the ratio price through the competitive action of this corporation, and not otherwise, and as soon as the surplus of any emergency-declared commodity tributary to any certain market is absorbed, the operation of ordinary competitive methods will undoubtedly cause the price to vary and range at times to a higher level than the ratio figure.

It is the contention of those opposed to the bill that the law, if passed, will be unworkable. This type of statement has been made with respect to almost every important piece of legislation in the history of the United States. Just a few illustrations will bring the facts to your mind. Most of us will remember how freely it was asserted at the time of their consideration as to each of the following:

1. That the income-tax laws would ruin the country.
2. That the Federal reserve act would destroy the banking system.
3. That the Federal farm loan act would dry up the sources of the farmer's credit.
4. That the meat inspection act would drive the packing industries into bankruptcy.
5. That the cotton futures act would rob the cotton producer of millions of dollars.
6. That the food control act would produce a revolution.
7. That the grain futures act would destroy the grain exchanges and with them the country elevators.
8. That the immigration laws would invite instant and serious retaliation from numerous foreign nations, and could not be administered.
9. That the tariff laws would be unworkable, invidious, ruinous, and likely to provoke countervailing action by other countries.

Coldly analyzed, what are the facts as to all of these statements? Their stimulus rests upon the fact that interests affected by them, no matter how narrow or how broad, have foreseen some degree of inconvenience or some loss of profit to their own particular business so that they have opposed them all in spite of their being for the general welfare.

It is almost an axiom that only a few of the farseeing, constructive, progressive, and wise in any trade and industry are willing to accept suggestions, whether in the form of legislation or otherwise, looking toward changes in their existing status quo.

The grain-futures exchanges of the United States, for instance, have reached a point where the Nation may expect practically nothing from them in the way of improvement. They have become solidified in their way and while performing in many respects a valuable service future changes and improvements will probably have to come from outside stimuli.

APPLYING THE FOREGOING BACKGROUND TO THE M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL, IS THE PLAN WORKABLE?

The statement is constantly made, usually without giving reasons, that the plan created by this bill will not work. Only three reasons have been given, so far as my knowledge extends, as to why it will not work.

1. The farmers will not pay the equalization fee and this will break down the plan.
2. It includes products other than wheat and can not be applied successfully to them; for instance, livestock and/or its products.
3. It will destroy the grain-futures exchanges and thus destroy the opportunity for hedging, thereby ruining the country elevator.

1. The answer to the first statement is that if a farmer can get 35 to 40 cents a bushel more for his wheat under the bill than he can without it he will be very glad to take it, and, in addition, a participation certificate for 10 or 15 cents more, even though he accepts the certificate with the knowledge that its final value depends on the loss in the export market and the expenses of conducting the corporation.

2. The fundamental principles involved in marketing one agricultural product are practically identical with those of marketing others. Necessarily, you do not grind pork out of a flour mill nor flour out of a packing plant, but the forces of competition operate on purchasing and selling in the same manner in both cases.

Hogs are worse off as to price than wheat. They can be handled equally well under the bill. There are two ways in which the situation can be met: The corporation has ample power to enter into contracts for processing, distributing, and selling the products—the corporation bearing the loss from the equalization fund—or it could buy finished exportable products in the form of hams, shoulders, bacon, and lard, and arrange for their exportation and sale through existing foreign outlets of the packers, compensating them for their losses on such products.

The bill is practically applicable to every product of which we export a surplus, although only certain specific necessities of life are named therein, namely, wheat, flour, rice, corn, wool, cattle, sheep, swine, or any food product of cattle, sheep, or swine.

3. There would continue to be the same need for a hedging market for the miller and the grain dealer as now exists. To the holder of long contracts the ratio price at which the corporation bought the export surplus would practically constitute a "stop-loss" order. The price level, of course, would not necessarily be satisfactory to the speculative short seller, as in his case it would be a "stop-profit" device. However, the bill is intended to help the farmer, and the speculative short seller is very often anything but help to the farmer.

Inasmuch as no maximum price is fixed, future trading would continue, but above the level of the ratio price. If a miller sold a baker 100,000 barrels of flour for May delivery, he might still wish to buy wheat futures to hedge his flour sale. Similarly, if a grain buyer bought grain, as he will undoubtedly continue to do, he would wish to hedge that purchase by a sale in the future market. Where there is an insurable risk to be taken, enterprises will be found to take that risk for a reasonable compensation.

When the price of a commodity nears the ratio price speculative buyers will probably appear in good numbers, confident that domestic market forces will elevate the price to a reasonable margin above the ratio level. There will be buyers and sellers in every market above the ratio price, because shortened domestic supplies will create fluctuation which truly will not be as great as heretofore. This suggests that scalpers and other more purely speculative traders will, to some extent, disappear from the market.

Only a fixed price at which the whole crop will be bought would of necessity destroy future trading. Then no one would require a hedge and no one would be tempted to speculate.

The McNary-Haugen bill does not fix or guarantee prices. It merely lays down a rule of conduct by which the export corporation must be guided in buying the export surplus, or such quantity of the crop of any year as is necessary to maintain prices at or near the ratio price level.

DOES THE PLAN REALLY INVOLVE ANYTHING THAT IS NOVEL?

Let us see what is necessary in the case of wheat and its products or hogs and their products in applying the principles of this bill.

1. To determine in an approximate way the surplus available for export.

As we know, within very reasonable limits, the population of the United States and its average per capita consumption each year, we can, without going further, after the regular crop reports are issued, determine with a sufficient degree of accuracy for the purposes of this bill the approximate extent of the export surplus to be bought by the commission. The purpose must be to set the amount high enough, as buying can be stopped at any moment if too great elevation of price results.

2. To determine the price that these products should be now in order to have the same purchasing power in terms of other commodities as they had on the average in the 10-year period from 1905 to 1914.

This is a matter of simple arithmetic. All of the data are collected every month of the year, and have been for decades, by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of what is now the Department of Labor, which also makes most of the necessary computations involved. Those not now made are not difficult and can and would be made promptly by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Labor as required by the bill. Certainly any simple problem in arithmetic can be solved if its necessary elements are in our possession, as they are in this case.

3. To buy in the United States wheat and its products and pork and its products.

It seems almost silly to say that if you have the money that you can buy practically anything that you want if some one else has the commodity and wants to sell it. This is exactly what the situation is. The grower has the product and wants to dispose of it and the corporation will have the money to buy it.

4. To have raw material (wheat or live hogs) converted into finished product for export.

We will have a corporation amply capitalized with ready cash in its treasury and empowered to make contracts or, if necessary, even to lease or otherwise acquire the rights of operation of elevators, mills, packing houses, and so forth. It will not be necessary to do any of the latter, because, with its money and its power to contract, the corporation can go out and hire existing millers and packers to process all of the raw materials that it buys.

Our mills are only working between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of capacity and our packing plants probably not over 50 or 60 per cent of capacity. Is there a corporation in the country with a management so stupid that it would refuse to serve the United States export corporation to be established under this act for pay?

5. To ship products within the United States and to foreign countries.

With money to pay freight, with railroads eager for freight to haul, and with hundreds upon hundreds of idle ships anxious to get cargoes, who would say that this corporation would find any difficulty with respect to this feature of its necessary operation? As a matter of fact, practically all of the product will be handled by the agencies that now handle it, with agreements suitably drawn to protect the farmer and at the same time to give a reasonable earning to those who serve him through the agricultural export corporation.

6. To sell in foreign countries.

We now have a corporation possessed of wheat, flour, hams, bacon, lard, and other products that are used all over the world. It wants to sell these products, and is protected against undue loss by a fund that it has created through the collection of equalization fees. It is the universal observation of market agencies that if you have a product to sell, and will price it reasonably, all things considered, you will always find a buyer.

7. To distribute over all producers the expenses and losses made through the segregation of the export surplus and its sale in the foreign market at a price below the prevailing ratio prices.

This, in substance, is exactly what is done now by thousands of cooperative marketing associations. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that $1,000,000,000 worth of farm products in the form of wheat, dairy products, livestock, and fruits and vegetables are handled on this basis to-day. The major part of the sale price is paid to the grower by his cooperative immediately after the sale has taken place.

A specified percentage is witheld in the treasury of the organization until the end of each operating period, be it one month, three months, or any other length of time, from which all expenses and losses are deducted ratably. The residue of this fund at the end of the time is prorated to each member in exact ratio with the amount of business he did with the cooperative organization. These payments are known commonly as "patronage dividends."

As a cold matter of fact, there is absolutely nothing that is novel in a business sense in the plan proposed by this legislation. Opponents are merely taking advantage of the fact that its provisions are not well understood to throw a smoke screen around the whole proposition, and thus befog its proper understanding.

One illustration will serve to show those who wish to give fair-minded consideration to the problem how readily this legislation can be enforced. For convenience of consideration we need look at the whole matter from just two angles—first, from that of an agency, the United States export corporation, created to buy in the domestic market and to sell in the foreign markets the export surplus of our export farm products; second, a device that will keep out of the United States the basic agricultural commodities of other countries, for to permit them to come in would break down the plan just as the admission of products of foreign countries would break down the protective tariff law as accomplished by tariff duties in general schedules.

HOW THE BILL WILL OPERATE ON HOGS

First, the corporation will determine that an emergency exists; second, it will make its preliminary arrangements; third, it will issue a finding to the President; fourth, the President will issue his proclamation; fifth, the corporation will publish ratio prices, designate ratio periods and basis markets; and sixth, the corporation will begin to operate as any private corporation would operate to handle the same type of transactions. The second and sixth are the steps that require the greatest attention.

I. DETERMINING THE SPECIAL EMERGENCY

The finding of a general emergency is declared by the Congress in the bill itself. Special emergencies require the finding that there is a surplus of hogs available for export and that the ratio price would be higher than the prevailing domestic price. These facts are so thoroughly known that no extended investigation is required upon which to base the finding to the President.

II. MAKING PRELIMINARY ARRANGEMENTS

This will include, at least, the following:

1. Determining what shall be the basis market;

2. In what other markets the corporation should operate to accomplish the purposes of the bill;

3. Preparing the contracts needed to provide for processing hogs purchased by the corporation.

4. Preparing contracts under which the exporters (packers, domestic exporters, foreign importers) will dispose of the products arising from the corporation's purchases.

5. Put out bids to execute contracts contingent on the actual declaration of the emergency by the President.

1. The basis market for hogs is readily determined. It is Chicago, where over a period of years between 20 and 25 per cent of all hogs killed under Federal inspection are slaughtered. This will be the basis market used in the computation of the ratio price.

Chicago kills between 12,000,000 and 15,000,000 hogs per annum. This on the average is more than twice the kill of its nearest competitor—Kansas City—so there can be no doubt as to the propriety under the law of selecting Chicago.

2. It is probable that if the corporation confined its purchasing, which, of course, will be done through the existing market agencies to Chicago, the price effects would be communicated throughout the markets of the country. However, nothing should be left to chance in this matter, so it is likely that branches would be established in the 12 most important markets for hogs in the country. The following selection illustrates how great a percentage of the total kill can be covered in this way, assuming the corporation chooses the following list:

Average number of head of cattle, hogs, and sheep combined, slaughtered at cities listed, from 1907 to 1923

City	Total	Percentage of total United States inspected slaughter
Chicago	12,334,060	20.71
Kansas City	5,637,493	9.47
Omaha	4,404,031	7.40
St. Joseph	2,734,749	4.59
St. Louis (including East St. Louis)	4,028,287	6.77
Sioux City	1,545,322	2.59
Fort Worth	1,329,039	2.23
St. Paul	1,821,866	3.06
New York (including Jersey City)	3,931,403	6.60
Indianapolis	1,708,083	2.87
Boston	1,621,692	2.72
San Francisco	401,673	.67
Louisville	164,829	.28
Denver	402,998	.68
Grand total above cities	42,065,525	70.64
Total United States inspected slaughter	59,548,768	100.00

Please note that in the foregoing table all animals slaughtered under Federal inspection are included, cattle and sheep as well as hogs. If an emergency is declared on cattle, the same markets would no doubt be used and no duplication would necessarily result.

Fourteen markets control over 70 per cent of the inspected slaughter of the United States. Operation in this number would certainly prove completely effective for the purposes of the bill. However, certain geographic areas might not reflect fully the influence of the ratio price. Therefore, the corporation might decide to add operating offices for the following:

(a) At Seattle, to handle operations when necessary in Seattle, Portland, Tacoma, and Spokane;

(b) At Atlanta, to control the situation at southeastern packing points; and

(c) At New Orleans.

COOPERATION OF PACKERS

The packers will cooperate by reason of self-interest. They are opposed to the bill partly because of misunderstanding, partly because of unwillingness to change existing methods of doing business, and partly because they consider they were unfairly treated during Government control in the war period.

Contracts under this bill must be voluntary, and the packers need not participate in the export business unless they wish to do so. As there are between 275 and 325 exporters of meat products, including packers and others—but chiefly packers—they will wish to continue in this business, particularly as the corporation will undoubtedly be forced to give them a fair remuneration.

In any event competition will be found sufficient for the purpose of handling the one-eighth of our hog products that are exported, as is disclosed by the following list, showing the number of enterprises engaged in packing and slaughtering at the most important of the cities in the list:

City and number of enterprises

Chicago	43
Kansas City	12
Omaha	9
St. Joseph	4
St. Louis (including East St. Louis)	30
Sioux City	6
Fort Worth	3
St. Paul	11
New York (including Jersey City)	21
Indianapolis	13
Boston	9
San Francisco	13
Louisville	6
Denver	9

The enterprises in the list include both large and small, but can leave no reasonable doubt as to the sufficiency and availability of competitive facilities for handling the products of the corporation.

It is always necessary to remember that there will be no reason for existing agencies not to continue to do the work they are now doing and have done throughout their existence.

3. The corporation has ample power to make contracts and may lease plants for processing products.

It would be unwise to declare a special emergency and then to begin to make preparations. These must be made in advance. The corporation must be completely ready to operate the day the proclamation takes effect.

The bill utilizes existing private business to do everything that can possibly be done by it in order to interfere the least possible with the normal functioning of commerce in basic agricultural commodities.

According to the president of Armour & Co. in a printed statement put out by that company, existing plants and facilities were enlarged during the war beyond the necessities of normal times, that it has not been possible to reduce overhead in keeping with reduction of business from war-time peak, and that operations are going on at considerably less than war capacity, which he states can not be economically done.

A conference with the representatives of the packing industry, which is over 90 per cent represented in the Institute of American Meat Packers, will enable the corporation quickly to make all necessary contractual arrangements for processing.

4. The large packers are the greatest exporters, but nevertheless there are 211 additional exporting firms, and with all of these there is opportunity to make contracts for handling the export surplus. They handle it now and will handle it under the McNary-Haugen bill, as it will show them an earning.

These contracts will not be difficult to prepare. Uniform export contracts are already in use and available. Conferences with the enterprises that are affected will very quickly enable this part of the preparation to be made.

However, 348 slaughterers have applied for and received the inspection of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and hence are permitted to engage in the export trade. No less than 155 plants actually do engage in exporting.

The gentleman from Wisconsin on Tuesday night stated that only the Big Five engage in exporting. As a matter of fact, there are no less than 302 exporters shipping meat products at present, either of their own manufacture or purchased by them for the purpose of export from the United States. The export certificates show this.

Necessarily, the Big Five are the most important exporters, just as they are the most important domestic slaughterers, but why say they are the only exporters when there are so many more?

5. Before the corporation is ready to issue its finding to the President, and he to issue his proclamation, the various contracts mentioned under 3 and 4 must be completely executed, with only one contingent clause, namely, that the President do subsequently declare the emergency in preparation for which the contracts have been prepared. If in spite of the facts stated under II above it is impossible to make contracts with the packers, no proclamation would ever be issued.

That any industry in the United States would so flaunt the honest and sincere effort of the Nation to give relief to its most important basic industry is utterly inconceivable. It is particularly inconceivable that the packing industry, which is so largely bound up as to well-being with the producer, would take a position so stupid and so self-destructive.

III. ISSUANCE OF FINDING

When all of the foregoing details have been taken care of the corporation will notify the President in writing that a special emergency exists as to hogs, reciting necessary facts upon which he may base his proclamation.

IV. RATIO PRICE, PERIOD, AND BASIS MARKETS

At the same time the presidential proclamation is issued the corporation is required to publish the ratio price of hogs. At the same time it must designate the period to be known as the "ratio period" during which the ratio price will prevail. It will probably be a monthly price, though the corporation is permitted under the law to determine what period is best adapted to the needs of each basic commodity.

The market upon which the ratio price is based must also be designated at the same time, and in this designated market the purchases of the corporation for the commodity or grade must be the ratio price. In all of the other markets that may be included in the operations of the corporation a price representing the usual commercial differences between that market and the basis market will be paid. In other words, competition will govern, as is now the case.

ACTUAL OPERATIONS

To make a clear picture of the operations about six different steps must be kept in mind. They are as follows:

1. Determination of amount of equalization fee.
2. Collection of equalization fee.
3. Purchase of live hogs at markets.
4. Processing by packers.
5. Sales in foreign markets.
6. Distribution of equalization dividends.

1. DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF EQUALIZATION FEE

During the seven years just before the war—1907 to 1913—we exported 1,073,000,000 pounds of pork products on the average. Our average total production in the same years was 8,847,000,000 pounds. This means that we exported 12.1 per cent of our total production, the equivalent in weight of 6,700,000 hogs.

The ratio price of hogs at Chicago last month, computed according to the bill, would have been $11.25 per hundred pounds. The actual price was $7.36 per hundred pounds. The latter represents the world price. The difference is approximately $4.

Our problem is to fix an equalization fee that will cover expenses of operation and losses in buying at the ratio and selling at the world price. This fee must be set high enough to insure the money of the United States invested in the corporation's capital stock against impairment. Safety will require fixing the equalization fee on the safe side, which will create a balance to be distributed to the growers at the end of each operation period.

As we use at home seven-eighths of our total pork crop, we export one-eighth; hence the difference of approximately $4 a hundredweight on the one-eighth we export will amount to about 50 cents per hundred pounds on the total production.

To put it another way:

Seven parts sold at $11.25 equals $78.75, 1 part sold at $7.36 equals $7.36; total, $86.75. Average price for total $86.75 divided by 8 equals $10.75.

$11.25 ratio price per hundred pounds.
10.75 average price per hundred pounds.

.50

Amount per hundred pounds necessary to make up loss on export fraction.

So a deduction of 50 cents from the ratio price per 100 pounds would cover the loss of the export corporation in selling one-eighth of the total production at a loss of $4 per hundredweight. These calculations are not intended to be final, but merely to clearly show the principles involved and how readily they can be worked.

In order without fail to safeguard the corporation's capital, suppose that the equalization fee be set at $1 per hundredweight to cover loss in exporting the surplus and cost of operation. This fee can be set high safely, since any excess over the amount actually necessary will be repaid to the producer in the form of a dividend at the close of the operation period.

Remember that the one-eighth exported determines the price of the whole hog crop.

2. COLLECTION OF EQUALIZATION FEE

Now, how will the plan work? Suppose that John Jones has 70 hogs to sell, weighing, say, 15,000 pounds. The principle is the same whether he sells few or many hogs. Taking the ratio price as $11.25 and the equalization fee as $1 per hundredweight, Jones will receive $11.25 less $1, or $10.25 per hundredweight in cash, approximately $3 more than he would receive without the bill. For his 15,000 pounds, which is an average car lot, this would amount to $450. In other words, he would get $1,537.50, instead of $1,104, which he would have gotten at $7.36, the market price without the bill.

In addition to the cash the buyer would give Jones a formal receipt, which he would be authorized to issue by the export corporation, showing that Jones has paid an equalization fee of $1 per 100 on 15,000 pounds of hogs, the face of this receipt will be $150. What does this receipt mean to Jones? It means that he will share in whatever is left of this fee after the expenses and losses on the one-eighth export fraction in handling pork are met.

The corporation will have no effect on the usual marketing costs. The one additional expense due to its operation will be that arising from the cost of the service it must perform in separating the surplus from the total crop, guiding it through existing channels out of the country, collecting the equalization fee, and distributing any balance left in the equalization fund.

Suppose that it cost the corporation 25 cents per hundredweight on the whole crop to perform this service; this estimate is far too high, for 25 cents per hundredweight on all hogs would mean over $22,000,000, an amount far in excess of what would be required for these limited purposes; but, taking this figure and adding it to the 50 cents per hundredweight to cover loss on the export part, we get a total of 75 cents per hundredweight. The equalization fee collected is $1 per hundredweight. The difference is 25 cents, and this would be prorated to all producers on surrender of their receipts at the close of the ratio price period.

3. PURCHASE OF LIVE HOGS AT MARKETS

At the 14 markets named above, the corporation would keep a supervisory office with an accounting and recording staff, which would issue its instructions to buyers at such a rate as would sustain the level of the ratio price. These purchases would be made by the packers with whom the contracts for slaughtering and processing were made. There would be no difference in principle from what happens without the McNary-Haugen bill, except that the part bought up by the corporation would be completely removed from any price effect upon the domestic market.

The total amount involved would not be extraordinarily great, as our pre-war average value of pork exports (1905–1914) was less than $102,000,000. In other words, less than $10,000,000 worth a month. The 1923 total was $266,000,000, something over $20,000,000 worth a month to handle. The movement is not uniform, so that the peak requirements will be higher than the monthly average figure, but it will be less business than many individual corporations do in many lines of business.

4. PROCESSING BY PACKERS

Under the contracts entered into before a special emergency has been declared, the purchases made for the corporation's account will be slaughtered, processed, and distributed by the packers through their existing export sales outlets. These contracts will cover every detail necessary to safeguard the corporation—hence the grower whose creature it will be jointly with the Government—from avoidable enhancement of losses.

5. SALES IN FOREIGN MARKETS

Eight hundred and sixty-three establishments are under the Federal meat inspection law; 348 of these conduct slaughtering. Of the 348 establishments that do slaughtering, 155, including 91 owned by the Big Five packers, conduct an export business.

Of the 863, 302 in all, including slaughterers, engage in exporting. In other words, 147 enterprises conduct export of livestock and meat products in addition to those who are slaughterers. If it seems necessary, in order to get results and to do justice, contracts for handling the product in the foreign market will be made with the 302 exporters.

Under the Edge and Webb-Pomerene laws corporations could be organized by the packers and exporters to handle the product controlled by the export corporation. The exporters could submit their offers from purchasers abroad to the sales supervision department of the export corporation or the corporation could sell the exportable products on a parity with world prices and let the exporters take complete charge of the product from this point. This would involve putting them under bond to actually ship out the products released to them by the corporation.

As all the existing agencies will be continued in business, no changes will be made in the export outlets except in a bookkeeping or actuarial relationship that will be created by the contracts between the corporation and the exporters. Their foreign staffs will continue to work exactly as at present and under the direction of their employers, without any interference whatsoever from the corporation except to make sure that the full world price is being secured for the American farmers' sales.

6. DISTRIBUTION OF EQUALIZATION FUNDS

As the corporation will necessarily withhold more than actual loss and actual expense for safety's sake, there will be a balance in the pork equalization fund to be prorated back to the producers. Their receipts will show how much they are entitled to. Returning, in conclusion, to our hypothetical farmer, Jones, who got $10.25 per hundredweight in cash when he sold his hogs and a receipt for $1 per hundredweight equalization fee, we can now close out his transaction. One dollar was withheld, but only 75 cents used. He is therefore entitled to 25 cents per hundredweight at the end of the operation period. Jones's total price, then, is $10.25 plus the refund of 25 cents, or $10.50 per hundredweight. This is approximately $3.15 over the price of $7.36, which he would have gotten without the bill. It raises his total return for his 70 hogs to $1,575, as against $1,104, which he would have received if there was no McNary-Haugen bill. The corporation would declare its rate of dividend either in per cent or in cents per hundred pounds; would arrange with banks, post offices, or other suitable institutions to take up the receipts and to issue the cash for them. Jones would turn in his receipt for $150 and receive a dividend of $37.50.

CONCLUSION

Wheat has been mentioned so many times and is believed to be in such distress that many have erroneously concluded that the export corporation plan could not be operated fully as effectively on hogs and cattle as on wheat. The plan can be worked successfully on every crop of which we export a surplus.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the McNary-Haugen bill is a straight, fair plan to return agriculture to its place of equality among the other industries of the Nation. It proposes only that the Government, in the preservation of which the farmers in great measure are now caught in an after-war crisis, shall furnish the working capital for a corporation headed by the Secretary of Agriculture as a revolving fund with which to help themselves back to a comparatively fair level with labor and industry, which have already been helped by adequate legislation.

The voice of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] trembled yesterday when he said this must not be done, because it would cost his working people, with 6,000,000 idle spindles, a little more to live. But is he not willing that the farmers of the West and South shall be taxed high prices for manufactured goods that his people may get high wages and live American lives? His voice would tremble even more should the farmers say out of their necessity, "Very well, then, let us strike down the protection which taxes us for their support, let us throw them into competition with the labor of Europe and South America, as we are thrown in competition with it through the necessity of selling our surplus in the markets of the world," so that, as the gentleman says, nature may take its course and the sacred laws of supply and demand may not be interfered with.

Of course, it costs more to pay decent wages than coolie wages, and it is also true that the farmers, as 40 per cent of the buying public, help pay the added cost. Is it possible that there is any place in this country unwilling to pay the farmer what it costs him to produce the necessities of life? Who are willing to eat at the expense of some one else?

And here is the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] who has served notice that he intends to thrust a beer amendment into the vitals of the bill to-morrow. Does anyone doubt for a moment the purpose of such an act? It is to kill this bill. The gentleman is less open in his purpose than the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has at least the virtue of being aboveboard, if shortsighted in his argument. I know how hard it will be for them to explain a vote for agriculture and all America to constituents, so many of whom still do not readily understand the English language, and so many others of whom know their dictionaries, but need to learn the language of the entire United States, but I also know that there are many here from the East who are with us for this bill because they know its necessity and its justice.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] argued against this bill yesterday, but in trying to think of what he said without the RECORD before me I found this morning that I could remember nothing.

The gentleman from the farms of Duluth [Mr. LARSON], where the great grain elevators stand along the harbor of the Inland Sea, by denying any crisis in agriculture thus qualifies as an expert in blindness to the facts.

My good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] spoke for the dairymen as against this bill, but in yesterday's mail came a letter from the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, whose membership covers the East, the Middle West, and the South, which reads as follows:

> For some time the members of the executive committee of this federation have been studying the McNary-Haugen bill, and at a meeting to-day of the committee it was unanimously decided that the bill should have the approval and support of this federation.
>
> Without attempting to discuss the bill in detail, we believe that it is the one bill now pending in Congress that promises early assistance to the hard-pressed stock raisers and wheat growers.
>
> We are also convinced that any measure that will be helpful to them will react to the distinct and material help of dairymen.
>
> May we express the hope that you can see your way to give to this bill the utmost limit of your support.
>
> Very truly yours,
>
> THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION,
> By J. D. MILLER, President.

The president who signed that letter lives, not in the West, but in Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen, the real truth about this measure is becoming known, and it is gaining strength with understanding. The 60,000 names shown yesterday by the gentleman from Illinois is only an indication of its general support. On the Committee on Agriculture recommending this bill are men from every section and both parties.

That the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] calls them Bolsheviks has its advantages, because it proves the unfairness of his position. Starting with such a statement, his argument falls flat. He has a bill of his own and it has much merit; even as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is willing to let agriculture suffer that his factory hands may not pay any more for what they eat, he is willing to kill this bill because his own is not in its place. I would apologize to the House for any discourtesy, but this is so vital a time for this country that plain speaking is required.

You talk here about everything but the issue, which is the crisis of agriculture, and this bill which will help it. You try to find some reason for doing nothing rather than what to do. You cry "Keep hands off from agriculture," when you mean keep hands off from privilege. Let us be fair.

If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT], who also has a bill he wishes to substitute, will yield me time, I will guarantee to show the fallacy of his essential arguments against this bill. I can not do it, of course, in the few minutes I have. I can only call attention to the fact that he acknowledged the needs of agriculture, but criticized this measure without saying what should be done instead. He has abstained from printing his speech in the RECORD, although it was Tuesday night when he delivered it. He called this measure unsound, saying it fixes prices, whereas it only adjusts them at a parity. And to-day I have here a bill he has himself introduced to fix an arbitrary price on wheat by law.

Since my election to Congress I have given more time and more thought to agricultural legislation than to all other matters combined, and I have done this because from my touch with the situation I know that the greatest present need of the country is the solution of our farm problems.

The situation of agriculture has been discussed on the floor of this House so repeatedly and at such length that I will not in the short time I have been given repeat in any detail. We now know, and no one questions who is intelligently informed, that a crisis of the most urgent character exists in much of the agricultural industry. One farm authority calls attention to the fact that bankruptcy and mortgage foreclosures have reduced the ownership of the six and one-half million farms of the United States to a point where they are held by less than 3,000,000 owners. In great areas of our country the farmers have produced the last four crops at a loss, and they have been forced to make up these losses by further mortgaging their real estate and personal belongings. Thus, the indebtedness of the American farmer has increased from four to five billions of dollars in the past five years. We know that 1,120,000 people left the farms for the cities in 1922 and that a similar exodus continued in 1923 and is now under way; but with all this we also know that, regardless of anything else, we must have the products of the farms in order that our people may continue to eat. The farmers must continue to farm for us, even if they can not afford to farm for themselves.

That bank and business failures go hand in hand with agricultural depression has attracted the attention of the business and financial leaders. That industrial hardship follows any loss of the purchasing power of the people, and the farm population are some 35 to 40 per cent of our people, has riveted the attention of the manufacturers. In short, the situation is so severe and has reached so far that there has never been a more general recognition of the problem than now exists.

Out of such a necessity has come the most intense study and most honest search for both the causes and a solution. The result of this study has been to make plain that those basic farm products of which an exportable surplus is produced have, through the necessity of selling that surplus abroad, had the price of the entire crop—sold here as well as abroad—fixed adversely by competition with produce of cheaper labor, cheaper transportation, and un-American living standards. All this at a time of foreign demoralization after the war. Meanwhile the cost of production of these crops steadily has risen.

Farm labor, for example, which was $2.23 per day in Ohio in 1913, was $3.50 in 1923. In Washington it had risen from $2.90 to $5.75; in North Dakota from $3.35 to $4.70. The increase varies from 48 per cent to 111 per cent. Similar increases are noted in the costs of transportation, farm machinery, clothing—in fact, everything which enters into cost of farm production. In other words, the farmer must thus pay his costs under American conditions of living under closed markets, and sell his products under European and South American conditions of living. The result is that instead of 5.5 per cent of all bankruptcy cases being farmers, as it was in 1912 to 1914, it was 14.4 per cent in 1922. It ran as high as 32.6 per cent in Nebraska and 78.5 per cent in North Dakota. How could it be otherwise when for the last four years the net loss per acre on wheat in Minnesota and the Dakotas has been from 10 cents to $3.42 per annum, and the losses on the production of other staples has been of a similar nature? In short, an emergency exists in the most basic of our industries. What to do to meet it as far as it can be met by legislation is the problem before us to-day.

Any manufacturer succeeds if he can sell his product at cost of production plus a profit. Any business fails if it can not. If the sale value of the product stays down while the cost of production mounts until it wipes out the profit and eats into the capital, difficulty ensues.

Suppose at that point, while the manufacturer is wrestling with his problem, a farmer should hitch his horse outside, come in and say: "I'll tell you what to do; just change your production to something else. Just quit making monkey wrenches, they get thrown into the machinery anyway, and go to making clothespins—the women must always wash."

If the manufacturer kept civil and did not throw him out, he would explain that that would take time and a change of machinery as well as a different supply of raw material. In the same way the farmers are trying to keep cool while oratorical gentlemen are giving them the same sort of advice, with no greater knowledge of the difficulties and time involved.

Diversification is already under way. It can proceed only as markets will absorb any surplus. In Montana, for example, there was a 40 per cent increase in the number of pounds of butterfat last year, but in spite of that no real gain could be made on the principal of indebtedness. These things take time and have their limitations. A crop planted is not harvested next week, and a hog is not born overnight. Cows cost money; and beyond all that the agricultural emergency exists with regard to many of the products of diversification. No one claims that diversification will solve the immediate crisis. Furthermore, many sections are peculiarly adapted to certain necessary crops, such as hard spring milling wheat, the production of which should not be reduced.

The fundamental fact is that the farmers could meet all of their own difficulties if what they raise could be sold at a reasonable profit. To accomplish that is the purpose of the McNary-Haugen bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VOIGT] uttered more fallacies regarding this bill on Tuesday night than I supposed could be crowded into one hour and a half, but none was greater than his statement that it is unsound to determine the prices of farm products by those of other commodities. Why, gentlemen, the price of every commodity must be related to the price of other things. It is a matter of exchange value, and if its value in relation to other things is too low, it can not continue to be produced. For 10 years before the Great War exchange values were at a fairly normal level; that is, there was a general prosperity, because the farmer and practically all other producers could exchange what they put forth into the markets for fair returns, translated into the prices of what the farmer must buy. To-day, however, while labor has a relative purchasing power of 170 per cent computed on that 10-year relationship as 100 per cent, and the products of industry as a whole have a purchasing power of 159 per cent, agricultural products as a whole have a purchasing power of only 74 per cent. Why? Because by legislation and by organization labor and capital in industry have been protected through the after-the-war crisis in order that foreign competition in neither field shall bring down American standards, but our staple crops still have their prices fixed by competition abroad. The difference between 170 and 159 on the one hand and 74 on the other is the difference between American standards of life and those of Europe and South America.

This situation is ruining agriculture and it must not continue. Either the high standards of labor and industry must likewise be thrown down into foreign competition along with agriculture, which no American thinking man will advocate, or American agriculture must be restored to its place of parity. That is the purpose, and the sole purpose, of this McNary-Haugen bill. It is a sound, constructive bill, because it meets an emergency. It is not proposed as a permanent policy, but recognizes that, just as exceptional measures were required and justified to win the war, necessary steps to win the peace for agriculture as well as for labor and industry are required.

This bill says that only when an emergency exists the corporation formed and headed by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be empowered to buy, at a price of equality with all commodities, for sale abroad at the world prices of the surplus, while the needs of home consumption are met at prices commensurate and on a parity with all other commodities purchased here. It gives the means of protecting the home market against foreign competition by a flexible tariff, and it charges back on the farmer himself the cost of operating the corporation and the losses on foreign sales. That is all it proposes to do, and if you believe that agriculture is entitled to a square deal, this is your opportunity to demonstrate it as a working fact by supporting this measure. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7041) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, had requested a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHORTRIDGE, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. CARAWAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 6721. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, as amended, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6202. An act to amend sections 11 and 12 of the merchant marine act of 1920;

H. R. 5573. An act granting certain public lands to the city of Shreveport, La., for reservoir purposes;

H. R. 8886. An act providing for sundry matters affecting the Military Establishment;

H. R. 731. An act authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims;

H. R. 4835. An act to pay tuition of Indian children in public schools; and

H. R. 6482. An act authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for mail messenger service.

The message also announced that the Senate had receded from its amendment numbered 3 to the bill (H. R. 9192) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the following titles:

H. R. 169. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 73 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved June 12, 1916," and for other purposes;

H. R. 498. An act providing for a recreational area within the Crook National Forest, Ariz.;

H. R. 656. An act to add certain lands to the Plumas and to the Lassen National Forests in California;

H. R. 714. An act to amend section 101 of the Judicial Code;

H. R. 2882. An act to provide for the reservation of certain land in Utah as a school site for Ute Indians;

H. R. 2884. An act providing for the reservation of certain lands in Utah for certain bands of Paiute Indians;

H. R. 3236. An act to regulate the practice of optometry in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 4437. An act to quiet titles to land in the municipality of Flomaton, State of Alabama;

H. R. 4460. An act authorizing payment to certain Red Lake Indians, out of the tribal trust funds, for garden plats surrendered for school-farm use;

H. R. 4481. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to exchange lands formerly used as a site for the Point of Woods Range Lights, Mich., for other lands in the vicinity;

H. R. 1442. An act authorizing issuance of patent to Charles Swanson;

H. R. 1475. An act for the relief of Luke Ratigan;

H. R. 1869. An act for the incorporation of the Grand Army of the Republic;

H. R. 2713. An act to transfer certain lands of the United States from the Rocky Mountain National Park to the Colorado National Forest, Colo.;

H. R. 2875. An act to provide for the addition of the names of certain persons to the final roll of the Indians of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont.;

H. R. 2879. An act to provide for the disposal of homestead allotments of deceased allottees within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, Mont.;

H. R. 4981. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant permission to the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to widen Haines Street in front of the national cemetery, Philadelphia, Pa.;

H. R. 5136. An act for the relief of Eva B. Sharon;

H. R. 5169. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Johann Jacob Lutsch;

H. R. 5218. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh Coal, Land & Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at or near Nolan, in Mingo County, W. Va., to the Kentucky side, in Pike County, Ky.;

H. R. 5416. An act to authorize the setting aside of certain tribal lands within the Quinaielt Indian Reservation, in Washington, for lighthouse purposes;

H. R. 6628. An act to change the name of Jewett Street west of Wisconsin Avenue to Cathedral Avenue;

H. R. 6857. An act to provide for the addition of the names of Chester Calf and Crooked Nose Woman to the final roll of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, Seger jurisdiction, Oklahoma;

H. R. 7109. An act to authorize acquisition of unreserved public lands in the Columbia or Moses Reservation, State of Washington, under acts of March 28, 1912, and March 3, 1877, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7113. An act to establish a dairy bureau in the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7500. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Adger, Ada County, Idaho, for railroad purposes; and

H. R. 8050. An act to detach Reagan County, in the State of Texas, from the El Paso division of the western judicial district of Texas and attach said county to the San Angelo division of the northern judicial district of said State.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 8070) authorizing preliminary examinations and surveys of sundry streams with a view to the control of their floods, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 946) for the relief of Amy L. Fallon, mother of Lieut. Henry N. Fallon, retired.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1725. An act for the relief of Ruble M. Mosley;

S. 2559. An act to establish an Alaska game commission to protect game animals, land fur-bearing animals, and birds in Alaska, and for other purposes;

S. 3181. An act to authorize an appropriation to enable the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau to provide additional hospital facilities;

S. 3187. An act granting permission to certain officers and men of the military forces of the United States to accept various decorations bestowed in recognition of services to the allied cause;

S. 3220. An act authorizing the health officer of the District of Columbia to issue a permit for the removal of the remains of the late George Mauger Burklin and the remains of the late Anton Lerch Burklin from Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia, to Fort Lincoln Cemetery, Prince Georges County, Md.;

S. 3276. An act authorizing the sale of real property no longer required for military purposes;

S. 3111. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Stockbridge Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 3093. An act granting certain public lands to the city of Phoenix, Ariz., for municipal, park, and other purposes;

S. 2979. An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws so as to allow certain credit, in lieu of permanent improvements, for the period of enlistment to soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army, and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States;

S. 2834. An act relating to the American Academy in Rome;

S. 2836. An act relating to the deposit of funds available for maintenance of reclamation projects;

S. 2719. An act to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the British Government on account of losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Baron Berwick as the result of a collision between that vessel and the U. S. S. Iroquois (now Freedom) and a further collision with the U. S. destroyer Truxtun;

S. 2519. An act to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Carol E. Reeves;

S. 2518. An act for the relief of Austin G. Tainter;

S. 2434. An act for the purchase of the Oldroyd collection of Lincoln relics;

S. 2178. An act to relieve United States district judges from signing an order admitting, denying, or dismissing each petition for naturalization;

S. 2124. An act for the relief of Perley Morse & Co.;

S. 1650. An act for the relief of William F. Brockschmidt;

S. 1051. An act to authorize and provide for the payment of the amounts expended in the construction of hangars and the maintenance of flying fields for the use of the Air Mail Service of the Post Office Department;

S. 863. An act for the protection of persons employed on railway baggage cars and railway express and baggage cars, and for other purposes;

S. 697. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands on Crooked and Pickerel Lakes, Mich., and for other purposes;

S. 483. An act to correct the status of certain commissioned officers of the Navy appointed thereto pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920;

S. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission for the purpose of erecting in Potomac Park, in the District of Columbia, a memorial to those members of the armed forces of the United States from the District of Columbia who served in the Great War;

S. J. Res. 85. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the preparation and completion of plans for the comprehensive observance of that greatest of all historic events, the bicentennial of the birthday of George Washington;

S. J. Res. 124. Joint resolution to provide for the posthumous appointment to commissioned grades of certain enlisted men and the posthumous promotion of certain commissioned officers;

S. 3263. An act to provide for the inspection of the battle fields in and around Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania Court House, Va.;

S. 3249. An act granting the consent of Congress to the construction of a bridge across the Niagara River and Black Rock Canal;

S. 3244. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Hinds County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Pearl River in the State of Mississippi;

S. 3241. An act for the relief of soldiers who were discharged from the Army during the World War because of misrepresentation of age;

S. 3171. An act for the relief of sufferers from earthquake in Japan;

S. 3170. An act for the relief of Edgar William Miller;

S. 3077. An act to amend the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, creating the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 833. An act for the relief of Emma La Mee;

S. 3024. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands within Rio Arriba and Taos Counties, N. Mex., known as the Las Trampas grant, by exchanging therefor timber, within the exterior boundaries of any national forest situated in the State of New Mexico;

S. 3047. An act authorizing joint investigations by the United States Geological Survey and the Bureau of Soils of the United States Department of Agriculture to determine the location and extent of potash deposits or occurrences in the United States and improved methods of recovering potash therefrom;

S. 3026. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the city of Corinth, Miss., to construct, operate, and maintain water and sewer mains under and along the Government approach roadway to the Corinth National Cemetery;

S. 3016. An act to enable the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway Commission to improve the parkway entrance;

S. 2799. An act to provide for quarters, fuel, and light for employees of the Indian field service;

S. 2761. An act to authorize the withdrawal of lands for the protection of antelope and other game animals and birds;

S. 2699. An act to amend an act creating the Custer State park game sanctuary in the State of South Dakota;

S. 2232. An act to amend section 2 of the act approved February 15, 1893, entitled "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the marine hospital service";

S. 2172. An act to amend section 1 of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 750), and to provide fees for executing applications for passports and for issuing the same;

S. 2087. An act for the relief of Laura C., Ida E., Lulu P., and Esther P. Peterson;

S. 1987. An act accepting certain tracts of land in the city of Medford, Jackson County, Oreg.;

S. 1656. An act granting the consent and approval of Congress to the La Plata River compact;

S. 1607. An act for the relief of Nellie Kildee;

S. 1528. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to accept the fee-simple title to a certain tract of land adjoining the Hot Springs National Park, Ark., donated to the United States of America for use in connection with Hot Springs National Park;

S. 1042. An act to provide for the establishment of a probation system in the United States courts, except in the District of Columbia;

S. 1040. An act for the relief of the owners of the New York Sanitary Utilization Co. scow No. 14;

S. 1039. An act for the relief of the owner of the scow W. T. C. No. 35;

S. 1038. An act for the relief of the Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal;

S. 862. An act amending section 1 of the interstate commerce act;

S. 823. An act to authorize the acceptance of title to forest lands in the State of Florida and to create national forests therefrom, and for other purposes;

S. 785. An act for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.;

S. 367. An act for the relief of James W. Laxson;

S. 51. An act for the relief of the owner of the schooner Itasca and her master and crew;

S. 1574. An act for the relief of Alice E. O'Neil;

S. J. Res. 115. Joint resolution to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind; and

S. J. Res. 127. Joint resolution to provide that the powers and duties conferred upon the Governor of Alaska under existing law for the protection of wild game animals and wild birds in Alaska be transferred to and be exercised by the Secretary of Agriculture.

M'NARY-HAUGEN BILL

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, is this legislation now necessary? I think it will need no argument upon my part to convince this House that the condition of the farmer is desperate. Surely if there is any possible way for this Government to help him, that way ought to be found. One-fourth of all our farmers have either actually gone into bankruptcy or are facing it. The rest of them are not more than breaking even. If some relief is not forthcoming thousands of farmers will be sold out and many country banks which are now considered solvent will soon close their doors.

